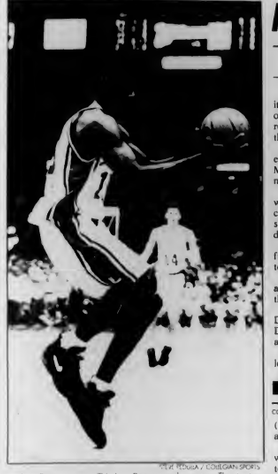
"I think Rich really played tough for us, and he gave us a good effort," said Mallen.

"We worked hard," said Moriarty. "Our whole season has been geared around this game. The whole team worked for 60 minutes.



"I think this will serve to keep us hungry. During the summer when we don't feel like running that extra mile or lifting weights we'll think of this."

The loss gave the Minutemen a taste of what they can expect in the future as they head in to Hockey East next season.

"Welcome to Hockey East," said Mallen. "It's going to be a battle every night."

A taste of Hockey East for UMass

By Bill Balfour
COLLEGIAN SPORTS

Back in October, the Massachusetts hockey team lost its season–opening game to Merrimack College by a score of 8– 2. For Massachusetts, the game symbolized the re–birth of a program and served as a measure of what the team could expect from Division I hockey.

Yesterday afternoon, Massachusetts got its long awaited re–match with Merrimack and despite a 4–1 loss, the Minutemen showed just how far they had come since that night in October.

For 60 minutes, Massachusetts skated stride–for–stride with Merrimack and with a few breaks may have had a chance at victory. Massachusetts Coach Joe Mallen considered the game to be a moral victory for his team despite the loss.

"I think it was a moral victory," Mallen said. "For a first year program we went out and competed with a team that just beat Boston College twice."

Yesterday's game had the look of a Division I contest, a fact that buried some worries that Mallen had earlier in the season.

"I was worried going into the season about playing a Division I team," Mallen said. "If that looked like a Division I game that means we could have won the game as well as lost it."

The improvement in the play of Massachusetts was not lost on Merrimack Coach Ron Anderson.

"They're going to be a good team," Anderson said. "They're a whole different team then they were four months ago."

Anderson said the biggest difference in Massachusetts since October is the experience the players show on the ice.

"The night at our place they were sewing the names on the shirts," Anderson said. "Now they are a team."

Anderson knows about coaching a team that is thrown into the fire. In 1989, Merrimack College made the jump to Hockey East after being one of the nations best independent teams.

With two consecutive strong showings against Division I opponents, the Massachusetts players realize they are a Division I team.

"We still have a long way to go but it just showed us that we had made a big step forward from the beginning of the year," Massachusetts defenseman Rich Alger said.

The season opened with Merrimack and as the schedule approaches its finish, the second game with the Warriors has proven to be a barometer for the future of Massachusetts hockey.

"We've made progress in every area from the forwards to the defense to the goaltending," Mallen said. "I think its improved."

Mallen said yesterday's game accomplished two things Massachusetts can use in the future.

"It shows us we still have a long way to go but also gives us a lot of promise for the future," Mallen said. "Hopefully we can make that next step up quicker than we expected."

(UNC, Kansas and Kentucky), "TV" averaged 27 points and 11 boards per Vitale game.

"Before the game, he said, 'Remember when I said you were scared before the Carolina game, are you scared tonight, big guy?', I said 'Coach, please. What are you talking about?'"

"He said, 'Are you going to be the star out there tonight?' I said, 'You bet. No doubt about it.'"

"He sees me and he goes nuts," joked Jim O'Connell, a well–respected college basketball writer from the Associated Press.

Consider that Roe played arguably his best games of the year in front of Dean Smith from Carolina, Roy Williams from Kansas and Rick Pitino from Kentucky — three coaches who are among the top five on anyone's list.

"He's a special, special basketball player," Pitino said. "Lou Roe's a great talent. He's so tough on the offensive glass. If he improves his outside game, he could play at the next level."

Consider that Roe had his monster game yesterday in front of a crowd bursting at the seams with pro scouts with teams like the Washington Bullets, Golden State Warriors, San Antonio Spurs and Milwaukee Bucks represented at the contest.

Most importantly, consider that Roe has his best games when he knows his team needs him the most. The fact of the matter is that Massachusetts doesn't have a prayer against the Carolinas, the Kansas's and Kentuckys if Roe has an off or even average day.

"Big games when we need it the most, I try to step up my level of play," said Roe. "I try to dominate both offensively and defensively.

"I felt pretty good at the shoot–around this morning so I kind of had a feeling I was going to have a good game. I was hot."

"He was unbelievable," said Massachusetts Coach John Calipari. "He's as good as there is. If he can sustain it and dominate against all the other teams he's capable of dominating, he can be one of the top five or six players in the country. He was a man today."

Yes, "TV" was the man yesterday.

Carroll, UMass beat URI WRams

By Michael Morrissey
COLLEGIAN SPORTS

A trio of freshman players snatched victory from defeat last Saturday night as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team outlasted Rhode Island in Kingston, 85–80 in double overtime.

Freshman Octavia Thomas sent the game into overtime by catching a three–quarter court inbounds pass from Beth Kuzmeski with two seconds left and hitting a basket as time expired, tying the game at 65.

It was Crystal Carroll and Kuzmeski who did the damage in the extra session, though. Carroll played 46 of a possible 50 minutes, scored a career–high 23 points and hit a number of key free throws in both OTs.

Kuzmeski, meanwhile, went from goat to heroine, connecting with Thomas in regulation and icing the game in double OT with two free throws which put Massachusetts ahead, 84–80. Prior to the assist, Kuzmeski threw the ball away on the Minutewomen's second to last possession. Her play in overtime won the game for the Minutewomen, however.

Rebecca Bright paced URI with 21 points, but fouled out at the end of the game.

UMass (10–7) improves to 4–3 in the conference, while the WRams fall to 4–5 in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen nailed the coffin shut with 13 seconds left when Kuzmeski was perfect on both ends of her one– and–one from the line. Carroll had the final point on a free throw with two seconds left.

Massachusetts appeared to have the upper hand in the first overtime when Carroll hit two foul shots to give the team a 72–69 advantage. Rhode Island answered with a bucket, but Carroll hit a 12–footer with 13 seconds left, only to have Dayna Smith of Rhode Island bury a trey to tie the game, 74–74.

Carroll had nine rebounds for Massachusetts while Thomas recorded her sixth consecutive double–double with 20 points and 10 rebounds. Thomas has 11 double–doubles this season.

The Minutewomen return to action on Wednesday, Feb. 9 when they host St. Joseph's in a 7 p.m. game at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Performance artist explores sexuality

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Craig Hickman, skin & ornaments
Hampden Theater
February 5, 1994

From his opening monologue about the birth of his libido to his final, high-heeled strut across the small stage in Hampden Theater, performance artist Craig Hickman presented a candid account of one man's journey through homosexuality.

Heralded as an activist, actor, educator, journalist, poet and award-winning short story writer, Hickman came to the University of Massachusetts as part of the Program for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Concerns Cafe Night.

His 90-minute show was comprised of four acts in which Hickman adapted many mannerisms and voices to portray the coming of age of a homosexual man and the evolution of the gay culture in this country.

By telling the story of one gay man's experiences (a man who we come to know is probably very much the artist himself), Hickman portrays the struggles and blissful victories of searching for and finding different outlets for his desire for sexual expression and fulfillment.

In part one of skin & ornaments, Hickman's tone is that of a child who proudly discovers his sexuality with the help of "school boys" (the name of one skit). He recounts experimentation with a particular boy, Darren, and humorously notes "how appropriate" a first-time excursion with Darren occurred in a coat closet.

The tail-end of this first segment was "Juneau park," and portrayed a time period which reflected both sexual liberation and danger, marked by Hickman's soothing tone and cries of delight, and later by his betrayed, frightened eyes.

Hickman's juneau park was the sight at which his adolescent sexual fantasies became reality, where free love took on a whole new meaning for the local gay population, manifesting itself in afternoon orgies, shaded by the protective branches of park trees.

COURTESY CRAIG BAILEY
Performance artist Craig Hickman

His descriptive, graphic details of these sexual endeavors were laced with recreated delight, and sharply contrasted Hickman's most memorable experience at juneau park, when he was raped by a stranger in a van, parked on the outskirts of the area.

The artist's reenactment of the rape was as heart-felt as his previous recollection of ecstasy, as Hickman reminded the audience of the dangerous dance power and sexuality performed in all sexual relationships.

Throughout the performance, Hickman's presentation of the role of sexuality in maintaining individual strength dictated that sexual pride was the key to power. Acceptance of his homosexuality was never in question; rather, Hickman's focus was finding the best, safest, most satisfying way in which to express himself and fulfill his sexual desire in a society that was evolving none-too-quickly to allow him to do so.

Furthermore, the artist emphasized the homosexual experience through the eyes of a black man, explaining the early lack of outlets for blacks in the gay community.

Hickman's monologue included pieces like "childless mother" and "daddy's boy" which portrayed instability backed by irrevocable underlying love in his relationship with his parents. The picture he painted of these relationships might be painted by any one of us, as Hickman explores the need to make his parents proud while maintaining his own opinions and confidence in his choices.

The monologue was enhanced by dance, poetry and song performed by Hickman. Pieces like "Strange Fruit" and "Round Midnight" were sexy, swanky tunes which he sang with soul.

Likewise, costume changes ranging from sweats, to a pink ruffled dress to nothing at all helped to make Hickman's sexual exploration tangible to the audience.

Woven with eroticism, humor, pride, recalled pain and relentless spirituality, Hickman's performance provided a passionate, varied glimpse at the one homosexual's search for fulfillment, fun and self-discovery.

Pearl Street club hosts yeP! show

yeP!
Pearl Street
February 2, 1994

Last Thursday night, local Valley favorites yeP! graced the stage at Pearl Street with their eccentric style and groovy tunes in a premiere performance at the Northampton club.

Opening up for the winner of last year's Northeast Battle of the Bands was Hampshire College's Maya. The five piece ensemble that included bongos and a sax had a unique sound that was influenced by funk, blues and jazz riffs.

Maya kept the crowd dancing with upbeat original songs like "To the Bone" and "Booty Tooty" that were dressed up by snazzy guitar riffs and sax solos.

Main attraction yeP! began their set with a funky jam that led into "Man for the Job," a tune filled with crashing chords and smooth vocals.

"Boogie Woogie Gator," a song that mixed the sounds of a '50s sock hop with more recent Pacman-fever nostalgia, invited audiences to participate by (believe it or not) mamboing with squeezable rubber alligators. The song was redeemed, however, by a cool a capella ending.

Some other noteworthy selections included a short song reminiscent of the '70s entitled "Mr. Freezy" that was dedicated to ice cream. Also of note was "Bath Tub Gin Phish," a lively acoustic

Foss teams up with sax quartet

Lukas Foss and The Amherst Sax Quartet
Bowker Auditorium
February 6, 1994

The Amherst Sax Quartet was in town for a performance yesterday of over two hours of music that explored styles of music ranging from baroque, classical, tango and ragtime.

The quartet, or "Bad Boys of Sax," as they are known, consists of Salvatore Andolina on soprano, Russell Carere on alto, Stephen Rosenthal on tenor and Harry Fackelman on baritone. The quartet originated in Buffalo, N.Y. and is now in its fifteenth season of performing.

While in Buffalo, the quartet began a relationship with Lukas Foss. Foss is a composer, conductor and pianist who has a long list of accomplishments, a few of which include publishing over 100 works, the earliest of which were published when Foss was only 15-years-old.

Foss was at one time the director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, and is currently director of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Orchestra.

Foss joined the quartet on stage at the end of the first half on piano for Mozart's Quintet for Piano and Winds K. 452, and was the composer of the first selection of the second half of the performance entitled "Saxophone Quartet," a piece which he wrote especially for the Amherst Sax Quartet.

Before and throughout the performance the audience was kept laughing by Stephen Rosenthal's quirky sense of humor. Rosenthal reminded the audience to only open noisy candy wrappers during the quiet movements, and that because of the enormous amount of concentration needed to perform, the audience should refrain from breathing for the duration of the show.

While in town on Friday, the quartet held a series of master classes with three sax quartets from the Music Department in which each quartet was able to

Trash on TV is plentiful

Do you ever flip through the channels and see a program that is so terrible, uninteresting or otherwise unappealing that you cannot think of a single viewer in America who would tune into the show? This has happened to me on several occasions. Here are a few of my findings.

One weekend several months ago I was sprawled on my couch at home when I came across a most interesting program. While aerobic-pop music played, a video camera followed the path of a road, probably trying to simulate a bicycle ride. Is there anyone out there who actually uses this program as a supplement to their exer-cycle riding? I hope not. If you're so lazy that your idea of exercise is peddling away on a toy bicycle while watching video footage of the outdoors, just stay in bed. Or, do as I did and lay on the couch and imagine yourself riding a real bike.

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

Two words: CSPAN II. Do we need this? I can see the appeal of the original channel. It is actually pretty cool to tune in and see congress in session once in a while. But there comes a time when you have to leave well enough alone. What's next? "Hillary Cam?" "The Chelsea Clinton Show?" Socks the Cat cartoons? "The Al Gore Comedy Hour?" I think I've made my point. But honestly, as long as Chevy Chase doesn't come back, we're all set.

A few questions about "Designing Women." Is this show funny? Do we need eight opportunities a night to see this ridiculous mess? Don't these people yell at each other just a bit too often for no reason at all? I have never seen an entire episode of this show and never will. But someone up there wants me to, because it's on my television every time I turn it on between the hours of 5 p.m. and 2 a.m. Not my TV at UMass, my TV at home, where they have real cable.

I hate golf. If that makes you angry, tough. It looks fun to play, but if I wanted to watch a sport so utterly boring, I would turn off the television and watch my mother knit. Auto racing is another sport that does not deserve television coverage. If I wanted to watch a sport so utterly boring, I would look out the window and watch my brother mow the lawn. And no, I'm not lazy.

Golf and auto racing are bad, but the absolute worst sport on television is bowling. Maybe I'm ignorant, so write in and tell me if I'm missing something. It seems to me that after devoting years of practice to rolling a ball at a bunch of pins, these guys should be able to bowl a perfect game every time. Too much to ask? I don't think so. The distance from the bowler to the pins does not change. The setup of the pins does not change. The lane is flat. The ball is big and heavy. What's the problem? If they really wanted to make the sport interesting, they should make these guys drink in between turns. Then maybe I'd tune in.

Two more words: Home Shopping. I'll never understand this one. I guess someone figured that K-Tel records and "The Clapper" were doing great business over the television, so why not devote an entire channel to selling worthless crap to lonely and lazy TV watchers? Or better yet, three channels! If your TV is like mine, channels 14-16 are all home shopping networks. I have a feature on my TV with which you can delete channels so that when you flip through, you can skip all the crap. I have a feeling that the creation of home shopping channels had something to do with this invention.

One last crack before I pack it in for the week: What's the story with MTV's "Lip Service?" If I wanted to watch a bunch of teenaged girls make asses out of themselves in front of a large groups of people, I'd go to my brother's high school talent show. At least then I'd have a shot at getting a date.

All–senior honor band pleases

By ASHLEY E. VONDRASEK
Collegian Correspondent

1994 All-Senior Honor Band
Fine Arts Center
February 5, 1994

Over 100 students performed in the Ninth Annual All– Senior Honor Band concert on Sat. Feb. 5, at 7 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The purpose of this free, approximately hour–long concert was to honor talented high school senior musicians.

The performing students were recommended by their high school band conductors to audition for the event. The high school seniors chosen to perform came from Massachusetts, as well as Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, New Jersey and New York.

The band not only performed a total of five pieces that one might hear at a professional orchestra concert, but they also performed exceptionally well, on which one of the conductors made a point to comment to the audience.

Pieces by Robert Jager, Gustav Mahler, Ralph Vaughan Williams, Pierre La Plante and Gustav Holst were played. Upon entering the stage for the first time, each conductor was introduced to the audience by an announcer.

George Parks, the director of the Minuteman Marching Band at the University of Massachusetts and Ray Cramer, the director of bands at the University of Indiana were both conductors. A third conductor, Walter Chestnut, who was in a wheelchair also conducted the band.

Chestnut received a standing ovation upon completing his piece and proudly stood from his wheelchair to show his appreciation. The announcer informed the audience of a time when doctors told the conductor he would never be able to walk or move his arms again, after having suffered from a severed disc.

At the end of the performance approximately 20 outstanding musicians were recognized with certificates for their accomplishments during the performance. These musicians arrived on campus and were selected to play within a matter of hours (as were the other band members), and were rewarded for their excellent professional performing capabilities under such pressure and with strict time restraints.

Disappointingly, not many people attended this special event. The audience seemed to consist of mostly family, friends and volunteers who helped make this concert possible.

This event is bound to take place again next year and it just might be worth your while to take the opportunity to go and see outstanding high school seniors show their talent.

perform for, and later be critiqued by the quartet.

Rosenthal greeted the audience by announcing that the quartets from UMass were some of the finest that they have ever seen.

Although the thought of saxophones in a chamber music setting may have seemed strange to some, any doubts were quickly dismissed only moments after the quartet took the stage. Lovers of the standard style of wind chamber music were not disappointed. The quartet demonstrated that the homogeneous power, as well as the weaving of complex patterns and floating melodies between the different registers common to standard wind chamber music, could indeed be captured by four saxes, while also establishing its own identity and voice in the process.

collage interjected with colorful quotes from MTV's ever–popular, disgustingly lovable "Beavis and Butthead" and the cartoon that at one time was forever–quoted, "Ren and Stimpy."

The hiatus of the performance was constituted by yep!'s newest stage prop — television monitors. During "Haunted House" (basically an acoustical piece tinged with weird background noise and occasionally punctuated with an inspiring "wakka wakka"), the monitors displayed the band's "Okay" hand symbol against a psychedelic background that metamorphosed throughout the entire song.

This apparently was suppose to give the song a more hypnotic feeling, along with the black cape and "Cat in the Hat" chapeau the bassist sported.

Of course the night would not be complete without "Mushrooms and Fire Balls," yep!'s famous rendition of the Super Mario Brothers' theme and the band's older pieces, "Willow" and "Brooklyn."

It is safe to say that yep! managed to provide the evening's audience with an interesting and definitely off–beat menagerie of musical mixes that boarded on the exotic.

They charmed onlookers with their renowned musical mastery, and still somehow managed to keep some of us guessing what in the world they would come up with next.

Police uptown Saturday night

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Saturday night was an extremely busy one for the Amherst police department, the State Police and the University of Massachusetts Police.

All three departments were needed to break up more than a dozen fights that took place in front of North Pleasant Street bars Delano's and Time Out at approximately 12:20 a.m.

More than 250 people watched as the numerous brawls resulted in nine arrests. A lieutenant of the Amherst Police Department said the fights originally started in the bars and were then pushed into the streets.

"One fight began and then escalated into many others. We then had to call in the UMass police and the state police. It took over an hour to cool the area down," the lieutenant said.

The fight was able to be taken under control with the help of four UMass police cruisers, five Amherst police officers and two state police cruisers.

Richard D. Schragger, 20, of Amherst, Thomas L. Roberts, 23, of Quincy, and Paul M. Mertz, 21, of Lawrence, were all arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

Also arrested and charged with disorderly conduct were Christopher Brown, 20, of Westport, Peter Jaffe, 21, of Amherst, Thomas Cole, 20, of Marlboro and Todd Palmisano, 25, of Belchertown.

UMass student Shawn Alarie, of Amherst, is being charged with mayhem and disorderly conduct. Police said 21–year–old Alarie bit a man's nose while he was in handcuffs.

Police also said Daniel O'Malley, 21, of Amherst, whose nose was bitten, is being charged with disorderly conduct as well as assault and battery for biting Alarie on the chest. O'Malley also had a broken hand.

Both O'Malley and Alarie were brought to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. Alarie had 10 stitches on his face and seven bites on his upper chest. He also had several cuts on his hands.

All of the people arrested were arraigned yesterday. A pre– trial hearing will be on April 7.

Last night at 6:15 p.m. in the Bangs Community Center, police requested at least three to six more officers at the Board of Selectmen's meeting. Right now there are 31 officers in the department.

Budget for FY '95 cuts spending

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton sent Congress a $1.52 trillion no–frills budget Monday, declaring cuts in hundreds of programs would achieve a deficit–reduction record unequaled since Harry Truman and show the world "we mean business."

Clinton's federal spending plan for 1995 includes no new general tax increases, but it does propose more than tripling the cigarette tax to more than 99 cents a pack to help finance universal health care and it puts forward almost three dozen fee increases.

To find the money for expanding Head Start, putting 100,000 more police officers on the streets and increasing government support for the high–tech jobs of tomorrow, Clinton asked lawmakers to make cuts large and small.

He wants Congress to slash operating support for urban mass transit by 25 percent, cut home heating subsidies in half and eliminate export subsidies going to oil seed farmers.

Liberals complained the budget cuts would hurt the poor. Conservatives said the president virtually ignored the cost of putting into effect his two most important imperatives — health care and welfare reform.

Clinton, speaking to business executives in Houston, dismissed the criticism, saying his new budget showed the world that "we mean business" about cutting the deficit. Still, he conceded his plan would face a difficult time in Congress.

"It's the toughest budget on spending cuts that Congress has yet seen," Clinton said. But he also said Congress could not waver from the deficit plan that he initiated last year and that he said has brought prosperity by lowering interest rates.

Clinton's 1995 budget contained little in new initiatives, basically keeping faith with last year's five–year deficit reduction program that had boosted the gasoline tax and raised taxes on the wealthy while restraining government spending.

For the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, Clinton proposed spending $34.3 billion more than this year. That would push the budget to a record level, as always. All of the increase reflected higher spending on mandatory programs such as Social Security and interest payments on the national debt.

Spending on the one–third of the budget affected by annual appropriations would actually decline by $7.7 billion below the current level, something that has not happened for a quarter of a century.

Housing Services awaits SGA audit

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Housing Services at the University of Massachusetts makes every effort to meet the needs of students, the director of Housing Services said in response to charges made by the leadership of the Student Government Association last week that Housing Services is not being accountable.

Last Wednesday at the SGA meeting, Student Trustee Al Lizana said he is considering an audit of Housing Services because of student's complaints about its performance. But Director of Housing Services Chika Nnamani said that a survey conducted last November showed most students are happy about the performance of Housing Services.

"A Project Pulse survey showed that 75 percent of students are satisfied with Housing Services," Nnamani said.

Nnamani said the $70 increase in the cost of living in the dormitories next semester is necessary because Housing Services relies on outside sources to do much of its work, and the cost of these services is increasing.

"The $70 increase is required to maintain the level of services we are currently providing," Nnamani said. "We depend on a lot of outside services and the cost of these services is going up all over the country. The cost of roofing a building next year is going to be higher than the current level of cost."

Nnamani said that despite next year's increase, UMass has the cheapest residence halls of any college of comparable size in the northeast. The cost of living in the dormitories at UMass is $2,116 per year, as compared to $2,872 at the University of Rhode Island and $3,680 at Boston College.

Nnamani refuted the claim that Housing Services was charging $85 for its Residential Alcohol Program (REAP) last year. He also said he eliminated the fee at the beginning of the fall semester.

"The charge for REAP was $50, but I abolished the fee when I came here last fall because I felt we could still achieve the same results without a punitive financial assessment to the students," he said. "The money was used to fund alcohol awareness posters we put in the residence halls."

Nnamani also said the Housing Services Review Committee did a study of Housing Services last spring.

He said Housing Services is now looking into specific ways of implementing the suggestions the study made.

"I don't know what another audit is supposed to accomplish," he said.

A question of cleanliness

Students and staff debate sanitization of the D.C.s

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

Editor's note:This is the second in a two–part series concerning the residential dining commons.

Some residents of the Southwest residential area say the dining commons should be more sanitized, while others feel that it's as good as it's going to get.

Diana Stavaridis, a first–year student with an undeclared major, said she feels the dining commons are as clean as can be expected. It must be very hard to clean after so many students, Stavaridis said.

"What makes me very upset is when students do not clean up after themselves," Stavaridis said. "It's not very hard to bus your own tray."

According to Shirley Stafford, the area manager of the Southwest Dining Commons, the Environment and Health/Safety Inspectors come unannounced at least four to five times a month.

Since Stafford is concerned with the people and the overall operation, she takes health and sanitation seriously.

The inspectors check the temperatures of the refrigerators, freezers, main dishes and the salad bars. If, for instance, the salad bar was not the correct temperature, the food would immediately be replaced, Stafford said.

Checking the temperature gauges is important because germs will develop on the food if the temperature is incorrect.

"If a temperature chart is not on my desk after each mealtime, it's up to me to figure out why," Stafford said.

According to Brian DeLuca, a sophomore business major, the dining commons are clean from what he can see, although he wonders what goes on behind the scenes.

"One time I found a hair in my spaghetti which was really gross, but then again the hair could have been mine," DeLuca said.

According to the sanitation code, the inspectors check the workers to see if they are wearing gloves, hair nets and hats. If a violation is issued, a full written report is given by the inspectors and is then distributed among the management, Stafford said.

In regard to sanitation, the workers only have an hour and a half to clean the dining commons between meals. The kitchen floors are cleaned after dinner because the workers do not have the time, Stafford said.

Approximately 12 student workers clean during the day and janitors clean during the night. Stafford said there are a couple of large washing machines that maintenance checks every 30 days. The silverware is pre–soaked and then scrubbed if necessary.

According to Justin Wilds, a first year student who works as a dish washer at the Hampshire Dining Commons, the utensils could be cleaned much better than they are.

Career center sponsors job fair

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

At a time when job opportunities seem impossible to find, employers are coming to the Career Fair in search of graduating seniors.

The Annual Career Fair will fill the Campus Center Auditorium on Wednesday, Feb. 9 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., with employers looking for graduating students to fill job positions.

"This year there will be 77 employers in attendance, covering every square inch of the Campus Center Auditorium and some just outside," said Joan Stoia, director of the Mather Career Center.

"About 2000 students attend the Career Fair," Stoia said. "This year it will be the largest ever."

The fair is especially important for seniors and graduate students who are looking for permanent jobs.

"The purpose of the fair is for graduating students to get the opportunity to meet employers," Stoia said. "Non– graduating students are also welcome to find out what jobs are out there."

The Career Fair will bring the employers to the students, instead of the students going to the employers. It gives seniors and alumni the chance to talk to employers.

"Part of the dilema we see is that students who began college at the depth of the recession tend to think that there are no jobs, and there are," Stoia said.

The Career Center will be demonstating the computerized Resume Expert Job/Employee Matching System at the Fair.

"We can give employers student resumes on file immediately through the computer," Stoia said.

The Resume Expert software package can be purchased from the Career Center for $20. The software will help employers find qualified students for job positions.

"If an employer calls up UMass looking for students' resumes and we can't give them out right away, they will just go to another college," Stoia said. "The faster we can give the employers information, the more competitive students will be."

The Resume Expert Job/Employee Matching System also gives employers the chance to see more information about the student. The resumes include a student's job experience, not just their academic work.

"It helps match students to the right positions,"

Schools celebrate diversity

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Schools across the nation celebrated the African–American head in yesterday to promote multi–cultural awareness. The event was designed by the Black Caucus of the National Council of Teachers of English to increase cultural understanding, diversity and to coincide with national Black History Month.

Mark's Meadow school, a fully equipped kindergarten through sixth grade lab school within the University of Massachusetts, celebrated the day for the second year. More than 350 students, teachers and community members attended. It was expected that over 800,000 individuals participated nationally.

Mark's Meadow has been serving North Amherst for 28 years and according to Lenore Carlisle, the interim principal, the Read in fit with their multi–cultural curriculum.

"Kids will emerge from this school knowing that the people here valued and respected diversity," said Carlisle.

The day focused on African–American culture and elementary students were given presentations from community members that included Judge James Falson from Northampton District Court and Arlene Cash, director of admissions at UMass. UMass students from the School of Education, Communications and Art department volunteered in the day's events.

Students watched films on African countries and traditions, and Edward Wright, a Vietnam veteran who has written a book on his experiences, spoke of his life as an African– American in the war.

Many of the participants returned again to volunteer for the event because they were so moved by the logistics of the day.

"It was great," said Carlisle. "The students were mesmerized." Carlisle said that in the spring, the school has a multi–cultural fair that presents diverse cultures that represents a majority of its students.

Later in the day, the students went into the auditorium and heard the Mark's Meadow Junior High choir sing spirituals and South African freedom songs. Also, a group of students performed African dances in front of the entire student body.

Carlisle said the school plans to partake in the event next year as well.

Sue Woodfork, the librarian for the Mark Meadow's school, spearheaded the project. According to Carlisle, Woodfork is "culturally aware" and promotes multiculturalism through the read–in and through the types of books she brings to the students.

"It was a wonderful day – the kind of day you wish would never end," said Carlisle. "But the day belongs to the staff. I was not responsible for any of this."

Stoia said. "The employers will have more information to look at."

The fair is the Career Center's biggest event of the year. The Center's purpose is to help get students jobs.

"The Career Center helps students get jobs at a higher rate than non-users," said Stoia. "We have done surveys that prove it."

"If it wasn't for the Career Center I'd still be working at Domino's," said Rob Wilson, who graduated in 1992 and is now a mechanical engineer.

America beats Brits again

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Led by Mayor Mary Ford, a team of throwers from this Massachusetts city posted their first victory, 13–3, over Northampton, England, in the 13th annual darts match between the two cities.

Ford set the tone for Sunday's match, conducted via a telephone hookup from pubs in both cities by hosting her British counterpart, Anthia Howes, 107–101.

"This is something I'd love to do every Saturday night,' said Ford.

Clinton threatens Serbs

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration called on its allies Monday to protect the citizens of Sarajevo by threatening air strikes if Bosnian Serbs continue their attacks.

Top policy advisers meeting Monday night put together "a package" of options that includes warning Bosnian Serbs to remove their artillery from the hills around the capital or risk having them bombed by NATO forces, a senior administration official told the Associated Press.

The idea originated with France and has strong U.S. support, but still requires the approval of the president, who was being briefed by his National Security Adviser Anthony Lake, the official said.

"We're lining up with the French," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At the 2 1/2-hour meeting, the policy advisers worked on and made some modifications to proposals presented by Secretary of State Warren Christopher, while calling also for more vigorous diplomatic effort to end the fighting, the official said.

The aim is to end the siege of the Bosnian capital, where 68 civilians were killed and some 200 injured in a mortar attack on a Muslim marketplace on Saturday.

It would require a change of heart by many of the European governments to whom the Clinton administration has assigned the primary responsibility for ending the fighting in the Balkans.

In Houston, Clinton was asked why the Serbs should take this latest threat of air strikes seriously, given the West's previous saber-rattling.

"Let's see what happens in the next couple of days," the president said. "You know what I feel about that. I don't think we should have any more empty threats."

The NATO allies last year blocked a U.S. appeal to both lift an arms embargo against the Muslim-led government and to bomb Bosnian Serb artillery and mortar sites if attacks continued.

Partly out of concern U.N. peacekeepers might in the cross-fire, the allies shied away from forceful intervention. But continued blood-letting in what Christopher called "unacceptable actions" by the Serbs was expected this time to result in allied unity.

miss a few dishes, but most of the time we are very clean," Wilds said.

The management's biggest problem regarding sanitation lies with the students, Stafford said. Some students leave their trays behind and do not clean up their own mess.

"It is a common courtesy to clean up your mess," Stafford said. "You wouldn't do it at home, so why do it here."

The management of the dining commons is open to any suggestions or comments students have regarding the food.

One can fill out comment cards which are displayed by the cashiers. The management reads all the comment cards and 90 percent are taken seriously, Stafford said.

"Every student has a different eating pattern so it's hard to satisfy everyone," Stafford said.

Some info about U.S. crime

Crime in America is out of control. It is the public's top priority for politicians. Yet, the public perceptions of crime and what to do about it are more influenced by "inside Edition" than by The New York Times.

Our ignorance is being exploited to fuel both fear and anger. We must take the time to understand the complex issue of crime before we accept the proposals that politicians will be trying to sell us.

Here are some basic facts I feel the public needs to know about crime before we launch into another wave of government activism.

Fact #1 — In America, we jail more people than any other country in the world but we also have the most crime. While Iran does jail more of its people as a percentage of the population, in absolute terms, it's one of the areas where America still leads the world.

"In terms of return for our investment, prisons don't seem to work very well– throwing a lot of hoodlums in jail doesn't seem to deter other hoodlums from doing the same thing.

Neil Carpenter

However, in terms of return for our investment, prisons don't seem to work very well — throwing a lot of hoodlums in jail doesn't seem to deter other hoodlums from doing the same thing.

Fact #2 — One-third of the prison population doesn't need to be there. According to a new study by the Presidential Sentencing Commission, we have a large prison population because 30 percent of the population is in fact, "petty, non–violent offenders," who may not need to be there. What this means is that more violent criminals will get paroled since the prisons are full of people convicted of drug use.

In theory, prison might be a very good deterrent to violent crime. However, since the prisons are already so full, criminals know the criminal justice system is just a revolving door.

Fact #3 — The death penalty does not reduce crime. This statement appears to contradict common sense, but it makes perfect sense with enough thought. Death row only deters people from crime if they fear death. Everybody fears death above all else, right?

Wrong. For many members of the inner city there is no hope for a better life, so what's the big deal about dying? Most gang members risk life and limb every day on the streets, so getting killed by the chair is the last thing on their minds.

At the same time, many other violent crimes are domestic crimes of passion. They are committed with no forethought and often under the influence of alcohol, is the death penalty a practical deterrent for a man who gets drunk and then beats his wife and kids? What good are police walking on the streets if the crimes are happening inside the home?

Fact #4 — Los Angeles was as dangerous in the 1800s as it is now. In terms of murders per 100,000 people, Los Angeles was as dangerous a place to be in during the founding of the west coast as it is today. America was born at the end of a gun, and we have maintained our belief in violence throughout the past 200 years. Guns and violence are fundamental parts of our culture.

When we see kids toting guns into elementary schools we should look at ourselves and see how much more respect we give to bronze than brains.

In fact, violent crime in this country today is not any greater than it has been historically. Crime waves in America tend to occur when there is a high proportion of 18–to–24–year–olds within the population. The largest single determinent of crime in America is not the level of gun control or the number of criminals being let out of jail, but the number of red–blooded 18–year–olds there are running around.

What does all this mean for the crime debate in Washington? If you look at the facts, you realize that whatever the Democrats or Republicans do because of popular opinion won't mean very much. And anything they can do that would be meaningful would probably be called criminal by the public.

Activities open opportunity

UMass is a very big place.

To a new student it can be overwhelming, with all new classes, teachers and friends. I felt the same way when I first came to UMass for the fall semester 1990.

Lisa Jezowski

I was not involved in any sort of activity during my first year here. I simply went to my classes and hung around in my dorm. It was not what you would call an exciting lifestyle.

The people who lived in my dorm were nice, but there was something missing. None of these people shared my hobbies, opinions or goals, and I just didn't feel "at home" away from home.

Finally, after a rather uneventful first year on campus, I decided to get involved in something. On the advice of two friends I joined the Minuteman Marching Band. Music had always been a hobby of mine, but I thought that I wouldn't have the time to be in the band once I got to school. Was I ever so wrong.

The work was hard, the hours long, but finally I had something to do.

After the first week of practice I could feel a difference. My days were filled with a purpose other than simply going to class. After a hard day of lectures, labs and discussions I could look forward to a relaxing time of unwinding, playing music and exercising outdoors, and it felt good.

Soon after band started I met several friends who, at a huge place like UMass, I never would have met otherwise. Suddenly I was surrounded by people with whom I could feel comfortable ... people who had grown up in similar situations as I had, and had experienced many of the same things. I finally felt I had found a group to belong to among the 23,000 other students here.

When I finally performed in my first football half–time show I couldn't describe the feeling. As part of the band, I received the first of what would be many standing ovations. A standing–O. Just for what I was doing in my spare time. It was incredible.

As a member of the Marching Band I also had the opportunity to visit places I had never been, like the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis this past fall. Until this trip I had never been farther west than Syracuse, N.Y., so I had the opportunity to take that cross–country road trip I had always dreamed about. The best part is, it was free (sort of).

The only price I paid was sweat, time and energy (along with a couple hundred dollars in magazine subscription sales).

There are opportunities like this everywhere to be had at UMass, and they are yours for the taking. While I would be the last person to sing the praises of this University in general, I can say that the selection and quality of activities with which you can get involved is first–rate.

There is much more to an education than reading books and doing research. Meeting people and making contacts can be just as valuable in the long run because the key to success is neither who you know nor what you know. It's both.

Depriving yourself of social time and relaxation in favor of studying all the time can be just as bad as partying too much and never hitting the books. From my experiences in the band I know that when I did stop and take a break once in a while I put the rest of my time to better use. I found it a lot easier to apply myself because I knew I would always have time for fun later.

So stop and smell the roses once in a while, because everyone has a special hobby or a dream, something that they would love to try, and now is the time. As students we're not going to be able to choose from the Outing Club, Club Communications, the Union Video Center and other organizations forever.

So take a chance. Pick and choose from the smorgasbord of opportunity that is found here at UMass. You may not love everything you do, but chances are you'll find something you enjoy.

Being underage just sucks

It's so close I can almost taste it — the alcohol, that is, and the torture that awaits me next week on my 21st birthday. Sure, like everyone else I've been counting the months, then weeks, now days until the 17th.

Art Stapleton

I can see the trash I've endured year after year here at the University disappearing when I'm finally able to flash my license, proving I'm legal. But as the last week before D– Day winds down, I'd like to share some of my observations about being underage.

When you are an adult [21 years old in this case], respect is often earned and received. Let's face it — if an underage college student has one request for a roommate, it'd probably be someone who either has a fake ID or is 21 years old. He or she will become your best friend until you leave Amherst, and I guarantee you will not have a conversation without the word "packy" popping up.

But it is not always easy being 18, 19 or 20 — you come to learn the system sucks. Not just the bureaucratic part, but some of the people that are in it as well.

• No matter how courteous, well–mannered and mature you are, you will always be treated like a kid. This past weekend, I spent a night in New Jersey, awaiting the Massachusetts–Kentucky game, if you must know. Anyway, some friends and I went to Houlihan's, a nice bar/restaurant in Secaucus. What transpired there leads me to believe that I will never use "nice" as an adjective to describe that establishment ever again.

After an hour of waiting at the bar, we were seated. Twenty minutes later, a waiter showed up. Add another hour on to that, and we finally got our meal. Nothing fancy — just burgers. Meanwhile, in the same time it took us to get our entrees, a group of adults came in at the time we ordered, ate, paid and left before we even took a bite.

Bite is the operative word. They took advantage of us because we were college students. Bite is what that manager can do to me.

• Until you are 21, you can drive a car but cannot, under any circumstances, rent one. I still can't figure it out. When I turned 18, I got my driver's license. I pay for auto insurance. I drive the family car [don't laugh]. Up here at school, though, if I need to go on a road trip, I can't rent a car. Maybe I'll get a fake ID saying I'm 23 and then rent one. I'd probably get arrested for having the fake, and then I won't be able to rent the damn car.

• No clubbing, dancing or entertainment out on the town unless it's teen night. Basically, you can't gain admittance unless you know the bouncer if you are underage. I mean, at home over the summer, my nightlife consists of betting on the horses, going to the movies and crowding into parties with the same old people. I don't dance, but I'd truly like to be able to go out once in a while.

• You can buy pornographic magazines but you can't get into a place of adult entertainment. Don't get me wrong, I neither condone nor condemn attending. I've never been to a strip bar. Honest. But what are they trying to tell you — you can look at the nude body in skin mags but you can't see it live. Yet another travesty of justice.

• You can't drink alcohol until you are 21 — legally. An absolute joke, especially here on this campus. Here's a message to the United States government via Housing Services: no matter what the law says, no matter how hard the Resident Assistants try, no matter how many hangovers, college students will always find a way to consume alcoholic beverages if they want to.

They won't stop me in 9 days.

Arthur Stapleton jr. is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Space research is misunderstood

David Chan's column, "Spend money down here [Collegian, Feb. 4]," was a perfect example of the reason that America is in as much trouble as it is today. The problem is that too many people think as he does, and that the research NASA does is money wasted. Yet without NASA we would not be where we are today.

NASA supported the early development of integrated circuits that are used in all modern electronics. They are also responsible for communication and most other satellites. Everything from satellites sensing environmental problems to watching the Academy Awards live, via satellite, are all thanks to NASA.

NASA is also responsible for many synthetic materials used in medical research, such as AIDS research. Hazard Analysis Critical Control Points (HACCP) is a management program initiated by NASA to eliminate the possibility of food–born illness in space. HACCP is only one of many management programs that are now common practice. These are only a few of the things that NASA is responsible for which are useful to the average American.

More importantly than all the accomplishments that NASA has brought about is the fact that without scientific research, we are limiting ourselves. If the only thing that famous people like Da Vinci and Aristotle worried about was feeding the hungry, where would we be today? If all we worried about was feeding ourselves, we would still be in caves.

A lot of research is needed for NASA to accomplish something like fixing the Hubble telescope. Without even intending to, NASA quite often develops something that is useful and needed in another place. Without this research, these accomplishments would not be possible.

It is the human spirit to better ourselves and NASA is doing just that. Modern society owes a lot to NASA, and will continue to benefit from NASA research unless more budget cuts are taken. Money spent on NASA is more wisely spent than most of the things our tax dollars are spent on.

Another view on Northern Ireland

I am writing this in response to articles I have read in the Collegian and other newspapers, television coverage and a number of comments I (and my friends) have received since arriving at UMass from England last August.

It seems to us that the situation in Northern Ireland gets extremely biased responses here — strongly sympathetic toward the aims and actions of the Irish Republican Army. Being of an admittedly biased view myself, I thought I would try and explain the British side of things so that some of you might be able to come to a more balanced opinion.

Firstly, it is not a holy war. Religion was one of the original majors factors of disagreement, but no longer. That is not what the fight is over.

Secondly, no one wants the British military presence is Ulster. Not the British government, not the Northern Irish, not the army. The reason they do not leave is because civil war would erupt and, like it or not, Northern Ireland is a part of the United Kingdom and deserves to be protected as such.

Thirdly, the I.R.A. is not a legitimate army, nor are they "Freedom Fighters." They are evil, twisted, cowardly terrorists who kill innocent men, women and children by blowing up such easy targets as shopping malls and subway stations. Innocent people in Northern Ireland and mainland Britain who have no interest and little knowledge of the situation, who have no military or political ties. The only reason Northern Ireland is not free is because these maniacs continue this reign of terror.

It has come to the point where I am sick of Britain being presented as the wrong–doers by people who think they are Irish. If you have Irish heritage, great, be proud of it. But if you were born in the United States then you are not Irish, you are American. Be proud of that. And start worrying about how to solve your own nation's problems before you start worrying about ours.

Ace Ventura: Pet Detective misses mark

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Let the obvious blurbs fall where they may. "This film is a dog. A hare–brained celluloid blunder. Not worth the kibble of admission." Regardless, Ace Ventura: Pet Detective is undeserving of such kind accolades.

Too bad, because when not resorting to obnoxious posing, star Jim Carrey exhibits a competent air of comic performance (imagine Jerry Lewis on uppers).

Sure his humor vein is tapped into the slapsticky, but on FOX's "In Living Color", this rubber–faced goon merges eccentric hipness with Looney Tunes irreverence, creating wacked–out characters wavering oh–so–precariously between the annoying and the endearing.

Not so here. Carrey's Ventura, a "finder of lost leashes" works the stolen pet market. When the Miami Dolphins' fictitious dolphin mascot is kidnapped, Ventura is hired (as is the case in all such farces)...unwittingly. Somewhere along the line Dan Marino, Tone Loc and Sean Young (She was in Blade Runner?) get embroiled in the mix.

Unfortunately, director Tom Shaydac and co–writer Carrey abandon all sense of wit, with the exception of a great dig at The Crying Game, and resort to exploiting Carrey's facial contortions. The end result (and I say this with a groan) is straight to the pound for this puppy. D– (Mt. Farms Four).

My Father The Hero — With Hollywood's recent trend of remaking French cinema into American schlock, how long can it be until the trend reverses itself.

This Disney farce stars French statesman Gerard Depardieu. Trying to run the comic gambit from fall–down funny to sappily sweet, this light confection confuses its goals.

Telling the story of a young girl's flight from adolescence and her father's fearful attempts to hang on to her cherished youth, Father would have done better to stay tender. The film instead aims for slapstick, hurtling an armada of lecherous beaus and oncoming speedboats at the pleasantly bemused Depardieu.

Unfortunately, Disney has sold itself short, laying

Albums offer sheer boredom

Alternative NRG
Hollywood Records

Thankfully this disc doesn't succumb to the trappings of the glut of compilations on the market now. Alternative NRG (alternative, hmm...intriguing word choice) is the ultra–environmental ("recorded and mixed with soiar power") benefit album for everyone's favorite whale–huggers, Greenpeace. Despite the six–panel foldout cardboard jewel– box, it's a pretty impressive project. Impressive, if you can pry the disc from the box.

The catch here is live performances of hits or near misses. Recycled tunes if you will. Only questionable inclusion is EMF's scrawny synthesized take on the Iggy Pop classic, "Search and Destroy." Otherwise, the disc drives forth with surprising continuity.

REM's "Drive" is a nice toned–down rendition of their smash. U2's "Until the End of the World" starts and stays electrifying with Bono's mighty stage voice.

A welcomed bit of Chris Cornell intensity comes in the Soundgarden/ Brian May combo of Soundgarden's "New Damage." Sonic Youth's "JC" is a bad choice but it does give a dependable example of the masochistically appealing rasp of Kim Gordon.

On the hipper–hopper side is P.M. Dawn, Boo–Yaa T.R.I.B.E. and rap scholars the Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy who, unfortunately have to resort to the mandatory crowd pleas, "say oh yeah, say hell yeah," etc. and "ya' don't stop."

In full glory is diva Annie Lennox and "Cold," taken from her "MTV Unplugged" episode; the only non–solar–track. Hey, maybe you've got an overwhelming urge to hear live versions of old songs and feel charitable in the process. B– (A.G.)

Unsane
Total Destruction
Matador

Maybe Total Destruction needs a lyric sheet to decipher the grouch–in–the–closet rantings. Maybe that was an unintentionally bad joke.

Chris Spencer's voice bleeds through precise riffs and insistent drumming with all the spunk of Al Jourgenson but none of the impact. Unsane like the way it sounds and repeat themselves making it often tough to tell one song from the next were it not for the CD player showing a different number track.

It's even harder to tell many of the tunes from the Melvins ("Body Bag") or Ministry ("Broke",

COURTESY MICHAEL CALINSKY

"Wayne"). Unsane's thud and wail is insipid and deliberate. Up-tempo numbers like "Straight" and "Dispatched" impress with rapid-fire basslines above the screaming din, but it's all so indecipherable and repetetive, it's easy to overlook any display of musical prowess.

Vile album cover (an Unsane trademark, who could forget the severed head on the railroad tracks) aside, this isn't worth the trouble. D+ (A.G.)

Dig
Radioactive Records

Dig believes in guitars. Lots of them. Three to be exact. Sometimes this works and carries a song or two into a guitar realm usually inhabited by groups like Smashing Pumpkins and Swervedriver. Usually, they fall short of those bands' guitar brilliance, becoming only the purveyors of repetetive noise and ear-bleeding distortion.

The first single off the self-titled album, "Believe", has received both radio airplay and a coveted spot in MTV's Buzz Bin, and deservedly so. It opens with a throbbing bassline which gives way to the melodic roar of the guitar triumvirate. The chorus soars, and the song slips from sublime and quiet breaks to explosive chords fluidly. It recalls the best of the Pumpkins and Swervedriver while remaining a unique song.

Other songs do not quite reach the same heights. "Let Me Know" ignores melody for a more Helmet-like hammer riff, but with all the distortion, it quickly becomes annoying. "Decide" and "Unlucky Friend" are more subdued, mellow songs.

While "Decide" works as a shimmering guitar piece, the latter sinks under the weight of sloppy and boring sound, and nothing happens within the song to hold your attention.

Dig is a band that needs a little more work, perhaps a few days with Billy Corgan in the studio. Until then, I will just play "Believe" over and over again.... C (B.B.)

Mae Moore
Bohemia
Tristar Records

Aussie songtress Mae Moore enlisted the help of a few local buddies for her debut album, and for the most part, it helps. Church singer-guitarist Steve Kilbey and bassist Peter Koppes both play on and produce Moore's album, so it makes sense that most of the album musically takes on the dreamy texture of their work. Since I like the Church, this is a good thing.

Moore's voice is also very beautiful, smooth and husky, but does not compensate for her songwriting, which makes the album less wonderful than it could be.

The opening and title track is the best song on the album. A mid-tempo beat and agile bassline anchor the subtle guitars, as Moore begins with a spoken verse, then sings her chorus in a very close imitation of Suzanne Vega. The song builds and climaxes beautifully.

Unfortunately, the rest of the album never again attempts the uniqueness and creativity of that song. Moore writes no less than four songs that sound, no joke, a lot like Edie Brickell's "Circle." She disguises them with varying sounds and lyrics, but there truly is very little difference. Moore even lifts the exact same opening from "Bohemia" for her song "Arrow."

The combination of Moore's voice with the Church's musicians has a lot of potential. Unfortunately, Moore's songwriting ability is not strong enough to help the album take off. D (B.B.)

Understanding Eating Disorders:
Strategies for Friends and Family

Wednesday - February 16
6:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m.
Campus Center - Room 802

I think my roommate has an eating disorder. How can I be sure? What should I do?

I think my sister is anorexic and she isn't getting any help. How can I convince her to see a professional? Who should I suggest...Where should she go?

I'm concerned about my friend who has bulimia. She says it's under control, but I don't think it is. I'm really afraid...What can I do to help?

If you're concerned about someone who you know or suspect is struggling with an eating disorder, come to this informal workshop to explore how you can help and cope with these issues.

Your Horoscope
By Jesse Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Consult an expert if you encounter an unexpected financial hurdle. Keep close tabs on your expenses for tax purposes. Self-discipline helps you turn in a steady performance.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Business or career success comes through a series of bold moves. Put your vivid imagination to work! Strive for excellence in whatever you do. Spending some time alone will clarify your ideas.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Do something innovative. Financial backing will be offered for a new partnership if you watch your P's and Q's. Postpone making a decision about romance.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Others look to you for leadership. Think twice before changing jobs; it might be better to stay put. A temporary sacrifice will be worth it. Avoid gossip by keeping family secrets to yourself.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): The more friends you make in your field, the easier it will be for you to forge ahead professionally. Do not show all of your cards. Become efficient on the home front.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Your dedication begins to pay off at work. Skip the non-essentials and concentrate on important matters. Stay upbeat about any personal problems, especially when talking with family members.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Go out of your way to meet new people, even those who hold opposing views. Do not shout or argue. A diplomatic approach will pay big dividends. Look before you leap into romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Although making a few changes at home would be beneficial, you should not try to redo everything at one time. An overly zealous salesperson could try to pull the wool over your eyes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Someone offers you constructive criticism. Listen quietly, then present the latest facts and figures. By making a few concessions, you can pave the way to success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): A desire for a career change could lead to a more adventurous life. Time spent with parents could heal old wounds. A former friend reappears. Put all past grievances to rest.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Lighten up at work. A positive, cheerful mood will be contagious. Show confidence in the face of adversity; you are on the right track. Let a secret admirer know how much you care.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Pay more attention to seemingly minor details. They could mean a lot to someone. Influential! Put your shoulder to the wheel when a co-worker asks for help. Your diligence will be rewarded.

of the improving Bonnies, can post up, but is equally comfortable facing the hoop and launching long-range jump shots. The 6-foot-8 Moore might be the sentimental choice to some because he has produced for some really bad Bonnie teams.

Seniors Eddie Jones and Aaron McKie have been the best pure scorers in the A-10 this year. While they help make Temple a Top 10 team, Jones and McKie (last year's A-10 Player of the Year) might be hurting each other when it comes to taking the trophy.

Jones, an explosive 6-foot-6 jumping jack, has continued his rise to national prominence with tremendous play at both ends of the court. Meanwhile, McKie, a smooth 6-foot-6 Mitch Richmond play-a-like, has not suffered a drop-off of any sorts from last year's award- winning campaign.

Men's gym breaks record, beats UVM

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

Freshman gymnast Gabe Columbus fought his way through a difficult high bar routine, falling twice, but came back to finish his performance, stick the landing and score an 8.3, ending the men's gymnastics meet between Massachusetts and Vermont.

When the scores were tallied, Minuteman Coach Roy Johnson had made good on a week-long promise: his Minutemen set a new all-time meet record for team total score, up one-tenth of a point from the school record set in 1991, scoring 269.6 points en route to a 55-point drubbing of the Catamounts.

In addition to setting a new school record for points in a meet, the Minutemen also broke the school record for still rings, setting the new score to shoot for at 46.65.

Columbus, one of a number of UMass standouts, managed a total score of 51.55 points, which won him the all-around competition for the second week in a row. Columbus was named ECAC Gymnast of the Week last week for his performance against Navy when he won the all-around competition with 52.5 total points.

According to Johnson, the team was fighting hard all week working on their routines and really "responding [well] in practice." Throughout the week, the team had been listening to a radio promotion for the event that carried Coach Johnson's promise to "make a run for the record."

The energy that was generated all week was apparent at the meet as the UMass gymnasts dazzled the home crowd more and more with every routine.

Various Minuteman gymnasts captured first place in all of the six events and the team captured the top three spots in four events: pommel horse, still rings, parallel bars and high bar.

"[Breaking the record] was the goal for today," said Johnson. "To show people in our conference that we're one of the top teams, I think [269.6] is the highest score up to today in the conference."

Ruslan Shupak, a freshman hailing from Toronto, also managed an individual season record in the vault with a score of 9.65, taking first place in the event. In addition, he took first place in the floor exercise and rings with scores of 9.45 and 9.6 respectively.

Johnson pointed to Lorenzo Macaluso as a standout; Macaluso scored a 9.45 on pommel horse for first place, a "high pommel horse score for a freshman." Johnson said he thought Andy Fulmer performed well on the high bar, taking third place with an 8.85 using a routine where "every skill on it was learned here."

Among a number of other high scorers for UMass at the meet were first place finishers Steven Goldman, who took first with a 9.2 on the parallel bars, and Kiat Olober with 9.45 on high bar. Senior Jason Braud also contributed three scores of 9.0 or better and an 8.95 in the events he participated in.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, the meet was not without cost, however. Freshman Stanley Dobrydnio re- injured his knee as he landed a pommel horse routine that would earn him an 8.85, and second place in the event. Dobrydnio had broken his patella in July and the extent of re-injury was unknown at press time.

The Minutemen face a tough conference competitor in Temple at the end of this week when UMass hits the road to meet the Owls on Feb. 12. The Minutemen don't return for a home meet until March 1, when they host Southern Connecticut at the Boyden Gymnastics Center.

Minutewomen crush MIT

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team overwhelmed MIT Friday night in its first home meet of the season. In the huge victory, the Minutewomen racked up a season-high 187.6 points, with MIT only scoring 152.4.

"We've been improving everytime out this year, we are doing the kind of stuff the Top 10 teams in the country are doing," said UMass Coach David Kuzara.

UMass started off with a bang as Angela Jent, Tara Swartz and Lianne Laing all were superior on the vault. Laing won the event with a 9.675; Jent and Swartz each received a 9.6. UMass won the event by more than five points.

Swartz, a freshman, then recorded a 9.75 on the uneven bars to set an individual and team high for the season. Margaret Furtado was next with a 9.6 and Shaheda Keels picked up a 9.35, as the much more athletic UMass squad continued to roll.

"Physically, we were awesome. We just needed to clean some things up, like staying on our feet more, and we'll be right up there with those top 10 teams," Kuzara said.

The floor exercise was the highlight event for UMass on the night. Laing and Keels each scored a 9.6, with Furtado bringing in a 9.45. Swartz had a 9.4 as the Minutewomen totaled a 47.5 in the event. Laing won her second event on the balance beam by scoring a 9.65, with Swartz second at 9.45.

"I had a great three events with only a slip up on the bars. I'm very pleased with the way the team is performing," Laing said.

"I'm glad to get the first home meet behind us. The fans were supportive, I just wish they could have been more vocal in cheering us on," said Kuzara.

Swartz won the all-around for the third consecutive meet with a total of 38.20 points, tying her personal best. Keels totaled 37.68 and Laing 37.58.

"I was really nervous for my first home meet, I'm proud of our team's improvement," Swartz said.

"Including this meet, we figure these next five meets to be the key. We certainly got off to a good start here," Kuzara said.

Next up for UMass is a trip out to Arizona next weekend for a meet with Arizona, Cal-Berkeley, and regional rival Ohio State. A stiffer test awaits as Arizona was ranked No.6 in the polls last year.

"This really sets us up for Arizona. We'll have confidence and everyone will be pumped up and ready to compete. We can't wait to get out there," Kuzara said.

"I'm really excited to go out to Arizona. We really haven't been up against teams of equal talent. I think the team is going to do real well against teams on that level," Laing said.

The Minutewomen went into the meet ranked No. 25 in the nation and may advance a place or two with the victory. Kuzara expects to have Jent compete in more events and start resting some of his freshmen, like Swartz, who aren't used to this much competition.

"If our team keeps getting better and better than we can really rock in Arizona," Swartz said.

WVU rocked, Temple rolls

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

With rumors about its uncertain future continuing to swirl around like a bad tornado, the Atlantic 10 Conference continues to play on. Here's a quick look at some of the latest developments in the A-10:

• West Virginia, after starting the season off with a bang, is beginning to regress a bit. The Mountaineers began the season with a 9-1 mark, but have dropped four of their last eight, including an embarrassing 75-50 blowout loss at Marquette on ESPN last Saturday.

Even with their current problems, the Mountaineers should be the third A-10 team (behind Temple and Massachusetts) to make the NCAA Tournament if they play solid basketball down the stretch. The reason? Quality victories. West Virginia has defeated Temple and Ohio State on the road.

• The Temple Owls are currently the hottest team in the nation with a 10-game winning streak.

The Owls will be looking for revenge tonight when they travel to Morgantown for a showdown with the Mountaineers. If Temple can get by WVU and then Duquesne on Thursday, the Owls will bring a 12-game winning streak to the William D. Mullins Center next Sunday for a nationally televised (ABC) battle with the Minutemen. What a scenario that would be.

• The George Washington Colonials came into the season with great expectations. However, the team was hit hard by graduation; the losses of Dirk Surles, Sonni Holland and Bill Brigham were definitely underrated in the eyes of the nation.

• In addition to the close race for team honors in the A-10, the races for individual honors are beginning to heat up as well.

While Massachusetts freshman Marcus Camby has all but sewn up the Freshman of the Year Award, the Player of the Year trophy could be headed in a number of different directions.

Minuteman forward Lou Roe staked an early claim to the honor with his play in the Preseason NIT, but his slump in the mid-season allowed a few other players to catch up to him.

On Sunday, Roe's captivating performance against Kentucky on national TV gave the idea perhaps the junior is gambling that a strong stretch run will pull him above his competitors.

A couple of pairs make up that list of Roe's competitors; a pair of high scoring big men and a pair of Temple swingmen.

The two big men in the running for top dog are Duquesne's Derrick Alston and St. Bonaventure's Harry Moore. While they both are the go-to guys for their respective teams, Alston and Moore have different games.

Alston, the A-10's leading scorer at 21.8 points per game, is a spindly big man (6-foot-11) who scores his hoops with quick inside moves and short jump shots.

Moore, meanwhile, the unquestioned leader

Men swim to perfection

Victory gives Minutemen an undefeated season

By BILL BALFOUR

The screenwriters in Hollywood would have a hard time scripting a better story.

Participating in their final home meet, every Minuteman senior on the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team recorded a victory on Sunday as UMass defeated Northeastern, 192-105.

The Minutemen dominated the meet, winning 13 of the 16 events to record their 12th victory of the season and drop Northeastern to 6-5.

"It was a fun meet," Coach Russ Yarworth said. "It was good to see each senior win an event in their last home meet."

Dan Burzinski won the 500-yard freestyle in 5:01.07, Steve Jungbluth finished first in the 1,000-yard freestyle in 10:16.00, Sean Clark won the 50-yard freestyle in 22.02 and was part of the winning 200-yard freestyle relay, and Tim Nubar won the 200-yard fly in 1:57.08, the 100-yard fly in 51.59 and was part of the 200-yard medley relay that finished first.

"It was especially gratifying to see the seniors go out and all do well," Yarworth said. "They've worked real hard over their four or five years."

Sunday's victory capped off an undefeated season for the Minutemen, who finished at 12-0. The record was the team's best since the 1989-90 season when they finished with a 13-0 record.

Looking back over the season, Yarworth said he is impressed with his team's accomplishments.

"We beat some pretty good teams and swam really well to get to that 12-0 record," Yarworth said. "It's a hell of an accomplishment."

Yarworth said he always expects to be successful but with a tough schedule, the credit for the undefeated season belongs to the swimmers.

"They found a way to win whenever they had to. A couple of those dual meets we were beat up and tired, and we found a way to win them," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen set two pool records on Sunday. Both came in relay events.

In the 200-yard medley relay, Greg Menton, Tim Milbert, Jose Santa and Nubar set the record with a time of 1:36.10. In the 200-yard freestyle relay, Menton, Clark, Santa and Kerry Hueston broke the record with a time of 1:25.67.

"That was our goal going into the meet," Yarworth said. "And that's exactly what we did."

The Minutemen return to the pool this weekend for the New England Championships at Springfield College. UMass is seeking its eighth consecutive title.

Minutewomen snag third place

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

Going into its meet with New England powerhouse University of Connecticut, the University of Massachusetts women's track team knew it would have a tough time. Judging by the results, they did.

UConn ran away with the meet, scoring 216 points while UMass came in third with 79 points. Placing ahead of the Minutewomen by only three points was Rhode Island, who ended up with 82.

UMass placed ahead of Dartmouth, who had 53 points, Holy Cross who had 41, Central Connecticut who had 12 and Maine who had 10 points.

The Minutewomen had no first place finishes but they still had some good performances. Junior Janey Meeks tied for second in the high jump with a jump of 5-04.25 and she also came in second in the triple jump with a jump of 38- 02.0.

"Overall, probably the person who had the best day was [Janey] Meeks," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "She took two second places. [Janey's] looking real good."

Also placing in the triple jump was freshman Jesse Rutherford, who came in third with a jump of 35-05.0.

"She [Rutherford] did a great job," said LaFreniere. "Another freshman who did an outstanding job was Erica Doyle. She had her best time so far this season [in the 400m] with 58.43.

Doyle came in second in the 400m and fourth in the 200m with a time of 26.62. Sophomore Christie Martin came in fifth in the 20-pound weight with a throw of 46.00.75. That throw turned out to be the second best throw ever in school history.

"[Christie] Martin had a great day in the 20-pound weight," said LaFreniere. "She threw another personal record for her."

No excuses; a third place for men

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

Few quality coaches deive too deep to uncover excuses for their teams' poor performances. University of Massachusetts men's track and field coach Ken O'Brien is no exception.

Thus he offered no alibis for the Minutemen's third place finish at the University of Rhode Island Sunday, which brought its record to 13-8. UMass (107 points) trailed the host Rams (171) and the Coast Guard (124) and topped New Hampshire (99), Central Connecticut State (22) and Hartford (2).

"I think we hit a plateau," O'Brien said. "I was hoping we'd ride the excitement of the [Atlantic 10 Championships Feb. 12], but we were a little flat."

The meet was not a total disaster for UMass. It couldn't match the seven first places it earned in its previous meet, where it stormed over all en route to four victories, but it did win three events.

Marc Lefebvre, who has suffered few lulls this year, won the shot put with a throw of 48'8".

"[Lefebvre] has been real consistent," O'Brien said. "That was a good throw."

UMass did carry its domination from last week into the mile run, which Rick Copley won in 4:21.7. Marc Buffone crossed the line right after Copley in 4:22.0 and Tim Boicaro placed fifth in 4:29.3.

Senior Kevin Greenhalgh ran away with the 3,000 meters, completing the course in 8:41.2, more than five seconds ahead of the runner-up.

UMass competitors placed second in the 800 meters and the triple jump, but did not place in the top six in the pole vault, 400 meters, or 35 lb. weight throw.

"There may be an explanation [for UMass' showing], but it's not apparent," O'Brien said. "We got off on a little shaky foot, and from there took kind of a step sideways."

The Minutemen travel to the A-10s at West Virginia University in Morgantown this weekend.

Weld wants return of death penalty

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Pointing to the murders of two Massachusetts police officers in the past week, Gov. William F. Weld on Tuesday renewed his call for returning the death penalty to Massachusetts.

Capital punishment legislation has been filed most every year in Massachusetts, where the last execution took place in 1947, but the Republican governor said a rash of violence gives the issue added urgency this year.

"There are some people who deserve the death penalty and nothing less," Weld said. "It is the only way to ensure that the punishment meets the crime and that cold-blooded killers do not kill again."

Last Tuesday, Paxton Police Chief Robert Mortell was shot to death while investigating a break-in. Last weekend, Boston Police Officer B. Wayne Anderson was shot by someone who was driving the wrong way down the one-way street.

Weld's death penalty — by lethal injection — would be applicable to first-degree murder cases that meet one of 12 criteria, including murder of a police officer, contract killing, murder with multiple victims, and murder committed with rape, robbery or home invasion.

If a jury voted to apply capital punishment, that case automatically would be appealed to the Supreme Judicial Court.

Weld, at a news conference at the Quincy Police Department, also proposed legislation that would require mandatory life sentences for people convicted of their third violent felony. The so-called "three strikes and you're out" proposal also has been championed by President Clinton.

Joshua Rubenstein, regional director of Amnesty international USA, accused Weld of using the death penalty as a knee-jerk political issue.

"Why should Massachusetts join such countries as Iran and Iraq, China Malaysia and Saudi Arabia, when all the countries whose political traditions we claim to share have abolished the death penalty?" Rubenstein said.

Skaters mixed on Harding

By BARRY WILNER
The Associated Press

LILLEHAMMER, Norway — While American figure skaters are choosing their words very carefully about Tonya Harding, others in the skating world are calling for her Olympic ouster.

Ivan Rezek, coach of the Czech pairs team of Radka Kovarikova and Rene Novotny, doesn't think Harding belongs in Lillehammer. His skaters, the 1992 world silver medalists, agree.

"Her behavior does not belong here because she is involved — at this moment at least — for not coming forward and speaking the truth about what she knew of her husband's involvement."

Harding's presence would make Kevarikova uncomfortable.

"If I would have to stand next to her, I would not feel good about it," she said. "I certainly would not want to be her roommate or have the room near her. She should stay home."

She might be forced to when she faces a United States Olympic Committee hearing.

> "I certainly would not want to be her roommate or have the room near her. She should stay home."
> -- Czech skater Radka Kovarikova

But for now Tonya Harding is a member of the America team, and her teammates have been inundated by questions about her and the Nancy Kerrigan attack.

An appeal by the USOC to give Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan separate practice sessions was turned down Tuesday by the International Skating Union.

The USOC wanted Kerrigan and Harding to have different practice times each day. But Olympic policy is for all competitors from the same nation to have the same practice sessions.

During the normal sessions, every skater in a group is on the ice together for warmups.

Many stay on the ice near the boards when another skater is going through her routine during her allotted time.

Meanwhile the media frenzy continues around the U.S. team.

"We've had TV crews and AM Philadelphia come down to the rink to ask us all kinds of stuff," said pairs skater Todd Reynolds, who trains with partner Karen Courtland in Newark, Delaware. "They had to close the rink."

Reynolds believes the entire U.S. figure skating team, "has to sit and get together and talk about it," before the Olympics begin.

Jenni Meno and Todd Sand, the U.S. pairs champions, have also heard dozens of questions about the Harding- Kerrigan affair. They'd just as soon not answer.

"I think that we've come here to focus on what we are doing and it's a shame what happened," Meno said. "We really don't know enough information to say what happened; I don't think anyone has. So we'll just focus on our jobs and stay focused on our skating."

Sand is saddened by the damage the incident might have done to the sport.

"I think it is a little of a shame that such an exciting nationals was overshadowed by all that controversy," said Sand.

Sand said the Harding-Kerrigan affair has not been fair to the team, particularliy because the flap had drawn attention away from teammates Scott Davis and Brian Boitano, along with Ice dancers Liz Punsalan and Jerrod Swallow.

"I think we are all hoping it turns out all right and I think skating will just go on after It."

Breast cancer pervasive

Stickers are the newest trend in an effort to remind women to perform a breast cancer self-exam each month

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

Your mom, your sister, your grandma Mary, your best friend Jen, your aunt, your girlfriend Lisa, your friend Debbie, and yourself. What do all these women have in common? Chances are, that of the eight women listed, one will develop breast cancer in her lifetime.

The most common form of cancer in north American women, approximately 2.6 million women in the U.S. live with breast cancer; 1.6 million have been diagnosed. That means that approximately 1 million women do not yet know they have the disease.

Because breast cancer is a disease that kills a woman every 12 minutes, early detection is the key. Most irregularities of the breast are found by women themselves, even though few women know how to perform breast self- examinations (BSEs).

The Breast Health Project, with the help of cartoonist Alison Bechdel, is taking steps to help women become more aware of BSEs and how to perform them. Bechdel and the Breast Health Project have teamed up to create "No Excuses" stickers.

"No Excuses" stickers are a package of 12 stickers with the face of Jezanna, a character in Bechdel's Dykes to Watch Out For cartoon. The stickers are designed to be placed on a woman's calendar to remind her to do a BSE at the same time every month. The visual reminder helps women to remember to do BSEs and be aware of changes in their bodies.

The Breast Health Project, a segment of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Initiative, produced the stickers for several reasons. Mandated by the Breast Cancer initiative to reach certain lesbians and women over 40, the Breast Health Project approached Bechdel and asked her to donate a sticker idea that would be recognizable to lesbians, but all women would use. Bechdel donated the sticker to the Breast Health project, which has mass produced them and is selling them at area shops.

Proceeds from the stickers go toward the Breast Health Project which provides outreach and education programs, and free medical exams, clinical breast exams, and referrals for free mammograms to women with no health insurance and who are over the age of 40. These services are also available to younger women who have a family history of the disease. The Breast Health Project also has a resource center for information and resources on breast cancer, women and cancer, lesbian health and a variety of other related issues.

Ninety to 95 percent of women who detect breast cancer in the earliest stage, are still alive for five years after diagnosis. Early detection is the answer to helping reduce the number of women who develop breast cancer.

The stickers are $1.50 for one sheet, 4 sheets for $5.00, and 10 sheets for $10.00. They fit easily into a greeting card, and are as Ellen Koteen, BHP director says, "A love gift. The early detection of breast cancer is a love gift."

The stickers are being sold in Amherst at: Wendall Country Store, Leverett Co-op, Food for Thought Books, The Mercantile, and Zanna's. In Northampton they are offered at: Gwen & Debs, the Globe Bookshop, Cornucopia, Broodside Bookshop, The Mercantile, Prides & Joy, Lunaria, Paradise Copies, Beyond Words, and Gazebo. The stickers are also available in Greenfield and Shelburne Falls.

Productivity up, claim analysts

By JOHN D. McCLAIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The productivity of American workers rebounded strongly in the last half of 1993, and analysts said it continues to power economic growth while keeping inflation low.

But these economists acknowledged that much of the progress is the result of record numbers of employees being laid off while many of those still with jobs are working longer hours to pick up the slack.

The Labor Department reported Tuesday that nonfarm productivity shot up at a seasonally adjusted 4.2 percent annual rate from October through December, fastest in a year including the third quarter's 4 percent rate.

But declines of 0.4 percent in the second quarter and 1.8 percent in the first slowed productivity growth for the year to just 1.6 percent, little more than half the 3.1 percent advance in 1992, which had been the biggest in two decades.

Stephen S. Roach, an economist with Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York said the rebound is evidence the economic recovery continues to be "productivity-led."

"Productivity gains over the 11 quarters since the recession have averaged 2.5 percent at an annual rate, accounting for about 90 percent of the GDP growth during same interval," he explained. "In past business cycles...over the same 11 quarters, productivity accounted for just 55 percent of GDP growth."

The GDP, or gross domestic product, is the total output of goods and services within the United States and the broadest measure of the economy's health. Productivity is defined as output per number of hours worked.

Out put in 1992 rose 3.7 percent, including a 6.6 percent annual rate of advance in the final three months, which was the largest gain since a 7.2 percent jump in the second quarter of 1987.

Hours worked increased 2.1 percent, the first annual gain since 1990 that included a 2.3 percent growth rate in the fourth quarter.

As a result, unit labor costs rose just 1.9 percent in 1993, from 2 percent in 1992, and actually fell 1.2 percent in the fourth quarter an 0.4 percent in the third.

"That's the first two consecutive [quarterly] declines since the second half of 1962, more than 30 years ago," Roach said. "On a year-over-year basis, cost are up only 1.3 percent. That tells me that inflation is under superb control."

Weld: Find work or lose welfare benefits

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. William F. Weld admitted Tuesday that his proposal to dump people off the state's welfare roll if they don't find work in 60 days will force many recipients to take low-paying jobs.

But that experience is "a better path to a better-paying job" than getting state-backed job training or education, Weld contended.

"We admit they could be low-wage jobs, but they'd be full-time jobs," the Republican said. "We think that develops work habits."

Weld's welfare reform proposal is pitted against one from the Senate Ways and Means Committee designed to head off long-term dependency by focusing first on teen-age mothers and recipients anxious to get off the rolls.

The governor criticized the Ways and Means plan, which would take longer to implement and cost the state as much as $40 million to get off the ground.

"It is simply a misguided, costly attempt to tinker with a system that needs to be torn apart in order to be salvaged," Weld said.

Under the governor's plan, most recipients would have 60 days to find a job, or they would have to perform unpaid community service work while hunting for employment. The state would pay for their health care and child care, the two needs Weld said are most often cited.

Critics say Weld is relying too heavily on a future upswing in the economy, pointing out that more than 100,000 Bay Staters are receiving unemployment insurance and are not on welfare.

"Where are the jobs? His bill is basically fantasizing some jobs into existence that don't exist," said Betsy Wright, executive director of the Massachusetts Human Service Coalition.

Weld said the jobs were there, "The 'help wanted' lineage in the newspapers is up a heck of a lot," he said, but some of them might not pay more than what critics call "burger- flipping wages."

For example, the administration projects that some 5,000 to 10,000 new jobs will be created in the day care industry because the plan creates more demand for day care.

Weld estimates that his proposal would save the state $70 million. But Senate Ways and Means Chairman Thomas Birmingham said the governor was counting saving from a natural reduction in welfare cases, stepped-up welfare fraud detection and other factors that will happen "If my bill passes, if his bill passes, or if no bill passes."

Clinton proposes cuts, but GOP not happy

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's Cabinet tried to promote his budget to Congress Tuesday as a tough document that spills "blood on the floor," Republicans accused the administration of squandering a golden opportunity to cut even more deeply.

"We've cut spending and we've cut it a lot," Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen told the House Budget Committee, one day after President Clinton unveiled a $1.52 trillion spending plan for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

"This is a tough budget. There's a lot of pain in it, a lot of blood on the floor," Bentsen said.

Accompanying Bentsen at the witness table, Alice M. Rivlin, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget, said the budget embodies "unprecedented fiscal discipline."

"Let me not mince words: this is the toughest budget any president has ever presented to you," she said.

Rivlin's boss, budget director Leon Panetta, and Laura D. Tyson, chairwoman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, made separate appearances to defend the budget.

Republican responded with scorn.

"It certainly sounds like morning in America again," said Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., in a reference to Ronald Reagan's 1984 campaign advertisements, which were mercilessly lampooned by Democrats.

Submissions to student magazine run the gamut

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students have until Friday, February 11 to submit their prose, poetry, photography and art work to Spectrum Magazine, the student-run UMass literary and arts magazine.

Sarah Larson, the co-prose editor said by the end of February, the Spectrum arts, photography, poetry and prose staffs will decide on which submissions will be printed in the spring issue, which will come out in early May.

Larson said the Spectrum prevents bias from clouding its decision making by keeping information about the creator of each work separate from the work itself. She said the anonymity of the works makes being a Spectrum editor more interesting.

"You don't know a thing about the person who wrote the piece, except that they are probably a UMass student," she said. "That gives a twisted, exciting quality to it."

Larson said Spectrum does not discriminate against any types of submissions.

"The staffs get together and discuss the relative points of a story, and we try to be fair and open-minded," she said. "We don't discourage any types of writing, we see how good the story is at doing what it's trying to do."

Ryan Pasquini, the co-poetry editor said many students submit poems about their relationships with the opposite sex.

"We get a lot of poems about lonelIness, 'my lover left me' kind of thing. That's about one third of what we get," Pasquini said.

Larson, an English major, said drugs, alcohol and violence are also favorite topics for students to write about.

"Reading student's works is so much different than reading the classics of literature because college students write about different things," she said. "They write about the direct college experience which is not usually written about. Students write about drugs and alcohol a lot, they write about violent fantasies, and a lot of students write out of their experience which is strange because college students have so much less experience than older writers."

Managing editor Bob Lee said last year Spectrum sponsored a poetry reading at the Black Sheep Cafe in Amherst last April. At the reading, people who had been published in Spectrum could read their poetry, and even people who did not get published could still get up and read their work. He said last year the reading was heavily attended and Spectrum plans to sponsor another poetry reading again this spring.

Student exchange offered

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

For six weeks during the summer, University of Massachusetts students can live the life of British students through the Oxford–Trinity program sponsored by the English Department.

The Oxford–UMass Summer program began in 1966 and is the oldest and one of the most popular American summer college programs at Oxford. For the summer term, students live in the dormitories, take classes, take special trips, and attend seminars taught by British professors.

The program is open to UMass and Five College students and costs $3,550. Last year, 47 UMass and five college students attended along with students from other universities in North Carolina, Florida and California.

"We try to provide a rough equivalent of an Oxford term," said David Paroissien, an English professor and director of the program. "We introduce a wide range of American students to the best of Oxford's academic and social traditions."

Undergraduate and graduate students can earn up to eight credits that can be applied to their degrees. UMass students may be eligible for financial aid, sometimes in the form of loans.

"The kids really have a super time," said Paroissien. The classes ar taught by "Oxford dons" and class sizes are intimate for better instruction.

"All of our instruction makes use of the Oxford tutorial system," said Paroissien. "Students meet regularly with their tutors in small groups and pairs, or even individually."

Along with classes, students can attend special trips with their tutors to places like Stonehenge, ancient monuments and gothic churches.

"Students go to places of literary interest like Dickens' Rochester, and William Morris' 19th century manor," said Paroissien. Students select one major course and one optional from a large curriculum of English literature.

Along with the paid package, students can attend four plays performed in London by the Royal Shakespeare Company.

"Students can take the bus to London on the weekends and go to plays and see the city for ten pounds, or twelve American dollars. If they really want to travel they can go as far as Scotland," said Paroissien. "Students also interact with the locals in Oxford and really get to know people."

Students interested in the summer program can attend an information meeting about the 1994 summer seminar today in the Campus Center, room 804 at 4:00 p.m.

Retarded children were tested on

By JOSE MARTINEZ
Associated Press

BOSTON—American anxiety over the possibility of fallout from a nuclear war apparently led scientists to experiment on 63 mentally retarded children at the Wrentham State School, a task force revealed Tuesday.

In 1961 and 1962, children from 1 to 11 years old were fed increasing amounts of sodium iodide to figure out how much or the substance it took to get the body to resist absorbing radioactive Iodine—one of the principal contaminants in nuclear fallout.

"This research is very troubling," said Frederick Misilo Jr., chairman of the task Force to Review Human Subject Research. "For government researchers to use institutionalized 2-year-old children is an insult to the children, their families and to every individual concerned with individual rights and dignity."

According to the state Department of Mental Retardation, the Wrentham study brings to 12 the number of recently uncovered experiments involving radiation and mentally retarded residents at state facilities.

"What a bad reflection on society this is," said John Sullivan, whose 41-year-old daughter, Jean, has been at the Wrentham school since 1959. "It's outrageous that they experimented on these people—these children."

Religion, morals clash

By JONATHAN YENKIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Religion clashed with the sexual revolution Tuesday in the state's highest court, where two Catholic landlords were forced to defend their decision not to rent an apartment to an unmarried couple.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court heard oral arguments from a lawyer representing the landlords and from the attorney general's office, which charged them with housing discrimination.

Attorneys for Paul and Ronald Desilets, the two brothers who own the apartment, said the landlords were justified in refusing to go against their religion. They also noted that fornication is still against the law in Massachusetts, although authorities said it is rarely enforced, if ever.

"The commonwealth is attempting to force the Desilets to violate their sincerely held religious beliefs," said Nikolas Nikas, representing the brothers. Nikas is an attorney with the American Center for Law and Justice, a Virginia group founded by religious broadcaster Pat Robertson which has taken on the case.

But Judith Beals, an assistant attorney general, said the renting of the apartment is a commercial activity, not a form of worship that is protected under the state constitution.

A night of fright and tears

This past weekend can be summed up in three words: Blood, sweat and tears. in a matter of two hours, my boyfriend destroyed a healthy, happy relationship because ot alcohol-related violence. These three natural elements preoccupied my body in sequence, and will be a painful memory for the rest of my life.

I write this in wishful hopes that guys on campus will read this and be able to say to themselves, "I am not like this person." Because someday all of us will fall in love and then happiness will reign over hatred. And unless you are a real alcoholic, beer guzzling will become a part ot your life that you tuck away for occasions only. Perhaps the story I tell is too personal for some of you to read, but because 50-or-so people watched it happen, I can consider this story as just a cleansing of an open wound.

"He had always been violent when he was drinking, but it was never more than a push or a tightening grip around my wrist. If summed up in a sentance, one might say, "Why didn't she leave him then?" Somehow, he made it seem like I deserved it every time, so let it be."

Suzanne M. Robitaille

The blood started to gush the moment my head smashed against the wall. He had taken his strong arm and grabbed my face before choosing a spot to settle it in. His heart had been drowned in alcohol after a long night uptown, and he had been ready to find me. When he walked into the party, he knew I was there. If he hadn't seen my car out front, then his conscience led him to me.

He had always been violent when he was drinking, but it was never more than a push or a tightening grip around my wrist. If summed up in a sentence, one might say, "Why didn't he leave him then?" Somehow, he made it seem like I deserved it every time, so I let it be.

But as we started to drink together more often, the degrading words would shoot out of his tongue like fire would from Satan. The playful pushes turned to shoves into the snow until one night I was knocked over backwards behind a chair, and another night I woke up with thumbprint bruises on my arms.

Finally my feet walked out on him, but my heart wouldn't budge. I loved to be loved, and when he was sober, he loved and treated me like an angel. I blamed the alcohol, I blamed myself, and I was too damn confident that he would never abuse me like he did last Saturday night.

I spent the next three hours at Health Services and arrived home with my best friend at 6 a.m. She is a godsend and I owe her a lifetime of gratitude. We had blood all over our clothes, and my long hair stunk of the bloody mixture. On the outside of my head were four ugly stitches, while in the inside churned hundreds of tormenting thoughts.

I rested a little but soon sat up in a pool of sweat. My brain was racing around and around. Why did he attack me? Did I deserve it? Again? Is it really over between us? I absorbed these thoughts in a state of sadness. I never slept again that night, and spent the next night roaming the halls of my dormitory. My body refused to sleep. My stomach felt nauseous, and I watched the Super Bowl in a confused state of shock and exhaustion.

My face has been soaked in salty, stinging tears since he hurt me but they were the unimportant ones. Those were just tears of physical pain, combined with the after-effects of the alcohol. The real tears rolled at nighttime, when everyone feels the loneliest.

I began to relax Monday afternoon, and writing about the experience has been an extreme release for me. I don't suppose he is at all upset, yet it is possible that he may be angered at the restraining order I placed against him Sunday night. Monday night he tried to place one against me, but the judge refused. Yet what good is a restraining order on a college campus?

It helps to think how much worse it could have been, and also to realize how many women have been subjected to this kind of treatment and have survived the emotional scars. I'm a very lucky statistic, I tell you. Sadly, others may join the club if he doesn't get help for his violent actions. My father called him and told him that. The police told him that. And in the eyes of his friends, or former friends, you can bet that after what they saw, they feel the same way.

Leftover phone messages

It has been a tough day of classes. You have spent four some odd hours locked up in classrooms, taking notes like a madman. You walk home, tired as hell. You get into the room. What is the first thing you reach for, anxiously and excitedly?

You have been out a party all night, whether you were at a friend's room or at a party. You're tired from whatever it is you did all night, yet you are still yearning for something. What is the first thing you do once you get in the room?

Andrew Bryce

Before I get some descriptive and possibly despicable and disgusting answers, what I am talking about are messages. Phone messages. First thing I do when I get in (usually) is check if that light is blinking.

Everybody likes messages. It shows that someone is actually making an attempt to contact you for something. There are many messages I'd like to send, but I don't have the appropriate destinations. So, I'll make use of this column space to relay messages to those who I can't reach.

To the person who gave me the sheets on how to conquer Mortal Kombat II. — Hey, thanks dude. Really. Picture this. I am walking through the arcade to head out. Not a big fan of video games, I walk by the large crowd of people gathered around MK II. I see this guy with sheets propped on the game, his eyes intent on the screen.

I stopped and proceeded to ask him what the sheets were for. He didn't answer me, because he was consumed in his game. Without his eyes leaving the screen, he gave me one of his extra handouts, and kept playing. I guess I could call them cheat sheets for Mortal Kombat II. Sheets on how to win a video game. I think I am missing something.

To Sy Becker, reporter and movie reviewer on News 22 — You are a cult hero here at UMass. Keep up the good work, Sy, especially your "Let's take a llllloooooookkk at the movies". Best line from a TV personality since Bob talked about how his Mattress Discount Warehouse chain was "growing and growing and growing... C'MON DOWN!".

To the people who installed the showers here in the dorms — Many times, I have gone to take a shower only to come back to the room with my scalp ripped off and my back filled with cuts. I never knew fire hoses were used as showers, too.

To the people at the Newman Center — Is there any truth to the rumor that they're going to change the name to the Smoking Center?

To those people who refuse to flush the toilet after disposing — I don't know if you were aware that there is a small handle you press down to get rid of the... stuff you leave. You should use it next time.

To the two guys I called "big bastards" in the elevator about a year and a half ago — I apologize. First of all, my original intention was not to call them big bastards.

Let me explain myself. I am in the elevator late at night, and the doors were about to close. Suddenly, this hand sticks through, opening the doors back up. Two tall guys join me. I felt awkard that nothing was being said at first, and, as a freshman just settling in, was eager to meet as many people as possible. I said hi to the guys. They didn't answer. So, I took it upon myself to say, looking up to them with a smile, "wow, you guys are big bastards."

Realizing I had not made the right choice of words, I then dropped my head in prayer that these two big bast.... guys would not kick my butt. I think they knew I didn't call them that for the true meaning of the word, because I did make it out of there without a struggle. I have to say, though, it was the longest seven floors I have ever experienced in riding elevators.

To coach John Calipari — During some games here on campus, you have had to get on the microphone to ask the fans to stop throwing things on the court, avoiding a possible technical foul. Next time that happens, try something different. Sing what you say. Or rap it. It'd make some of the blowouts all the more interesting. Go Cal, go Cal, go Cal...

Memories of a loved one

The recollections are spilled, like blood throughout my mind; It is difficult to collect them. Certainly I have many fond memories of my father. Since his sudden death last week, my remembrances have blurred into impressions of him. At first all I felt was shock and dis*belief*. Since then, I have been feeling a powerful sense of loss. I've tried to be strong, whatever that is, and to appreciate what my father meant to me. There has been a search for his values and for an understanding of the man. Though individual moments are cloudier now, the weight of his life has become much clearer. I can see him better now — he is in his entirety, completed and developed. His life over, there is no progress to wait for, no amendments left to make. The deal has been struck.

"A dreamer, my father wished for a world where happiness could exist. He made it clear with his friendly optimism that being miserable was not going to be fashionable with him. It was as if misery was the possession of a precious few, those who deserved or needed to feel badly. Being upset or worried without good cause was viewed as taking away someone else's much needed pain, as real as taking a poor man's bread. He could give you a hundred reasons why tomorrow could be better. He taught me to hope, to have faith. And there it was, really. He gave the world a smile, no matter what the world gave him.

A dreamer, my father wished for a world where happiness could exist. He made it clear with his friendly optimism that being miserable was not going to be fashionable with him. It was as if misery was the possession of a precious few, those who deserved or needed to feel badly. Being upset or worried without good cause was viewed as taking away someone else's much needed pain, as real as taking a poor man's bread. He could give you a hundred reasons why tomorrow could be better. He taught me to hope, to have faith. And there it was, really. He gave the world a smile, no matter what the world gave him.

Most everyone attains some measures of success in life. My father pushed me to accomplish more than I thought I could. He showed me how to expect more of myself. And when I achieved a goal, he instructed me how to behave with dignity. A winner didn't brag, or gloat, or taunt. The winner was modest, and he respected the efforts of others. It is easy for me to see that my father was a champion in life.

He cared about more than just himself, or the size of his paycheck, or what kind of flashy car he could buy. He cared about the things that endure— family, friends and a sense of morality all held his attention, and that attention never wavered. He didn't preach. He simply lived by his code of beliefs. His most prominent value was a belief that people are basically good, and deserve respect and help. He was always the first to do what he could. I'd like to have even half of his grace and compassion.

He faced more than he should have. Three heart attacks were followed by a quadruple bypass. That was eight years ago. Since then, he has helped his wife recuperate from a paralyzing stroke and learned he had diabetes. His health made it difficult to do the things he loved most, including playing with his grandson. And yet, he never once complained. He never asked why he was unlucky, he just made the best of it. It seems nothing could break his spirit.

Somewhere, there are a thousand tomorrows. Maybe these memories will begin to help, not to haunt. For forever is a long time, I had better get used to it. But I wonder where the unspoken words go. What advice would he give now? It seems we are works unfinished, unpolished. All that's left in this world is a spirit and a darkness.

Unfortunately, we only hear eulogies at funerals. Why do we wait until people die to tell them how much they mean, how important they are, how much they are loved? Praise is a coward, drawn out only by the certainty of death. And when we finally do speak, it is to embalmed ears. I didn't know how to tell my Dad I loved him, and I surely can't whisper to the dead.

Letters to the Editor

The military must have high standards

To the editor:

I am writing in response to Martin Brown's article "Military not for the innocent [Collegian, Feb. 2]." I have been in the military for ten years, originally serving on active duty aboard a ballistic missile submarine, and now serving as a rifle platoon leader in the Army National Guard.

Mr. Brown must realize that the military is not a social program created to employ all Americans. In order to maintain the high standards required, only select people are eligible to serve, and part of the selection process is boot camp. The drill instructor's job is to find people who cannot deal with the military's every day pressures and remove them from the system before their actions kill others. It seems that Mr. Trask had emotional problems that were not detected during the original screening process but were detected by the drill instructor.

Mr. Brown's experiences were no different than those that I saw in boot camp and officer candidate school. The question that has to be asked is if Mr. Trask's possible actions under stress would be detrimental to others serving with him.

Regarding the submarine service, only the Navy's top 10 percent are eligible to attend submarine school, the first step in serving aboard a submarine. One third of those who start the school do not graduate. Another 10 percent are removed from submarines after graduation but before they earn the designation "qualified in submarines".

Although I am sorry that some of the sailors I knew were not able to succeed, I also know that they lacked a necessary element that is required when any mistake could cause hundreds of deaths and cost millions in property damage. Given that, I felt that their removal was fair to all.

The continuation of Mr. Trask's military service would have been detrimental to all who served with him, and it appears that his removal was justified. After all, how comfortable would a patient be if he was told that, under any standards, his surgeon would have flunked out of medical school, but, since the school did not want to hurt his feelings, they let him graduate? In a society moving toward programs that limit competition in order the protect others' emotions, it should be reassuring to all that the military is still maintaining standards.

Is global warming all that horrible?

To the editor:

That surely was some cold spell last week! My question is: Whatever happened to global warming?

If the alarmists are right in claiming that all the global warming they are so worried about is caused by "greenhouse gases," we desperately need more of them!

One of the most effective greenhouse gases is water vapor; it makes clouds. When it clouds up on a winter night, it doesn't get nearly as cold as when it clears off and our heat takes off for outer space.

And when it clouds up on a hot summer day, it doesn't get nearly as hot as when it clears off and the sun bakes us all. So an increase in greenhouse gases produces winter nights that are not as cold and summer days that are not as hot. Is that bad?

I realize that all this might be discouraging the other politicians who are calling for reducing the greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000. But if we don't need to do it, we won't need all those regulations with big penalties attached, and we won't need a sharp increase in taxes to pay for enforcing them!

So sorry!

Is tuition too expensive?

The University of Massachusetts is facing another round of budget cuts which could lead to another increase in tuition and fees. UMass/Amherst is already the second-most expensive public university in the country.

What do you think about the issue of tuition hikes? Tuition retention? A statewide sales tax earmarked for education? What can we do to solve the budget crisis?

Put your thoughts in the form of a letter and deliver it to the Collegian Opinion page by 3 p.m. today. Letters should be typed and kept to a maximum of 400 words.

Chinese culture explored

Chinese Cultural Night
Campus Center Auditorium
February 5, 1994

Although the festivities that took place at the Chinese cultural event in celebration of the Chinese New Year Saturday night were amidst the concrete walls of the Campus Center instead of the beautiful Chinese countryside, the evening's events enthralled audience members, young and old.

Alongside the variety of dances which were performed were several energetic music ensembles and an impressive martial art display.

The auditorium was decorated with red banners and colorful lanterns in an attempt to create an atmosphere similar to that of China during this joyous time of the year.

In ancient times, the Chinese thought the New Year was a ferocious beast who came out once a year to eat people.

The beast was allegedly scared of the color red, so it became tradition that red be worn and displayed, and firecrackers lit in order to scare off the beast.

New Years Day was a time to be with the family and celebrate the warding off of the beast.

"I don't really like this tradition – everything is red. Sometimes it drives me crazy," electrical engineering graduate student Wei Chun Chang said.

The abundance of red in the decor and elaborate costumes flooding the auditorium provided the performers, many of whom had traveled long distances to attend, the perfect atmosphere to intrigue and mesmerize audience members.

M.I.T. student Tung Ching, displayed his mastery of the Chinese form of martial arts derived from mimicking the circular forearm movements of the preying mantis.

There was a demonstration of tai chi, a graceful, ballet– like martial art form. Several martial artists who study different forms broke thick wooden boards with assorted hand strikes and kicks, after a breathtaking exhibition of sword techniques.

Dances were performed with props such as feather fans, ribbons and a large lion mask and train, and the audience participated by solving riddles picked out of lanterns and were granted prizes.

The performances were wrapped up with folk songs sung by the Chinese choir and Chinese cooking demonstrations.

"I'm very proud that we're such a small club and we could run such an event," Producer and

New book offers tips for women to keep safe in dangerous world

By TROY L. MERRICK
Collegian Staff

Street Sense For Women
Louis R. Mizell
Berkley Books

A guide dedicated to educating women toward better self– protection practices, Street Sense for Women has recently been put out by a personal security expert, sending an essential message that many people, women in particular, need when they underestimate the world around them and figure "it can't happen to me."

Louis R. Mizell, Jr., a former special agent and intelligence officer with the U.S. Department of State and president of Mizell and Co., an international security group specializing in preventing crime and terrorism, doesn't give hand–to–hand combat techniques or karate lessons.

In fact, in many situations, such as when an attacker wants her purse, Mizell cautions a woman to cede her possessions rather than face physical harm as well.

Instead, using a grim variety of past cases where women were harmed or killed in a plethora of felonies, he wants women to know both the wealth of tricks that criminals use to get the better of their victims, and some methods of lessening their chances of becoming another statistic on a police blotter.

One such example of a violent crime, the senseless gang– raping and brutal beating of a 29–year–old Wellesley College graduate as she jogged through New York's Central Park, made the headlines across the nation. Mizell commented that the case "thrust the word 'wilding' into our vocabulary."

In listing ways of reducing the risk of attack while jogging, for example, Mizell states that while women needn't give up an exercise they enjoy, they must consider one or more of the following: running during the day with plenty of pedestrian traffic, varying their routine, locking their doors when they leave, carrying an airhorn, and being accompanied by a dog. Pit bulls are cool.

One woman jogger, upon being clutched in a bearhug from the front by a would–be mugger or rapist, bit the tip of the man's nose off. Hopefully that individual now knows not to try to harm others in the future, but Mizell preaches habits that thwart crimes before they get to such a point.

Other areas, besides jogging, which he delves into are fake "repairmen" and "flower delivery men" who carjack, extending to the realm of fake parking valets and the bump– and–rob ploy, where someone rearends a woman's vehicle, and when she comes out to inspect the damage, her car is stolen.

Mizell also uncovers attacks at automatic teller machines and pay telephones, hotel security, phony cops (as if there aren't enough already), fake photographers and pickpockets.

To show the combination of how defiant some criminals are and how easily tricked some women can be, Mizell cites how certain rape and robbery victims didn't suspect anything when the "postman" showed up at their home at night or on Sunday.

Many people (not just women) are also duped when someone seemingly genuine asks to use the phone or sell something. These evil individuals have committed acts such as rape, robbery, murder, kidnapping, child molestation and so forth, many times because they were able to survey the house while they conjured up a convincing story such as a disabled car, auto accident and the like.

Avoiding deep analytical data, the book cuts to the chase and gives a few pages to each situation where an offense against a woman (some, such as home security and pickpockets apply to everyone, but must be included in crimes against women nonetheless) could occur, although many times one crime leads to another.

After a numbing profile of a few incidents of cruelty in many of which cost women their lives, the book lists series of tactics, from the common sense to the clever ruse, for women to remember when in a potentially dangerous situation and keep one step ahead of the criminal.

Mizell continually repeats that while he doesn't want to seem overreactive and melodramatic, his

Author Min to read in S. Hadley

By AMY S. BURNS
Collegian Staff

Anchee Min will read from her autobiography Red Azalea tonight at the Odyssey Bookshop at the Village Commons in South Hadley.

In her book, Min gives an account of her life growing up in China during the Mao era and of her brief film career towards the end of his regime. Min's style is simple, direct and personal. She allows us to understand China's Cultural Revolution through a human perspective.

Min does not really examine national politics, instead she tells us what happened to the people. We see how Communist propaganda infiltrated every corner of society. Because Min was born under the Maoist regime, its teachings were deeply rooted in her mind. Like the other children she memorized Mao's poetry, sung song from Madam Mao's operas and when she finished high school ash went to work as a peasant on a farm.

The best thing about Mi's book is that she does not directly critical the Maoist government. She just observes what happens to her and around her. She lets us see for ourselves the government induced horrors of her lifetime. We see how her family Is torn apart. We are able to feel the hopelessness of life on the work farm. Min makes China's Cultural Revolution real, not just another page in a history book about a land far away.

Anchee Min, author of Red Azalea, published by Pantheon will conduct a reading at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley on Wednesday, February 8 at 7:30 p.m.

risk-reducing procedures are good food for thought. Five thousand murders, over 106,000 forcible rapes (one every five minutes, that figure not counting rapes that go underreported), 3 million burglaries and over a million muggings, all in one year, are hard to ignore.

Not everyone walks the path of the straight and narrow, and the warped mentality of many criminals is focused on the stupidity of their victims, and the reasoning that they "should've done this or shouldn't have done that, and it wouldn't have been so easy."

A woman jogger managed to condense the book's mission perfectly with the simple statement, "We don't need to be the scared, shivering gender. We need to be free. But we also need to be sensible, cautious, and careful."

Program Director Ching Hsing Wong said.

With a wide array of traditional arts brought over primarily from Taiwan, the UMass Chinese Student Club succeeded in sharing a part of the Asian culture with an audience that exceeded a count of 700.

"I loved the program and hope that they will have it every year," University of Massachusetts – Lowell student Tina Fu said.

What's on HSCN this week

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Here's what's on HSCN for the week of February 9-15.

Adventures of Milo & Otis: Cats n' dogs that talk.
Home Alone: That kid stars in this kiddie blockbuster.
The Little Prince: Based on the French children's book.
To Catch A Thief: Hitchcock goes to the French Riviera.
Tall Guy: Emma Thompson's first big role. Clever, witty.
Sleepless In Seattle: Synthetic romantic comedy.
An Affair To Remember: Sleepless is based on this oldie.
Grand Canyon: Overrated, pretentious, aimless soap opera.
Harold & Maude: Cult film about older lady/younger guy.
Book of Love: Sex-crazed teen comedy for horny idiots.
Cliffhanger: Sly hangs off a mountain shirtless. Yay.
Enchanted April: Stuffy British women go on vacation.
The Firm: Tom Cruise in entertaining lawyer thriller.
Jennifer 8: Silly thriller where Andy Garcia overacts.
Last Days of Chez Nous: A French family portrait.
League of Their Own: Funny, but too sentimental.
On the Waterfront: Brando wants to be a "contendah."
Patriot Games: Harrison Ford in okay political thriller.
Phantom of Paradise: De Palma helms cheesy B-movie.
Play it Again, Sam: Woody Allen's sly romantic comedy.

The Far Side By Gary Larson

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Show how adept you are at handling complicated situations; VIPs will be impressed by your quiet competence. Those who work hard for success are likely to achieve it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Look for a bargain if investing in real estate. Improve or renovate any properties you hold. A child may leave the nest. Be supportive, not clingy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Give your mate and other allies all the leeway they need to work on your behalf. This is the surest way to obtain results. Passion runs high tonight. Be discreet. Protect your privacy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are on the track to success, both professionally and personally. A talk with someone influential will exceed your wildest expectations. Romantic partner likes to keep you guessing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Another person's limitations could be your opportunity. Grab for the brass ring! Dressing to impress will help you turn heads. Link up with important people and compliment their achievements. They will love it!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Self-improvement activities are favored now. Observe the social amenities while pursuing your career and business goals. Use an original approach with member of opposite sex.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Welcome competition; it gives you the incentive to forge ahead. Go after that special assignment or award you want. Marketing a clever idea or product could put an end to cash shortages.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let your instincts guide you in social situations and employment matters. Show your appreciation for someone who has stood by you through thick and thin. A new alliance will grow stronger as time passes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Think about new ways to reach your financial goals. A confident, positive attitude will produce great results. It pays to advertise special products and services. Let others know of your capabilities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your personal stock will soar if you keep your standards high. A meeting of like-minded people produces a startling agreement. Team effort will boost profits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Flexibility is essential in romance. What is private should be kept private. A loss could result if you are too eager to confide in others. Do not count on someone's being discreet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your wit and charm give you an edge over the competition. A philosophical outlook wins you a valuable ally. Give your home or office a face-lift. Add some artistic touches to your home.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team returns to action tonight in the Curry Hicks Cage when the Minutewomen take on Atlantic 10 rival St. Joseph's.

Women's basketball hosts St. Joseph's

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

Had the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team sent postcards from its latest trip, the one from Philadelphia would have been of mixed emotions, while the one from Rhode Island a sign of relief.

The Minutewomen (10–7, 4–3 in Atlantic 10) went on the road during the past week, going 2–1 on the road trip. Tonight, they head back to the happy hunting grounds called the Curry Hicks Cage to face St. Joseph's for the second time in 10 days. Tip off is at 7 p.m.

The Philly trip started out well for UMass. On Jan. 29, the Minutewomen defeated Temple in OT, 57–52. The Minutewomen then were forced to hang around in Philly for a couple of more days, playing St. Joseph's on Jan. 31. UMass, up 27–16 at the half, was outscored by 12 in the second half before losing to the Hawks 58–57.

Now, after a doubie OT win over the University of Rhode Island on Saturday night, 85–80, the Minutewomen will face the Hawks once again.

As of Feb. 1, St. Joseph's was ranked first in the nation in scoring defense, holding its opponents to an average of 53.3 points per game. Only three teams — Penn State, St. Bonaventure (twice) and Rutgers — have scored 60+ versus the Hawks. The Minutewomen hope to avenge the disappointing loss that occurred just days ago at the hands of St. Joe's.

"The first half was great, yet in the second half, we let them back in it," said Coach O'Brien. "(St. Joe's) will try and take Octavia (Thomas) and Melissa (Gurile) out of the game, so it is up to the others to step up."

Thomas (second in A–10 with 18.3 ppg, and second with 10.2 rpg) has been top gun for the Minutewomen all season, recording 11 double–doubies in 17 games (including seven straight since the West Virginia game back on Jan. 22). It is not far–fetched to say that Thomas has become an All America candidate.

Gurile (14.6 ppg, 7.6) has also played well, despite getting double–teamed most of the season. O'Brien has given advice to Gurile on the opposition and the pressure she has faced as of late. O'Brien said instiilling more confidence was a key to Gurile's development.

"Melissa is playing hard," said O'Brien. "She was worrying a bit too much about herself. She is getting a lot of attention. it's tough on her at times. I just told her, 'you gotta play hard'. The last two games, she has played the best defense I ever seen her play."

Thomas and Gurile are not alone. in the URI game, the two freshmen, Crystal Carroli and Beth Kuzmeski, led the Minutewomen in scoring. Carroll scored a career–high 23 points and grabbed 9 rebounds, while Kuzmeski chipped in with 18. For her efforts, Carroii won A–10 Rookie of the Week.

"(Carroll) came up big," said O'Brien. "She worked hard, and put the bail in the basket. She is starting to understand what she is capable of doing."

One of the weaknesses for the young Minutewomen squad is second half piay. Many times over the course of the season, UMass have squandered leads in the last 20 minutes of the game.

"Good teams make adjustments," explains O'Brien. "We have played some great teams that don't quit. I'm not mad about It. We just have a little more consistent."

NHL needs Lemieux

The NHL's best player may be calling it a career. A frustrated and aching Mario Lemieux said that if his back doesn't improve this season he will give retirement serious consideration this summer.

It's been tough for Lemieux, who in addition to back problems battled back from Hodgkin's disease to win the scoring title last year. Lemieux has been a class act and an inspiration through all of it. Sports needs more people like Lemieux. Here's to his return.

When the Nordiques traded Eric Lindros to the Flyers before last season, most of the hockey experts claimed that the deal would turn Quebec into the class of the Northeast Division and that the Flyers would be gutted. Instead, it appears that the Flyers may have pulled off one of the biggest steals in history.

Lindros has just begun to fulfill all of the expectations and is the cornerstone on which the Flyers are rebuilding. in only 39 games this season, Lindros has 26 goals and 27 assists. If he can continue to step up, the boys from Broad Street may finally make their long awaited return to the post–season.

BETWEEN THE PIPES
Matt Vautour on the NHL

The Nordiques, however, are plummeting. Steve Duchesne held out for most of the year before finally being deait to St. Louis. Mike Ricci hasn't lived up to his offensive potential and Ron Hextall, who was billed as the goal-tending savior, has been sent to Long Island.

With the Black Bears of Maine playing subpar hockey and the Mighty Ducks still in contention for a playoff spot, watch for Paul Kariya to turn pro following his stint as an Olympian.

Jon Casey has earned a stay of execution in Boston after two weeks of attack from this space. The former North Star may turn into a healthy pick–up yet.

With the Olympics right around the corner, it appears that it would take another miracle for the US to bring home a medal of any color from Lilliehammer. With center Derek Plante staying in Buffaio instead of joining Coach Tim Taylor's squad at the games, the team is iacking a star to lead them in Norway. Barring an incredible performance from goalies Mike Dunham and Garth Snow, the US will be empty handed for its third straight Olympics.

With the Blackhawks stuck in fifth place in the intensely competitive Central Division, they are considering signing Michael Jordan, who has never played hockey or even skated, but is confident that he can play in the NHL.

You think Tonya Harding is wishing she played hockey. a sport where hitting your competitor in the knee is punishable only by a two–minute minor?

Tonya Harding: the Dale Hunter of figure skating.

Three short weeks until the "Between the Pipes" intramural showdown featuring my partner Mike DiLorenzo at center for the Hockey ram battling The Blades of Steel, with yours truly manning the blue line. Stay tuned.

Edgar Padilia is an atypical freshman basketball player — he's fearless, he is not afraid to pull the trigger on the long range jumper, he has the ability to run the Massachusetts offense and he can play defense.

But the 6–foot–1–inch guard from Springfieid sometimes feels and plays like a first–year player — very tentative, worrying about making the big mistake.

Take last Sunday's 67–64 loss against Kentucky, when Padiiia ran the Minuteman offense in the final minutes and Massachusetts came up empty on the scoreboard. Massachusetts Coach John Calipari did not place the blame on Padilla. Calipari took responsibility himseif for the ineffectiveness of the offense down the stretch.

"The problem we had was," Calipari said, "we had our freshman point guard with the bali and he kept pulling it out with 12 seconds to go [on the shot clock] and you can't. You can't reset with 12 seconds to go.

"But, you know what, he's a freshman. That's not his fault, that's my fault for having him at that position, at that point in the game."

"I got a little nervous because you don't want to throw the bali away," said Padilla. "I think I should have let [junior point guard] Derek [Kellogg] play the point because he has more experience than me. Maybe that's what we should have done, but we didn't."

Despite the loss, Padiila played extremely well against one of the best guards in America, Kentucky's Travis Ford. He scored a career–high 11 points, dished out five assists and talied three steals. On defense, he helped in shutting Ford out from three–point range, a feat that isn't done often. It was a superior performance for someone, especially a freshman, who was thrust into the starting line–up just three games ago.

Massachusetts' loss at Cincinnati on January 27 was a turning point for Padiia. During the contest, he took a knee to the head, forcing him to get stitches above his right eye in the locker room after the contest.

Before that, however, Massachusetts junior starting guard and second–leading scorer Mike Williams collapsed due to heat exhaustion, left the contest and has been sidelined since then. in stepped Padilia, yet again replacing Williams in the starting line–up.

STEVEN PEDULLA/ COLLEGIAN

Edgar Padilla, seen here working on Kentucky's All– America candidate Travis Ford, has excelled as the starting guard in place of Mike Williams, who is set to return tomorrow.

Back in December, Calipari decided to bench Williams, who missed practice, for two straight games against Central Connecticut State and Holy Cross and Padiia got his first two career starts against the Blue Devils and the Crusaders.

Padilia responded in place of Williams over the last two weeks, playing extremeiy well against Rhode Island (nine points, seven assists), Florida State (nine points) and versus the Wildcats last time out. He said the experience he has gained is tremendous.

Now, though, Williams is scheduled to return to action Thursday night when Massachusetts travels to the Providence (R.i.) Civic Center to take on Rhode island, and Padilla, soon enough, will find himself as a back–up again.

"The great news for Mike Williams is he sees we can win without him, because now he's going to come back, and I told Edgar and Carmeio [Travieso], 'I feel bad for you when he comes back', because he is able to dominate them," Caiipari said.

"This experience is going to help me a lot when Mike comes back," said Padilla, "because I'm going to come in off the bench with no pressure on me. I'll be abie to come out and just play hard. it's going to be a plus."

And before too long, the fear will belong to Padiila's opponents and not Padilla. He won't be a freshman forever.

A true "Blue Chip" column, but hey, I'm not biased

I'm ready to go off.

•Baseball. Jordan.

Baseball. Jordan. I still haven't gotten use to the fact that Michael Jordan may play major league baseball. My first thought about it was that it was a farce. My next thought was that if he has the chance to try, than why not? My next thought was that regardless of all the crap that has been tossed around about it as of late, the whole scenario will be decided in April. By then, the curious world will find out if

Andrew Bryce

Michael Jordan is cut out to play baseball. i can wait patiently until then. As for my feeiings about it? Follow your dream, Michael, if playing baseball is your dream. By the way, I thought he wanted to spend more time with his family?

•I apologize for anxiously looking ahead to next season, but it's scary to think that all but one player will be back from this year's Minutemen basketball team — not to mention the addition of Tyrone Weeks and forward Innus Norvilie from Hargrove (N.C.) Military Academy.

•The most dominant player in coiiege basketbail? Glenn Robinson of Purdue. I see him being the next dominant non–center in the NBA. Yet, I was the same guy who thought Jack Clark would win the American League MVP the year he was signed by the Red Sox.

•When Kevin McHale had his number retired at the Gahden last week, I wondered if he was still truly underappreciated. Being on the same team as one Larry Bird, McHale couldn't heip but be a bit overshadowed. If there was one characteristic I'd remember McHale for, it would be his low–post moves. Best low post player I have ever seen.

•First of all, I am a Knicks fan. Second of all, I am a Patrick Ewing fan. With all this in mind, I'm going to say something that may sound biased. Patrick Ewing has the best jump shot of any center currentiy in the NBA. I'll be the first one to admit that Hakeem Olajawon is the best all around center, but it's Ewing with the edge in terms of outside shooting. I attended a Knicks game this past weekend against the Magic, and Ewing hit the 15 and 20 footers with ease.

•As Emmitt went, so went the Cowboys.

•To all you Minutemen football fans, mark this date off on your caiendar: Nov. 12 against defending national champions Youngstown State. At home. In Division I–AA, you cannot get much better than Y.S.

•Shouid Tonya Harding be able to compete in the Olympics? i'd like to answer that, yet I am utteriy disgusted by the whoie situation, and could care less whether a possiblen convict is able to skate or not. What I want to know is if there is going to be a TripleCast for the Winter Olympics. Hell, it was so successful during the summer of 1992. Imagine watching the entire curiing event from start to finish.

•Remember Roiler Derby?

•When Bob Cousy, former Boston Celtic and a member of the Hall of Fame, was in his prime, he was the highest paid player in the NBA. His salary? $30,000 a year. To put it in proper perspectlve, Shaquille O'Neal makes $46,000 a game. I saw Cousy and Shaq at the press conference for the movie "Blue Chips" this past weekend. When asked if he was upset that basketball players were making so much more money compared to when he played, Cousy replied, "I was fortunate to play a child's game for money, so I don't feel resentment." Good point, Cous, a point that many, many athletes fail to realize these days.

•The Knicks possess the best defense in the NBA as well as the best head coach in Pat Riley. And I am not being biased.

Third World Caucus dismisses senator

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Third World Caucus overwhelmingly voted to remove senator Alan Weinfeld from his Caucus senate position last night because of his actions at a Dec. 8 Student Government Association meeting in which the SGA was debating the merits of bringing controversial minister Louis Farrakhan to speak at UMass.

The Third World Caucus is the part of the SGA that works to promote the interests of students of color.

Farrakhan is believed by some to be anti–Semitic, anti– White and anti–Catholic. In the mist of the Dec. 8 meeting where the debate was taking place, Weinfeld, a Jew, distributed pieces of paper with excerpts from past Farrakhan speeches. He allegedly passed out the sheets of paper to White senators only.

His decision not give any of the sheets to the students of color at the meeting caused Senator Lynn Robitaille to bring up the motion to remove Weinfeld from the Third World Caucus.

Robitaille said Weinfeld's actions at the meeting went against his job as a Caucus senator to represent students of color on campus. Weinfeld is the president of the Hillel Foundation, a pro–active Jewish group on campus.

"Alan's actions were completely unacceptable. People left the room crying that night because they were denied the pieces of paper because of the color of their skin," Robitaille said. "Alan obviously did an excellent job of standing up for the rights of the Jewish community, and we commend him for that. But his job is to represent all the constituents of the Third World Caucus, not to solely represent the Jewish community. He hurt people in that room, whether he realizes it or not."

"I don't think Alan is a super racist, but I think he doesn't understand people of color and I think he is scared of them," SGA President David Nunez, "The cause of racism is fear and ignorance, and i saw fear in Alan Weinfeld in dealing with the tough Farrakhan issue. He has a lot to learn about representing people of color."

Weinfeld said he believes the real reason he has been removed from the senate is his anti–Farrakhan stance. He also said he did not know everyone at the meeting had to receive a copy of the sheets and he apologized for any hurt he had caused.

Other defenders of Weinfeld pointed to his history of working for the interests of minorities on campus. Weinfeld has worked with the Black Student Union and the Black Jewish Relations committee at Hillel.

"[Weinfeld's removal] is because of his passionate and relentless effort to stand up consistently for the Jewish community," said Hillel staff member Steve Sparling. "Alan's actions at the senate were in no way grounds for dismissal. He has consistently carried the torch against bigotry, not only aimed at Jews but against all peoples."

"Alan has been a proactive member of the senate, I don't see how you can get rid of someone with such a good track record," said Senator Jamie Bearse. "Farrakhan was a hot issue and sometimes we don't do things that are right. But the good he has done for the senate should outweigh this issue."

Martin Jones, a Hiilel Black Jewish Relations committee member at Hiliel, warned Weinfeld's removal

SGA votes to require petitions for budgets

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association passed a motion last night to eliminate three line items from the SGA budget for the fiscal year 1995.

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted that three student agencies which currently go through no formal budget process must submit a budget for the fiscal year 1995.

"It's all part of fiscal accountability," said Jamie Bearse, a student senator from Field residence hall who presented the motion. "All Registered Student Organizations have to petition for a budget. We just want to make it fair."

University Productions and Concerts, the Distinguished Visitors Program, and the Board of Governors will no longer receive a fixed amount of money per student as funding.

"Currently UPC, DMV and BOG are what is called line item, said Jeremy Hathaway, Chairman of the Budget Committee. "They get their funding on a per head basis."

Out of the 15,938 undergraduate students on campus, the UPC will get $5.50 for those people, DVP gets $2.75, and the BOG gets $5 according to Hathaway.

The move to eliminate the line items was in response to the projected $146,089 deficit of the Student Activities Trust Fund. For the last three years the trust fund has been spending more money than it has been taking in, according to Hathaway.

"For years our trust fund has gone down, while cost has gone up, just because the state has backed out on us," said Matt Pavesi, president of the Student Senate.

"Compared to the other trust funds, you have seen your Authority Fee go up, which supposedly takes care of all our buiidings, Auxiliary Services, Health Services go up, but our trust fund hasn't increased its fees," said Pavesi.

Group protests tuition, fee hikes

By JUSTIN DOYLE

A coalition of student organizations and labor unions at the University of Massachusetts held a rally yesterday to begin a campaign to fight projected tuition and fee increases.

About 75 students, citizens and business owners attended the noon rally in the Cape Cod lounge of the Campus Center to oppose an increase in fees and tuition. The rally was co– sponsored by the Graduate Employee Organization, the Undergraduate Student Government Association, SEIU Local 509, and the Leadership Coalition.

Speakers included students faculty, and businessmen. The focus of the rally to gain support in the campaign to stop budget cuts and tuition increases.

"The University should reduce tuition not raise it," said Charles Lenchner a speaker at the rally and the president of the Radical Student Union. "I'm part of the task force on accessibility, and I was against demanding a zero percent increase, I want it to be decreased."

"We need to demand that tuition be lowered progressively at the same rate that it was raised in the last six years," said Lenchner.

The University plans to increase tuition again this year while receiving $7 to $10 million cuts to the University's budget from the state legislature.

"The University of Massachusetts is the second most expensive public university in the country and is already inaccessible to many of the working and middle class families it is supposed to serve," said Wendy Mataya co– speaker of GEO

Serbs vow to oust guns from capital

By TONY SMITH
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs parried the threat of NATO air strikes with a promise Wednesday to withdraw their big guns from around Sarajevo and put them under U.N. monitoring.

The Serb agreement, announced by the U.N. commander for Bosnia, came as NATO neared a decision in Brussels to unleash air strikes within 10 days unless Serbs removed their artillery from the hiils around the Bosnian capital.

There were no signatures on the Serb agreement, or on an accord on a cease–fire beginning Thursday at noon. Bosnia's Muslim–led government said Bosnian Serbs had five days to comply.

It appeared the Serbs might be stalling for time to wait for world outrage over a weekend massacre of civilians at a Sarajevo market to subside.

Saturday's mortar attack, which killed 68 people and wounded 142, prompted NATO to consider air strikes to stop the relentless shelling of Sarajevo by Bosnian Serb gunners.

Dozens of cease–fires have collapsed in the past 22 months of fighting. The new U.N. commander for Bosnia, Gen. Sir Michael Rose, said this one was different because the Serbs were under greater international pressure and had consented to withdraw weaponry.

"This is perhaps the beginning of a process of return to normality for the people of Sarajevo, who have shown so much indomitable spirit and such quality of human nature," Rose said.

He acknowledged it was a "very small start on a very large problem."

"I think it is a game by the Serbs to avoid punishment for all they have done so far, for the massacre a couple of days ago, and for what they have been doing around Sarajevo and all across Bosnia–Herzegovina, " said Gen. Jovan Divjak, a Serb loyal to the Muslim–led Bosnian government.

The Bosnian Serb fighters denied it was their shell that hit the market.

The talks in Sarajevo were attended by Divjak and Bosnian Serb Gen. Manoljo Milovanovic, the second–ranking Bosnian Serb officer. Rose shuttled between them in separate rooms at Sarajevo airport.

Little has changed for months along the front lines surrounding Sarajevo. Serb fighters control 70 percent of Bosnia and are trying to pressure the Bosnian government into a peace deal that would divide the republic along ethnic lines. The government has refused, saying the one–third of the republic it would receive is insufficient.

New talks are scheduled Thursday in Geneva.

Bosnian Serbs could risk losing the land they've seized if NATO acted after months of empty threats. With international pressure buiidling, the Serbs agreed to a framework for withdrawing the guns while detaiis are worked out over time.

A draft NATO demand under discussion Wednesday in Brussels would require the Serbs to move their heavy weaponry 13 miles from Sarajevo.

Serb long–rang artillery has a range of 18–25 miles, and most of the damage done in Sarajevo has been by weapons not covered by the NATO plan.

U.S., Japan to launch effort to fight AIDS

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States and Japan plan to announce a muiti–biiiion–dollar AiDS and popuiation–control effort and joint initiatives on environment and technology this week, in hopes of casting a positive light on what may be a stormy trade summit.

Crucial talks aimed at narrowing America's huge deficit with Japan appeared deadlocked Wednesday only two days before President Clinton and Japanese Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa were to meet to sign an initial agreement.

There was still hope for a last–minute breakthrough to salvage discussions, but officials reported both sides were still far apart on the key matter in dispute — how to measure progress in opening Japan's market to U.S. goods.

While talks had been progressing among lower level officiais earlier in the week, a U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that the American side walked away from the table Tuesday night, contending that the discussions were at an impasse.

Although the main focus of Clinton's summit with Hosokawa on Friday is expected to be trade, the two nations aiso have worked out a package of agreements mostly reiating to environmental issues.

The agreement on AIDS and population is aimed at helping poor countries slow their birth rates and combat AIDS. Japan will commit $3 billion by the end of the decade and the United States will pledge $9 billion, said U.S. and Japanese officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Arafat, Peres settle issues over security

By G.G. LaBELLE
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Yasser Arafat and Shimon Peres, Israel's foreign minister, reached agreement Wednesday on some critical security issues that have stalled the Israeli–PLO peace accord.

> "Another big milestone has been achieved today."
> –President Bill Clinton

Peres said he and the PLO chairman had settled "five or six of the most complicated issues" involved in turning over control of the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho to the Palestinians.

Peres added, "We didn't complete our work."

The final deal is to be negotiated between Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

The two sides were haggling over control of the crossings from the autonomous Palestinian areas to Egypt and Jordan, security for Jewish settlers who remain in Gaza and how much land around Jericho would be ceded to Palestinian control.

Among the issues left for Arafat and Rabin to decide was the size of the Jericho area, Peres said.

Arafat said the new pact was "a very important step to implement the agreement from paper to the ground.

"We can say that Palestine — and the name of Palestine — has returned to the map of the Middle East," he added.

Peres and Arafat initiated a 21–page document, complete with maps, at a ceremony hosted by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak at the end of three days of talks.

As the two were speaking in Cairo, members of the World Jewish Congress in Washington got word of the agreement from President Clinton.

"Another big milestone has been achieved today, " Clinton said.

The budget crisis threatens the quality of undergraduate teaching on the UMass campus. According to Mataya, initial forecasts indicate 25 to 40 percent reduction of teaching assistants in many academic departments.

"Every student on this campus must understand the urgency of this situation and feel committed to changing it for the better, because these cuts will have a devastating impact on our education and our future," Mataya said.

Ford speaks on women, politics

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

"You have to be very tough and determined if you want to succeed in the world of politics," said Mary L. Ford, the Mayor of Northampton, who spoke at Smith College Tuesday night about women, politics and social change.

Ford, like everyone else, had to climb the political ladder to gain success. Before becoming mayor, she was the President of the City Council of Northhampton which, Ford said, shaped her career because she had the chance to observe the city.

Not only has Ford achieved a first term as mayor but also a second. As mayor, Ford is responsible for every aspect of her designated city. She has succeeded in stabilizing the budget, improved financial management, and advised the police and fire stations as well as the neighboring schools.

According to Ford, women who are campaigning actually get counseled regarding their wardrobe. For example, there is a growing number of political woman figures who wear red which symbolizes power and prestige, Ford said.

"This is all part of image and leadership," Ford said. "For some reason wearing red gives me strength."

The only negative aspect of being a public politi-

Loans available to students

Dean's office may be able to help in an emergency

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

College time can be extremely difficult for many students financially. Between paying for tuition, food and other necessities, a person can be bogged down with bills to pay.

Many students can relate being in a situation when the $45 phone bill needs to be paid, or money is needed to get a bus ticket home.

The Dean's Office at the University of Massachusetts has emergency loans they can give students in order to help them in their financial difficulties.

These loans are given to students who request a certain amount of money — usually a small quantity — and are able to pay the loan back.

Eileen Stewart, assistant dean of students, said the loans are offered to students through the law of university publications. She also said a fair number of students have requested the loans.

"The only qualification the students have to have is to be able to pay the loan back," Stewart said.

Margaret Hamlin, who taught home economics at the University during the 1950s, left some money in a trust and set up an account for students who needed to borrow money.

"The Hamlin fund was set up specifically for 'deserving girls', as Margaret said, so only women get a loan from that fund," Stewart said.

Another fund was also given by William Field, who was dean of students 37 years ago. This fund is for anyone who requests a loan.

The money for the emergency loans has also been given to specifically the field fund by other small accounts from alumni and friends of the University.

In order for students to get the loan they must have an interview with any of the deans to explain why they need the loan.

Kristin St. John, a junior journalism major at the University said she was able to get an $80 loan very easily. St. John also said the dean whom interviewed her was very nice and helpful.

"All I had to do was fill out an application and have an interview with one of the deans. I also had to promise to pay back the loan in a certain amount of days. If you don't pay back the loan, you are removed from the University," she said.

Health trend passing us by

A trend is spreading across America like wildfire. A tempest that sweeps evenly, affecting the young and the old, the rich and the poor, and all the races. The trend is health. A new form of health called prevention.

I had my first experience with it while my father was recovering from his heart attack. Two years ago he began talking about cholesterol and fat, good foods and bad foods. Dr. Dean Ornish had become his indirect and distant teacher as my dad followed his vegetarian and totally fat–free diet. He stayed committed to it despite all the myths that you need fat in your diet.

Michael Einhorn

I slowly opened my eyes to vitamins and healthy foods since I, too, am at risk. And it's not so much the heart attack I fear, but the overpriced, overrated, retroactive, apocalypse of a medical industry that I would be forced to rely on. So I'm on a low–fat diet and take about a gram and a half of vitamin C a day. I moved toward a good exercise program and read everything I can about staying fit and staying healthy. It's prevention and it works.

But this trend has not hit UMass. As countless health food stores open their doors, our apathetic dining commons serve mozzarella sticks as a main course. (You might as well eat a block of vegetable shortening.) On any given day, none of the four choices at the four D.C.'s, at least three are over 20 percent fat. No joke. It leaves us behind.

We have roughly ten thousand students still on the meal plan. I couldn't confirm this number because the person I had to talk to from the D.C.s was either out to lunch, gone for the day, in a meeting or, more likely, had absolutely no intentions of speaking to someone from the Collegian. Apparently the $4,000 I have given them so far wasn't enough to cover a few questions. Nevertheless, these roughly 10,000 students simply have not demanded a healthier choice of foods.

So we're left behind, slowing down as our bodies build up excess fat. And the best thing for these bodies is our trek to class. You know the journey. Slipping and sliding, ducking your head from the wind while taking short breaths and tightening every muscle in your body, constantly fearing falling or even freezing to death. Your knuckles whiten as the snow and temperatures continue to fall. That's it, that's the walk, and I'm telling you it's the best thing for you.

Unless you take a gym class — voluntarily. Just one more thing that shows UMass has not caught on to this prevention trend: you can graduate from this school without taking even one physical education course. Yeah, but I need those four real important semesters of Spanish that ripped my GPA in half. They can dictate Spanish but not gym, not even four classes, not even one per year!

With poor physical health we cannot learn. Health is at the base of our psychological foundations, and without a smoothly–running system our effectiveness and drive drop like a chicken puck in a vat. You'd find much more resolve and will–power in a healthy student than in an unhealthy one. More will–power because they have less to worry about, and worrying takes energy.

And nutrition is essential for that health and well–being. The D.C.'s dietary breakdown of foods into their respective starch or vegetable parts is obsolete. Gene Nieditch (who founded Weight Watchers) compiled our diet from a preexisting board of health diet thirty years ago! Although my opinion is that Weight Watchers does not have a very high success rate, most everyone will agree it is no longer fit for an entire campus.

Our campus needs to reevaluate this prevention trend. This trend can be seen in more self–run fitness centers, an expanding market for new diets, like the Pritican diet, Nutra– System, Jenny Craig and many others. Even Bill Clinton brought Dr. Ornish into the White House to teach his staff how to cook good–tasting, low–fat foods.

With a moving trend toward muscle tone and higher levels of fitness it is time for the curriculum and the dining commons to get up to speed. The type of definition many of us look to achieve can not be attained when hamburgers and fried foods are on the daily menu. We need labeled, more– efficient, healthier meals at the dining commons, even if physical education is not encouraged.

Call the food and nutrition office; maybe they'll talk to you.

Mullins just isn't the same

Sitting here in the basement it's hard to think — there's nothing like being underground to help you come up with ideas.

* * * * *

I miss the basketball games in the Curry Hicks Cage. As far as I'm concerned, the Mullin. Center is only necessary because more and more people want to go to the games, but that's it. The Mullins Center just doesn't have the same intensity and passion that was inspired in the Cage.

A lot of fan traditions are slowly dying — people sit down during the game, we're being too cordial to the other team, and not enough people are bowing to Coach Cal.

Aram Comjean
Notes from the Campus Center Basement

At the Cage when you screamed at the opposing team you could see the fear in their eyes and knew they heard you; at Mullins the fans are more removed from the game.

I'm getting used to the Mullins Center, though, and the Florida St. game was the loudest I've heard UMass fans in a long time. The fans are getting crazier and crazier at Mullins, and the team is better than ever so I have faith that things will improve. Bring on Temple.

* * * * *

I was add–dropping and I got to wondering just who decides which classes get that big "D" for diversity, and on what criteria. I mean, why does the History of Modern Boston course get the diversity designation and the Irish Experience history class does not?

There seems to be little consistency in the determination of which classes are going to make us more 'diverse'. What does being 'diverse' really mean, anyhow? I think you must decide on a individual basis which classes make you more 'diverse'.

Granted, most students here are from Massachusetts, but if you are a student here from the Middle East, how does taking Middle Eastern history course with the "D" designation broaden your horizons?

I couldn't help thinking, when the University just recently decided not to hire all those new security personnel, about Keith and Marcellette Williams and how their salaries could be used to give many students on–campus jobs to help them pay their way through school.

Nothing personal against the Williamses, but they are earning a heck of a lot of money for state employees. At last check, combined they earned more than the President of the United States. Something about that doesn't seem quite right.

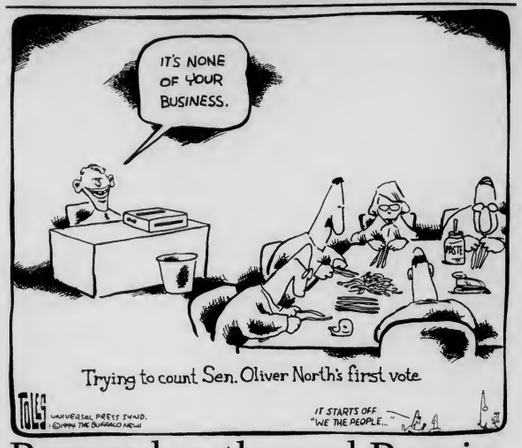
Snow. I gotta say I like the stuff. I enjoy the fact that it is the cause of so much disdain for so many people. I hate it when people complain about snow or the cold. First of all, I think it looks nice, and when the air is cold the air is cleaner.

I think we should send all those who complain to the South and let them complain about the heat and humidity in the summer. Better yet, let them complain about pick–ups and buckshot and the excellent cultural opportunities available down there — at least they don't have any snow. California has earthquakes, Florida has hurricanes and we have snow.

A special note for those few people who feel obliged to wear shorts and walk around after working out: don't be surprised when you catch pneumonia.

* * * * *



It also seems Auxilliary Services has removed Cherry Coke from the Campus Center vending machines, taking away yet another perk of going to this University. Maybe they'll bring back New Coke in its place. Bleah...

Opinion

Remember the real Reggie

Usually, the birth of a child is a time for celebration. When I read the story "It's a girl for Harris Lewis" in yesterday's Boston Globe, however, the requisite feelings of happiness were accompanied by sorrow and painful memories.

You see, the "Harris Lewis" in the story is Donna Harris Lewis, widow of Celtics' captain Reggie Lewis who died last July 27. She had a child Monday, a girl. Reggiena Sarah Lewis. I felt sad when I read about Donna's new child. Sad for Donna, sad for Reggiena, and most of all, sad for Reggie.

At this point, almost seven months after Lewis' death, people are already beginning to let their memories of Reggie slip away. I read about how the Celtics' payroll is screwed up because of Reggie's salary. I hear about how the Celtics are struggling on offense because they no longer have a "go– to guy." I hear sportswriters talking about how the Celtics have been cursed since the death of first–round draft pick Len Bias in 1986. I hear fans complaining that the damage to the Celtics will leave them reeling for years.

People are forgetting Reggie Lewis, the man, and concentrating on Reggie Lewis, the player. That's not the way it should be. It's too soon to forget the man.

Caleb Cochran

These are valid points, all of them. But it's secondary to talk about how the loss of Lewis has affected the Celtics. If I didn't know better, sometimes I would think Reggie had been traded, given the way people say, "the Celts need someone to step up now that Reggie's gone." It's not like he's playing for the Knicks now. He's gone.

The birth of Reggie's daughter slammed this point home for me. For the first time in a while, I heard something about the Lewis family that did not have to do with basketball. When Reggie died, all the talk was about what a great man he was. Video footage was shown of him handing out turkeys at Thanksgiving. Hardly any mention was made of Reggie Lewis, the basketball player. That was secondary, as well it should have been. But now things have changed.

Now the Celtics are struggling, as we all knew they would, and we hear about how much Reggie is missed by the team. It makes me angry. Why? Because we don't hear the real story.

We don't see quotes from Donna Harris Lewis in the newspapers saying how much she misses her husband. We don't see video footage of Reggie playing with his son, Reggie Jr., with a voiceover saying, "Little Reggie misses his dad this season." We don't read about the struggle that Donna now faces, having to raise two young children on her own.

People are forgetting Reggie, the man, and concentrating on Reggie, the player. That's not the way it should be. It's too soon to forget the man. Remember the Reggie Lewis who did so much for his community. The Reggie Lewis who was everyone's favorite teammate. The Reggie Lewis that Rick Fox and Dee Brown paid an emotional tribute to at a press conference last July.

Reggie the player will live on forever. We'll all remember number 35 as the outstanding basketball talent that he was. But that's not enough. We need to remember Reggie the leader, Reggie the father, Reggie the husband. We need to remember Reggie the man.

Keep an eye on the sports pages. Sooner or later, you'll read again about how much the Celtics miss Lewis. That's too bad. But you know what? His wife misses him too. His children miss him too. And that's the real story.

Letters to the Editor

People do have hope in the 'inner city'

To the editor:

I was dismayed after reading Neil Carpenter's column, "Some info about U.S. crime [Collegian, Feb. 8]." In the article Mr. Carpenter states that the public perceptions of crime and what to do about it are more influenced by "inside Edition" than by The New York Times.

However, when writing about the deterrent effect that the death penalty has on criminal offenders, he makes a statement that one would expect from a tabloid newspaper: "For many members of the inner city there is no hope for a better life, so what's the big deal about dying? Most gang members risk life and limb every day on the streets, so getting killed by the chair is the last thing on their minds."

Those of you who regularly read newspapers or watch television news know that the words "inner city" and "urban" are often used to refer to African–Americans and/or problems within the African–American community. By wording this passage the way he did, Mr. Carpenter perpetuates the false notion that the only people who commit crimes serious enough to be put on death row are African–Americans.

Not true. Check the statistics. In terms of population, there is a disproportionately high number of African–American men on death row. That is a problem that lies within our criminal justice system, and is another issue altogether.

Additionally, after reading Mr. Carpenter's column, those who don't know any better would falsely believe the "inner city" to be a place inhabited by deviants who have no fear of death and, therefore, no respect for life.

I would like to take this opportunity to inform Mr. Carpenter and any readers who hold beliefs similar to his that there are indeed many people from the "inner city" who do hope for a better life. In fact, many of us are right here at this University.

There's something funny going on here

Funny. Students have been complaining for years about rising tuition and fees — and paying them, according to classical free–market capitalism, that means that tuition and fees are not too high, because then people would stop purchasing education here.

Funny. Our parents must be pissed at paying so much tuition, but they are the ones who voted for legislators (and governors) who slashed our state's higher education budget. As the students here at UMass come from increasingly well– off families, the percentage of parents who would be against raising taxes to pay for public education also rises.

Funny. No one is denied a cell in jail or in prison because of lack of public support for prisoners.

Funny. The University spends hundreds of thousands of dollars each semester to indoctrinate us (Residential Education) and manage us (Dean of Students, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, etc.) yet nothing for allowing students to manage themselves with greater efficiency. For that, we have to tax ourselves through the SATF. Maybe we should get a dollar for every two dollars that is saved if we get rid of the bureaucracy for student control.

Funny. None of the trustees are elected except the student trustees, who don't even get a vote. They share two votes among five trustees. Could there be a connection between undemocratic values and shrinking access to higher ed?

Funny. The much hyped 'crisis in education' has not resulted in increased funding for public universities. Nearly all of them are being downsized. Once we solve the 'crisis,' what will the newly–educated masses do? Get a job? Go to college?

Not funny at all: We do not live and learn in a democracy. Our society is dominated by wealthy and powerful elites who profit from the misery of the many. Those of us lucky enough to be here are being groomed to serve this unjust society as managers. The owners are being groomed at Amherst and Smith. Someday, instead of phone calls to legislators and rallies, we will march over to Amherst and Smith, and burn them down.

Schindler's List, Name of Father top Oscar nods

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Sleepy eyes and a few surprises abound as the nominations for the 1993 Academy Awards were announced yesterday morning at 5:30 PST in California. Big winners include Holocaust epic Schindler's List (leading with 12 nominations), political drama In the Name of the Father (second with seven nods) and Emma Thompson and Holly Hunter, who each won nominations in both lead and supporting categories.

Here then, is a sampling of the major nominations, along with some unsolicited commentary. Keep in mind that this is the same Academy who gave Kevin Costner a directing Oscar over Martin Scorsese. Oh, well.

Best Picture: The Fugitive, The Piano, In the Name of the Father, Remains of the Day and Schindler's List.

Surprise: Though entertaining, commercial blockbuster The Fugitive is way out of its league.

Bet your money on: Schindler's List or a Piano upset.

The Academy forgot: The Age of Innocence, Short Cuts.

Best Director: Jane Campion (The Piano); James Ivory (Remains of the Day); Robert Altman (Short Cuts); Jim Sheridan (In the Name of the Father); Steven Spielberg (Schindler's List)

Surprise: Altman's nod...without Best Picture.

Academy Forgot: Some guy named Martin Scorsese.

Bet your money on: Spielberg, but Campion is wild card.

Best Actress: Angela Basset (What's Love Got To Do With It?); Stockard Channing (Six Degrees of Separation); Holly Hunter (The Piano); Emma Thompson (Remains of the Day); Debra Winger (Shadowlands)

Surprise: Basset & Channing in under–seen, terrific performances. It's about time.

Academy Forgot: No one. This is the year of the woman.

Bet your money on: Hunter.

Best Actor: Daniel–Day Lewis (In the Name of the Father); Lawrence Fishburne (What's Love Got to Do With It); Tom Hanks (Philadelphia); Anthony Hopkins (Remains of the Day); Liam Neeson (Schindler's List).

Surprise: Fishburne — Academy voters don't usually remember summer movies.

Academy forgot: Nobody; good choices all around.

Bet your money on: Probably Hanks (not deserving); hoping for Day–Lewis.

Best Supporting Actor: Leonardo DiCaprio (What's Eating Gilbert Grape); Ralph Finnes (Schindler's List); Tommy Lee Jones (The Fugitive); Pete Postlethwate (In the Name of the Father) John Malkovich (In the Line of Fire).

Surprise: DiCaprio's only 19 & this is second movie role.

Academy forgot: Ben Kingsley in Schindler's List.

Bet your money on: Jones, but DiCaprio or Finnes could upset.

Best Supporting Actress: Emma Thompson (In the Name of the Father); Holly Hunter (The Firm); Rosie Perez (Fearless); Anna Paquin (The Piano); Winona Ryder (The Age of Innocence).

Surprise: A couple of names sound awfully familiar..., Ryder's nod is the only acting nomination from Innocence.

Academy forgot: How about Marisa Tomei...oops, she already won. What the hell, give her another one. She deserves it.

Bet your money on: Perez has the buzz, but it's up in the air. Probably not Hunter or Thompson.

Other nominations:

Best Original Screenplay: The Piano, Dave, In the Line of Fire, Philadelphia, Sleepless in Seattle. My vote: The Piano.

Best Adapted Screenplay: The Age of Innocence, In the Name of the Father, Remains of the Day, Schindler's List, Shadowlands. My vote: Innocence or Father.

Best Foreign Language Picture: Belle Epoque, Farewell My Concubine, Hedd Wynn, Secret of Green Papaya, The Wedding Banquet. My vote: Concubine.

The Activities Trust Fund is currently $42 per semester. The SGA is trying to make budget cuts to prevent an increase in the fee while decreasing the deficit.

"We all pay $84 a year for the Activities Trust Fund, but we don't know where the money goes," Bearse said. "We just want to know were the funds are going."

Spokespeople from UPC and DVM debated against the motion to make their groups petition for a budget. The main argument against the motion was that it would decrease funding to student agencies who currently receive a fixed amount according to the undergraduate population.

"If you're a good program you don't worry about budgets," said SGA president David Nuñez. "Let there be no lie, there will be cuts, but maybe some groups will show they are a vital resource and we don't have to cut them."

cal figure is that one's privacy is taken away, Ford said. However, recognition as a leader is by definition one's power in politics, Ford said.

"I try not to let myself become dominated by the world of politics which isn't easy," Ford said.

According to Ford, four out of 40 mayors are women in Massachusetts. For over twenty years, there have been seats reserved for women in political conventions but it is very hard to get started as a woman, Ford said.

"It's very hard to change the tradition of politics especially if you are a woman or a minority," Ford said.

Women in politics are more liberal which Ford has retained in her work. She supports liberal views and organizations such as pro-choice, gay, lesbian, and bisexual rights, and violence against women. There are words given to women in politics which is very positive, Ford said. For example, Ford has been called caring, honest, detailed, a listener and open-minded.

"Women are a breath of fresh air who give a new perspective in running government," Ford said.

According to Ford, there are many biases and generalizations that women face when campaigning against men. For instance, women are less likely to win which is false, Ford said, because she defeated a man. Another bias is that women are not tough enough on crime and defense. Also women need to raise more money and handle their emotions. Women need to start raising money early and become tough but never deny one's emotions, Ford said.

According to Ford, a woman president would be perfectly capable of running a strong defense. Ford said that people need to take a closer look at Hillary Clinton and see how impressive and intelligent she is as a political figure.

Luke Hass, a first year international relations student, said that Ford is very impressive. "I definitely feel that more women should become more involved in politics," Hass said. "It's time for equality."

Parents see film as inappropriate

LEOMINSTER, Mass. (AP) — Some parents were concerned that Schindler's List was inappropriate for a high school field trip. But it wasn't just the movie's depiction of Nazi atrocities committed against Jews.

They also objected to the sex.

About 20 parents asked the School Committee to cancel a plan to take about 400 Leominster High School freshmen to a special showing of the film Wednesday morning at Loews Cinema in Searstown.

The parents said the Steven Spielberg movie portrays explicit sex and freshmen would be too distracted by frontal nudity to appreciate the movie's story of one man's efforts to save Jews from persecution.

Although the city's School Committee did not cancel the trip, it voted to investigate what kinds of movies are appropriate for the school to show to students.

High school Principal Kevin O'Malley said the field trip was part of a curriculum designed to promote and teach tolerance, which included a play and a book about anti- Semitism.

Fumio Taku said he and his wife decided not to sign a permission slip to allow their child to go on the field trip. Taku said scenes of violence went beyond what was necessary to portray the Holocaust.

Hardwood

umn last year and decided to implement my idea for a Rookie All-Star Game. If you need any other ideas, Mr. Stern, you can give me a call.

Without Jordan in the All-Star Game, actually, I'd rather watch Penny, Webber, Mashburn, Bradley and Cheaney go off on the court.

Pistons nixed again.

Detroit can't do anything right. They seemingly make a great trade with Houston, getting Robert Horry for Sean Elliott. Horry can be a banger as well as slick-scorer; well, he's staying in Houston because Elliott failed his physical with the Rockets.

The Pistons barely double Dallas' win total, and with New Jersey's apparent signing of Derrick Coleman for $90M, they can forget about picking up DC in the free agent market.

Mavericks win again over Wolves.

You would think Minnesota could watch tapes of the 25 other teams beating Dallas, but no. Quinn Buckner's Mavs beat the Wolves for the fourth time this season. Jimmy Jackson, Jamal Mashburn, Sean Rooks — a great nucleus. Thank god they got rid of Darren Morningstar. Cut those sideburns.

Hornets stung by injuries.

Charlotte has not had an easy time of it lately, losing seven in a row without both of its superstars. Larry Johnson and Alonzo Mourning are spending as much time off the court as on it, thanks to mysterious injuries that keep popping up game after game. I feel sorry for anyone who has these guys in a Fantasy Basketball League.

Hey, wait a minute — I have Mourning. Damn injuries.

Slam Dunk Weekend.

Doug Christie's out, Antonio Davis is in. Doesn't matter, neither is going to win. Shawn Kemp and Harold Miner are the faves, so I don't want to pick either.

"Always go with the smallest guy," said 5-foot-2 Michael Reiss "Lightning", another Hardwood correspondent, who picks the Nuggets' 6-foot-2 guard Robert Pack. I think Reiss thought I was talking about Sen. Robert Packwood. He has no shot.

It comes down to two — Isiah Rider and James "Hollywood" Robinson. I'd like to pick the Blazers' fantastic rook, but the hometown fans in the Target Center will be cheering for J.R. Plus, Rider won it in college; he'll win it in the pros.

Buddy's team the one to watch

(AP) — Will Buddy's first fight with Bill come when the Phoenix Cardinals' owner doesn't want to shell out millions for Eric Hill, Sean Jones or Seth Joyner? Or will Buddy Ryan be a tamer general manager than coach?

Tune in and see when the NFL's free agent signing period begins in nine days, with potential fireworks between Ryan and owner Bill Bidwell.

Phoenix will be fun to watch. So will Dallas, Houston and just about every other NFL team.

But the Cards will be the most fun, largely because Ryan has always been at odds with owners who refused to meet the demands of HIS players. Now he's also general manager at a time when it's not a good idea to have a rookie GM and upheaval in the front office. That's particularly true in Phoenix, where Bidwell is unpredictable at best.

Why?

Because this is the first year of the NFL's salary cap and the more astute teams have been spending the last year figuring out how to fit $50 million worth of talent into a $34 million cap.

Some will do it by releasing highly paid aging veterans, or asking them to "retire" with dignity, as Lawrence Taylor did last month, freeing up $2.25 million for the Giants.

Others will do it by watching with anguish as they are spurned by longtime stars — like Joyner and Clyde Simmons of the Eagles. Hill, the Cardinals' talented inside linebacker, is another — he says he's flattered Ryan wants to keep him but added that money talks.

"I'm in a good situation no matter where I land," he says.

Hill is an unrestricted free agent.

Did you know? The Great Midwest could send six of its eight teams to the NCAA Tournament, for an outstanding 75 percent, better than even the ACC or Big 10 have fared in past seasons.

Nobody hates the UCLA basketball team more than UCLA alums. Think about it. If you've won national championships for 10 out of 12 years two decades ago, excuses (Coach Jim Harrick's middle name) don't wash in the 1990s.

Five 20-win seasons in a row have saved Harrick's job, and he's responded by coaching a team which was the last undefeated club in the nation en route to the No. 1 ranking.

Tyus Edney, brothers Charles and Ed O'Bannon and Shon Tarver are the core of the team, and with the weak competition out West, you have to be looking at the Bruins as the No. 1 seed, unless they swan dive, which is not out of the realm of possibility.

The Far Side

By Gary Larson

"Well, as usual, there goes Princess Luwana — always the center of attention. ... You know, underneath that outer wrap, she's held together with duct tape."

Your Horoscope

By Joann Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Bounding productivity will get you to the top, or close to it. The financial outlook is rosy! Seek valuable insight. Quiet and privacy will let you gather your thoughts and devise a winning strategy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Someone may try to stand in your way today. Be careful not to obligate yourself excessively. Review contract negotiations, this time the price will be right.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your sterling qualities may not be appreciated by everyone, be patient. Prove in power will reward your efforts! New financial policies are learned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) An excellent day for starting new projects. Others are anxious to join your team. Outside talents or extra funds are available if needed. Spontaneous social plans sound delightful but may be costly.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) Co-workers and friends urge you to get your head out of the clouds. Be a team player and watch the profits grow. If you ask for advice, have the good sense to follow it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22) You move closer to the executive suite thanks to a decision you make today. Ask for favors. Investment gains are closer than you think. Luck wins you attention and true understanding. Hold onto your hat, or you'll lose it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct 22) Co-workers may be demanding now. Seek a quiet setting for your lunch. This afternoon, your communication skills will win you rave reviews. Letters from foreign shores bring welcome news. Plan a trip.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Go out tonight, many good things will happen. You may be itching to change course. Shorten up! Stick to projects already underway until you can see the daylight. Let logic overrule emotion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Pay attention to a friend's sound advice as you have a winning personality, show it off! Dump a losing proposition to try your hand at something new.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Behind-the-scenes chats could lead to a bright future. Your communicative bent will light up a night. Delegate routine responsibilities in order to spend more time on creative pursuits. Your smile will keep you luck.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Those in sales and marketing enjoy good fortune. Keep both ears with your wheels. Coincidences could prove lucky. You meet someone exciting. Make certain a relationship is a two-way street.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Your thoughts are directed towards an altruistic goal. Bottom on this track and you will find genuine happiness. Romance may be right under your nose.

It's payback time for UMass

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

Any game that takes place between a battle with Kentucky and a war with Temple is a dangerous one. Much less a road game.

For No. 13 Massachusetts, that game takes place tonight at the Providence Civic Center where the Minutemen (17–4, 8–0 Atlantic 10) will take on the Rhode Island Rams (8–11, 4–6 A–10).

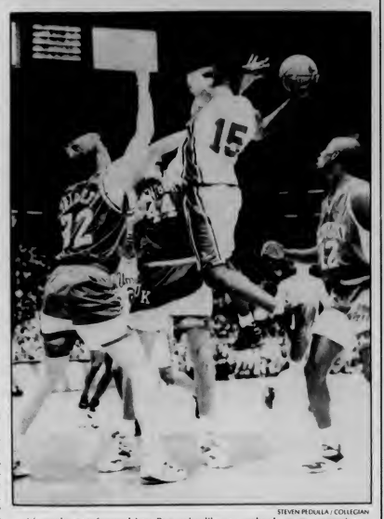
Not only does tonight's contest fall between two huge games for UMass, but URI is a team which the Minutemen have already defeated handily this year. On Jan. 30, UMass crushed the Rams 76–47 at the William D. Mullins Center.

Therefore, the danger lies in the fact that UMass could be overlooking the Rams in favor of other matters, or namely, other teams.

While that is true, there are two very big factors that should ensure a concentrated effort by the Minutemen.

URI not only upset UMass last year at Providence but they talked trash while doing it. The Minutemen present that fateful day will never forget it. Need proof? The margin of the two UMass victories over URI since that day averages out to be 27.5 points. And neither game was at the scene of the original crime. This one is.

Factor number two involves the fact that UMass is coming off a narrow loss to Kentucky. When the Minutemen trounced the Rams earlier this year, Coach John Calipari and his team were coming off a two point defeat at Cincinnati. After being destroyed by UMass, URI point guard Carlos Cofield said that he knew the Rams were in trouble because of the UMass mindset entering the game.



In that game, UMass broke it open with a huge 24–3 run split between the first and second halves. Make no mistake about it, the Rams were simply outmanned; especially inside.

The Minutemen outrebounded URI 56–33, held the Rams to 28.8 percent shooting and freshman center Marcus Camby swatted aside six Ram shots. URI really missed forward Kyle Ivey–Jones, who is no longer academically eligible.

After the game, Calipari was more than happy with his team's performance; after a couple of erratic performances, Calipari was happy to see what he called, "A blast from the past".

One player who did not play in that first game, but is slated to see action tonight is UMass junior guard Mike Williams. After collapsing in the Jan. 27 loss at Cincinnati, Williams has sat out the last three games while undergoing precautionary tests. Now, after being medically cleared to play, Williams should begin his return against the Rams.

Abdul Fox, a 6–foot–6 swingman, is the major threat for the Rams. Fox is averaging 17.2 points per game and can score from nearly anywhere on the court. In the first game UMass guards Derek Kellogg and Carmelo Travieso effectively wore down Fox, who scored his game–high 19 points on 8–for–21 shooting.

Skiles handles demotion well

Art Stapleton's Notes from the Hardwood

You don't find many athletes like Orlando's Scott Skiles, willing to give up the game he plays for the kids he loves. I know it sounds like some sappy, happy story, but he has proven to be a class act when it comes to basketball and real life.

Skiles and his wife separated before this season started and they have been in a custody battle over their two sons ever since then. He said he has feared the worst — possibly getting traded, having to move to another city and facing the risk of losing the custody battle. As of now, Skiles is still a member of the Magic.

But the 29–year–old Skiles has been well aware of a 21–year–old budding superstar by the name of Penny waiting to take his starting point guard spot away from him. Last Sunday against the Knicks, the inevitable happened — Anfernee Hardaway is now the starting point guard for the Magic, while Skiles, who started the first 46 games, is relegated to the back–up role.

Skiles has been quoted as saying he doesn't mind the move, especially if he gets to stay in Orlando. All of this mainly because he doesn't want to lose custody of his two boys and moving may weaken his case, according to Skiles. Then he talks of retiring from the NBA if he had to choose between family and basketball. Now that's sincere.

How about my favorite basketball player? Ya know, Mr. Jordan. Come on, Mike, give me a break. Dummy up! You retire because you want to spend more time with your family and get out of the media spotlight. Fine, we accepted that.

Now you're on the White Sox; well, the minor leagues. One of my Hardwood correspondents, Candice "Ice, Baby" Flemming, says Jordan will make the big leagues; he will hit, so she can watch him at Fenway Park this summer. Uh, exsqueeze me? Sorry — stick to NBA Jam.

At least, if you are going to leave your family yet again, play for a team that needs an outfielder who probably can't hit or field.

Try the Red Sox, the Mets or the Dodgers, because the names Dawson, McReynolds and Strawberry sure have the same qualities. As far as skill goes, Michael, when you are at the plate, use one of those big, red bats — you'll have a better chance of hitting the ball.

Rookie Game A Good Idea.

Men's swimming goes for 8 in a row

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team has been nothing short of a dynasty when it comes to competing in the New England Championships.

The Minutemen have won seven consecutive championships and seek an eighth this weekend at Springfield College.

Coach Russ Yarworth is optimistic about his team's chances.

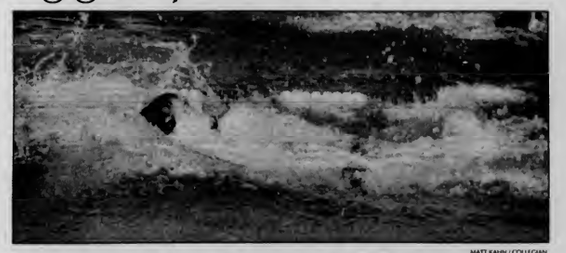
"The team is motivated," Yarworth said. "We own this meet."

This year's championships will have a different look than those in the past. Due to changing conferences, teams that are part of the Big East, such as Connecticut, and teams from the North Atlantic Conference will not be competing in this year's New England Championships.

The shift in the competing teams has changed the focus of UMass.

"We're going in to it with a little different philosophy. In past years it has been our primary meet," Yarworth said. "Because of less teams participating we decided to focus on the ECAC's."

The change in focus doesn't mean the Minutemen are taking the championships lightly.



"Mentally we're going in there and be as tough as we can and prove why we are the New England Champions," Yarworth said.

Yarworth said the main competition for UMass will come from Boston College, Southern Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

Last year UMass finished first by holding off Connecticut in a closely contested meet, winning 943.5 to 909. BC placed third with 499 points and Southern Connecticut was fourth taliying 482 points.

There will also be more on the line for some of the UMass swimmers this weekend than just another championship. There are still a small number of spots available on the squad that will participate in the ECAC Championships at the beginning of March.

"I want to take the best squad I can to the ECAC's with the 18 guys who I think have the best shot of scoring," Yarworth said. "Hopefully we'll have that kind of competition within the team."

Did you know? Donyell owns East

Holding Court NCAA
Michael Morrissey on NCAA Basketball

This week's edition of Holding Court will deal mainly with some of the surprises, good and bad, of the season as we steamroll towards the NCAA Tournament. (By the way, if you're counting the days like I am, only 31 left until Selection Sunday.)

We'll start in the East and go clockwise around the nation, beginning with one of my least–favorite teams, Connecticut.

The Huskies (19–2) returned four starters from last year's squad which lost a first–round NIT game at home after getting nixed by the NCAA Selection Committee.

Until Lou Roe really goes off, Donyell Marshall is truly the best there is in the East. The 6–foot–9–inch forward has a presence on the court that few of his peers could even hope for.

Marshall is a shot–blocking, rebounding and scoring threat, and his defense has helped his team beat squads like Virginia by scores of 77–36. Freshman Ray Allen has helped out Brian Fair and Kevin Ollie at guard.

What's surprising isn't that Connecticut was left out of every preseason Top 25 in the country, but that they were placed in the middle of a relatively weak Big East conference (Georgetown and Syracuse, both three games back in the conference race, were the consensus favorites.)

Here's hoping that coward Calhoun has to play his New England rival Massachusetts in the tourney (Pleeze give us the No. 2 seed, guys!).

Did you know? The Big East, for the third consecutive year, sucks.

Moving to a real conference, the Southeastern Conference has one of the biggest surprises in the country in the Florida Gators. Right now, the Gators have the same overall record as Kentucky and a better conference record. Lon Kruger's club squeaked out a 59–57 victory over Rick Pitino's Wildcats in Gainesville, Jan. 18.

The rematch is March 2, but give the Gators an at–large bid already and put them in Rupp Arena for the first–round of the Southeast Regional. Think the Kentucky natives will be pulling for Ben Davis, Andrew Declercq and company if Florida sweeps the season series?

And on that note, how about the Georgia Bulldogs, in third place in the SEC Last with a losing record? Hugh Durham's job may be in jeopardy if he can't pull together some big wins in the next year or two with that crop of talent.

Did you know? Either Kentucky or Alabama have won the last 10 SEC Tournament championships.

The Great Midwest has burst into the Top 25 in only its third season since its inception. Notwithstanding the impact Cincinnati has made in the last two years, the whole league has jumped into the mix this season, with no one better than St. Louis. Charlie Spoonhour was formerly known as a nice little head coach whose Southwest Missouri State teams pulled off an upset or two in March over more–talented teams.

Now with players like UNLV transfer H Waldman and possible conference player of the year Erwin Claggert, the Billikens are threatening Cincy and DePaul as the most dangerous team come March. They remain the only team in the country with one loss, and they've done it the hard way — on the road.

Say What?

FILM — The runaway smash hit romance Sleepless in Seattle, starring Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan, will be shown at Mount Holyoke's Gamble Auditorium at 7 & 9 9 9 p.m. $2.50. It's a pretty good movie. Not as good as When Harry Met Sally, but worthwhile nonetheless. If you've never seen it, shake your buns over to MHC and check it out.

CONCERT — John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band, those fun–loving rockers who performed the tunes for Eddie and the Cruisers, will rock and roll their way over to Pearl Street tonight at 8:30. Come on out to NoHo and celebrate Valentine's Day early with a good friend and a great band. Call 584–7771 for prices and availability.

MUSIC — D.J. Dan will be in full force at Michael's in Amherst at 9 p.m. Come on out and have some fun.

MUSIC/FILM — The Northampton Arts Council, in collaboration with the Arcadia Players and the Da Camera Singers, will present the world premiere of a new work by composer Richard Einhorn: an oratorio on the life and death of Joan of Arc. This work will be presented in conjunction with another unprecedented artistic event: the screening of an uncensored version of a great but neglected classic, Carl Theodor Dreyer's 1928 silent film La Passion de Jeanne d' Arc. The gala world premiere will be held at 8 p.m. and on Sunday, February 13 at 2 p.m. Don't miss this rare opportunity.

CONCERT — A tribute to the original mambo king, Mario Bauza, will be performed at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8 p.m. Bauza's Afro–Cuban Jazz Orchestra, now under the leadership of Victor Paz, will be joined by Rudy Calzado on vocals, Carlos "Patato" Valdez on congas, and special guest Paquito D'Rivera on clarinet/saxophone. Tickets are $19, $15 and $11; 1/2 prrice for students. Age 16 and under: $8. Presented with the generous support of WFCR.

CONCERT — Amanda's Dirty Secret will perform a free show with special guests Pangloss at 9 p.m. at the Hatch Bar.

Sunday

PLANETARIUM SHOW — A free planetarium show will take place at 3 p.m. at the Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. All ages. Call 256–6234 for details.

CONCERT — Music by Macchia— Playing by Klock & Shank, a faculty recital featuring Lynn Klock, Nadine Shank, Salvatore Macchia and Peter Tanner will be performed at Bezanson Recital Hall, UMass Fine Arts Center, at 8 p.m. Works by ibert, Glazunov, Rueff and Macchia. Free with UMass ID: call 545–2511 for other prices.

HOOP — The weekend calendar would not be complete without at least a mention of the men's basketball battle between UMass and Temple at the William D. Mullins Center in Amherst at 3:45 p.m. Watch Coach Cal's 13th ranked Minutemen tangle with the 8th ranked Owls. This should be another classic matchup between the Atlantic 10 Conference's two best squads. Go UMass!

Examining the contraception option

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

These days, it seems that everybody wants to talk about sex. We see it in advertising, art, books and movies. It is on television, in songs and videos. Contraception, on the other hand, is a somewhat less popular topic.

Unless you have been living in a cave since your arrival in this politically correct, socially active valley, you are probably aware of the fact that there is an ample number of people — educators and health officials alike, who encourage dialogue about the subject of birth control.

"Being prepared and knowing the options ahead of time is playing it safe," said Gloria DiFulvio, a health educator and coordinator of the contraception education program at University Health Services at UMass.

DiFulvio, who coordinates a contraception education workshop said that even students who are not currently sexually active should know about contraception. She explained that most students fall into sexual danger if they neglect to educate themselves because they don't anticipate having sex, or because they feel its tacky to carry around birth control "just in case."

The educator asserted, however, that contraception is essential in preventing not only pregnancy but Sexually Transmitted Diseases.

"There is a difference in preventing pregnancy and in preventing STDs," said DiFulvio. "People don't often think of STDs."

The following is a basic and brief list of some contraception options that are available.

The Birth Control Pill. The pill is a synthetic combination of the hormones estrogen and progesterone. It basically inhibits the release of eggs from the woman's ovaries, and makes the uterine lining unfavorable for implantation of a fertilized cell. The pill is taken orally on a daily basis. It is considered to be highly effective in preventing pregnancy when taken as directed (97–99.9%) and is one of the least inconvenient methods. It may involve side effects such as acne, breast, mood and weight changes. Not recommended for women who smoke, and offers no protection against STDs.

The Condom. Rubbers, jimmy hats, raincoats, love–gloves. Today condoms can be purchased everywhere from gas stations to bathroom vending machines. This thin rubber sheath fits over the erect penis and prevents sperm from entering the vagina during ejaculation. When used properly (and this is the key, folks) and with vaginal spermicides it can be up to 98% effective. The condom is easily purchased and can significantly reduce the spread of infection from STDs.

Vaginal Spermicides. These non–prescription creams, fooms jellies, suppositories and film are inserted into the vagina just before or up to an hour before intercourse. They are moderately effective when used alone, an are most effective when used with a condom in preventing pregnancy and STDs. Spermicides provide lubrication, usually have few side effects (some irritation may occur) and can be up to 97% effective.

The Diaphragm. This soft, dome–shaped device is inserted into the vagina and covers the cervical opening/area around the cervix. Filled with spermicidal cream of jelly, the diaphragm is moderately effective (up to 98%), requiring consistent use to prevent pregnancy and STDs. It can be inserted up to two hours before intercourse, but new cream or jelly must be applied each time intercourse occurs. It should remain inserted for eight hours after the last sexual intercourse.

The contraceptive sponge. The polyurethane sponge contains spermicide which absorbs and kills sperm on contact. Like the diaphragm, the sponge is inserted into the vagina and, when used properly, can be up to 95% effective. The sponge, unlike the diaphragm, does not require a prescription.

Other contraception options include the cervical cap, the IUD, fertility awareness (the rhythm method), sterilization, withdrawal and the only guarantee against pregnancy and most STDs — abstinence. Although this is a very brief, incomplete list, it should provide a basic outline of some birth control possibilities.

Additional information about any of these options can be attained at University Health Services, 549–2671, ext. 181. A contraception education program also offers free workshops every Mon. & Thurs. 3–4:30 p.m., Tues. & Wed. 7–8:30 p.m. at UHS In Rm. 302.

"More than knowledge, it's important for people to really think about decisions they are making," asserted DiFulvio. "Two people really need to talk about their sexual histories and what is important to them," she said.

Sex and romance mix for on–screen thrill

Amid all this talk about sex, it's a wonder anyone can remember romance, especially in the movies. Sure, I could've done a list of the screen's best sex scenes, but lust is almost entirely in the eye (is that the right body part?) of the beholder.

There's surely something sexy in flirting, in the sly wink of an eye, a smoothly executed double entendre. And before Brando used butter as a lubricant in Last Tanga in Paris (don't try this at home, folks, the people in the film are professionals), sex was something that needed to be said through romance, not simply satisfied by gratuitous and graphic scenes of intercourse. And while romance doesn't necessarily equal sex anymore, the two seem to be less than strange bedfellows.

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

Here then, is a sampling of some of the most romantic movies Hollywood (and beyond) ever came up with. And while you may catch some glaring omission, get over it. Everyone has an opinion, even if their idea of romance is a pint of Ben & Jerry's and a copy of 9 1/2 Weeks. Take care, though, for except this above mention, this article is 100% Mickey Rourke–free. Here they are, in alphabetical order:

Bonnie & Clyde (1967) — Faye Dunaway and Warren Beatty are this notorious duo of bank robbers and lovers shooting their way across middle America. Highly stylized, highly violent and highly oversexed, the film is a nihilistic joyride, a rollercoaster with a high dose of doomed romanticism. Dangerously cool and erotic, Bonnie & Clyde climaxes in a shower of bullets, injecting a violent dose of reality in a film that not only glamorizes violence, but practically advertises it. See also: Badlands (1974), True Romance (1993).

Bringing Up Baby (1938) The best thing to come out of the censorship–aimed Production Code of the 1930s–40s was the sly art of the screwball comedy. None was better that this deft (and somewhat dark) comedy with strong–willed heiress Katharine Hepburn loosening straight–laced paleontologist Cary Grant in a marvelous blend of style, dead–on timing and impeccable banter. Madcap, yes, but the film never forgets the sanctity of pure movie love. Cinephiles can ponder the interestingly perverse undercurrent (What is it about that dinosaur bone?). See also: The Philadelphia Story (1940); Sabrina (1954), any Thin Man flick, What's Up, Doc? (1972).

Bull Durham (1988) — One of the few contemporary romances that didn't seem synthetic or obvious (like Sleepless in Seattle or The Bodyguard), Durham is a sexy, mature ode to America's real favorite pastime. Susan Sarandon is a woman in control of her sexuality, with Kevin Costner (back when he had an edge) and Tim Robbins as minor league baseball players dueling for her affections. With a refreshingly adult tone, Durham does contain one of the great sex scenes, but also Costner's best moments on film: his monologue on what he "believes in."

Casablanca (1942) — One of the most beloved movies of all time, Casablanca is a prime example of what Hollywood is capable of, even if they didn't know it at the time. After one viewing, you'll realize how deep this film is embedded into our national moviegoing fabric. What's not to love — Bogart in top form, Ingrid Bergman at her luminous best, Claude Raines at his most cynically amusing — as well as the music, the timeless themes of sacrifice and undying love. See also: Woody Allen's homage–rich Play it Again, Sam (1972).

Maurice (1987) — In between filming A Room With A View and Howards End, the folks from Merchant–Ivory made a great film out of a mediocre final novel from E.M. Forster. Maurice (James Wilby) is a proper Edwardian gentleman who realizes he's gay. After an aborted romance with a college friend, he then falls for a scruffy, lower class gamekeeper (Rupert Graves). Maurice combines a subtly scathing indictment of the repressed but oh–so–polite society (not to mention that pesky British class issue) and sumptuous romanticism only found in the movies. See also: Another Country (1984).

Notorious (1946) — One of Hitchcock's most romantic, tightly–plotted and, once you begin to think about it, most disturbing films. A fractured fable with government agent Cary Grant seducing the "loose" daughter (Ingrid Bergman) of a traitor into spying on a group of South American Nazis. Bergman goes all out for the louse, even marrying slippery Nazi Claude Rains, while her relationship with Grant intensifies, as she walks the line between complicity and her sense of duty and sacrifice. Complete with the typically stunning Hitchcock flourishes, Notorious is a

What do you think is sexy?

Ten tie for the sexiest man about town

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Men are sexy. Beyond age, background, nationality, the sensuality of men shine through. To narrow it down to 10 is a near impossible task for a seasoned temptress like myself, but duty calls.

These are in alphabetical order because to rank them would be too cruel, and would take away from the qualities each of them possess in abundance.

Honorable mentions:

Ethan Hawke. His boy– next–door quality makes me wish I grew up in that neighborhood.

Costas Mandylor. A star on television's "Picket Fences," Mandylor has given many women a good reason to stay home on Friday nights.

Top ten [in alphabetical order]:

Aladdin is appealing.

COURTESY KEN REGAN
Dashing Denzel Washington.

1. Aladdin. He's adorable, has amazing pecs, and a smile that weakens the knees. Plus, best of all, he's a cartoon character and lacks the character flaws that all human share.

2. Antonio Banderas. Recently seen in Philadelphia as Tom Hanks' lover, Miguel, Banderas showed qualities I hope the man I marry has. He was sweet, concerned and even Madonna has commented on his beauty. His one flaw, he's already happily married.

3. Sean Connery. Call me crazy, but the older he gets, the sexier Connery gets. It's not an Oedipal complex, but something about his age makes him hot. He's still a commodity in the film industry, so I'm not the only one who thinks this.

Inner beauty adds to sex appeal of 10

By JAMIE D. BEARSE
Collegian Staff

I used to think that the Associated Press had a hard time having to rank the top 25 college teams in basketball and football every year. However, for the past week I've been ripping my hair out trying to decide on just 10 of the current sexiest women. Hence, I have to start with some honorable mentions that didn't quite make the list.

Kathy Ireland. Just like Dan Vs. Dave in the hype in 1992. It's been Kathy Vs. Cindy in the super–model war year after year. However, this year I believe people like to see Cindy on the magazine covers rather than Kathy. I still like to watch the cheesy classic, Alien from L.A. every year just to see Kathy.

Nicole Kidman. Some days I wish I was Tom Cruise. I've always had a weakness for long blonde curly hair. From the sincere doctor in Days of Thunder to the bitch in Malice, Nicole has been sexy without trying.

Diane Parkinton. In all the fuss over Vanna White in the late 80s, everyone forgot about the reason why "The Price is Right" does so well year after year. She should star in a show, "Forty–something."

Top Ten:

10. Alicia Silverstone. The grunge queen of 1994. For those of you that don't know, Alicia stars in the "Amazing" video by Aerosmith. I recommend the film The Crush to see more of the young beauty.

9. Nicole Eggert. It's no wonder that "Baywatch" does so well. I grew up with "Charles in Charge" in which Nicole played Jamie, the oldest sister. From innocent sex appeal to the fire engine red life guard suit, Nicole has always been a knock–out.

8. Janet Jackson. Remember those "When I think of you" days? Janet definitely gets the award for the most improved over the years. Her sex appeal has shone through in last year's Rolling Stone cover, and her "If" video. Expect Janet to stay hot through out the year.

7. Rachel LeDuc. The athletic look is in this year and it hits home at UMass. Rachel plays forward for the Minutewoman soccer team. Although the sophomore from Longmeadow looks terrific off the field, it still doesn't compare to her talents on the field. This young lady has the world ahead of her. Best of luck in next year's quest for the National Title.

6. Jenny McCarthy. Last year's Miss October. She could be my Miss Anytime. As I said before, the hot athletic look is in this year. Look for this former Playmate to cross over into modeling or commercials in '94. Well, maybe she won't, but she deserves to be in the top 10 anyway!

5. Cindy Crawford. Appearing on the cover of every magazine on the rack at one time or another over the past couple of years. Success for Cindy continues to be non–stop. Some may argue that she's old news, but remember when "Dark side of the Moon" was on the album charts forever? Same case here!

Janet is justifyably jammin'.

4. Nancy Kerrigan. Two words – Black tights! Seriously, most of the time when someone mentions the words sex appeal one thinks of physical appearance, but Nancy goes beyond physical beauty. Her inner self shines through, and her confidence is responsible for bringing all of America together to support her. From her grace on the ice to her warm smile on the TV; to me, that's true sex appeal.

3. Kim Basinger. From 9 1/2 Weeks to Coal World to Final Analysis, Kim Basinger is the only reason that makes these films worth watching. Kim is the top movie star/sex symbol, not to mention a personal favorite of mine. Look for to defend her crown in the soon to be released Getting Away.

2. Anna Nicole Smith. The Guess Jeans woman and the 1993 Playmate of the year is once again teaming up with Hugh this month for a red hot Valentine pictorial in Playboy. Expect a big year from this Southern Belle, starting with an appearance in Naked Gun 33 1/3.

1. Vendela. Neck–in–neck with Anna for #1. Who else can make drinking Ice tea with a straw sexy? After seeing the spot last year with Vendela and Rachel Hunter, I almost wanted an ice tea — and I hate the stuff! My friend Mike D. (not the Beastie Boy) has a poster of Vendela, which we like to call "Moon over Vendela."

harder-edged variation on Casablanca, as Hitch skews the entire cinematic gambit of morality and guilt. See also: Vertigo (1958), North By Northwest (1959).

The Princess Bride (1986) — Some may prefer another Rob Reiner romance, When Harry Met Sally..., but this wholly delightful fairy tale for lovers and cynics alike was harder to pull off. Funny, adventurous and endlessly entertaining, the key here is that Reiner doesn't force the charm, instead keeping the tone airy and unpretentious. Cary Elwes and Robin Wright make up screendom's most Aryan couple (how '80s), and Mandy Patankin mines wit out of what could've been an annoying cartoon.

Answers about anal sex and sexual harassment

Go Ask Alice

Dear Alice,

I've been interested in trying anal sex for some time, but I have some apprehension because of what I've heard from some people. For example, I heard that the next day you lose control of your bowels, and that the effects could be long-term. I don't think this is true because lots of people do have anal sex, but the prospect has kept me from trying it. If you know whether this is true or not, please let me know.

–Anxious Anus

Dear Anus,

Although I'm no expert, I can tell you what I've heard from very reliable sources. This sounds like a myth created by folks who think anal sex is too icky for them and therefore would try to discourage you from trying it. It is true that among pregnant women, a loss of bowel control is more common, but that's no reason not to have a baby. It should go without saying that your partner should use a condom to avoid the risk of contracting sexually transmitted diseases like HIV. I also advise a good, non–petroleum based lubricant since without it, there may be some slight pain. So, if your sexual appetite is daring enough, don't let superstitions discourage you. Know the risks and take precautions. If you want to try it, go for it, and don't worry about a runny bottom!

Dear Alice,

I am a male senior psychology major at UMass. Last semester, a female professor made several sexual advances to me during extra–help sessions. I declined her advances, which made me feel very scared, but I still continued to work hard in her class. Her final attempt at trying to seduce me ended up in a yelling session. She said, "We will see how your final grade turns out."

I thought that she said this out of frustration, but when grades came in, I received C/D, when all my work was at least A/B. I do not know who to turn to. I am scared and afraid to talk to anybody about this for fear of embarrassing my professor and myself. Please extend some urgent advice.

–Mick

Dear Mick,

This is a very interesting situation, one in which it is important to keep in mind that you are the victim of sexual harrassment. From what you have said, you have done nothing wrong, therefore you have nothing to be embarrassed about. On the other hand, your professor has. She has acted both unprofessionally and abusively, and if you step forward, you could keep it from happening to someone else. The best place to head for is the CASIAC office and to speak with an advisor or the academic dean. Bring proof of your academic achievement with you. I'm sure that with a university so concerned with political correctness, you should have no problem getting help. Good luck. I'll be rooting for you!

Alice is a UMass student, and gives advice on an informal basis. Please sends questions to "Go Ask Alice," c/o the Collegian, 113 Campus Center.

Mood–ruining tunes

The top 10 songs that inhibit romance

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

Music is used by artists to express feelings and create moods. We, as listeners, use music to share in the moods or feelings that these artists manifest in their sounds. It is obvious that when we are trying to attain an atmosphere of sensuality and Eros, we would carefully choose a soundtrack which would envelop the room in only the best lovemaking vibes.

So this was originally going to be a column detailing the best songs to have sex to. I changed it for a few very obvious reasons. The first is that it would be a bit pretentious to say that I have had so much sex, to so much music, that I am uniquely qualified to present the absolute best songs to which you might preform the horizontal lambada. That would be untrue and silly.

The second is that taste about good songs range incredibly. While it may be universally accepted that Enigma, the 1812 Overture, or Ravel's "Balera" are undeniably erotic, those country fans would indulge in Garth Brooks before leaping in bed, and the R&B lovers would undress to Luther Vandross.

However, it is not such a pretentious thing to talk about inappropriate music to have sex to. It doesn't take a ton of experience to listen to a song and say, "Boy, wouldn't that put a dead stop on any hormones that I have raging." Plus, in every genre, from country to alternative, there are very unsexy and unerotic songs. Therefore, and with no hesitation, I present the Top 10 Songs Not To Have Sex To. In other words, I challenge you the public to have a satisfying night of lovemaking while listening to one or more of these songs...

10. "Jesus Built My Hot Rod"— Ministry. Some of the sexiest songs have a really nice, slow and sensual rhythm to induce pelvic thrusts. This song is not one of those. Not only loud and harsh, but is anchored by deep and really fast rhythms. Really fast. If you and your partner tried to actually keep up with this rhythm, you would both end up in traction or unconscious. Or both.

9. "Hey Joe" — Jimi Hendrix. Now don't get me wrong, I love Jimi. "Hey Joe" is a classic slice of psychedelia from the sixties. What's the problem then? Any song that describes a jealous lover shooting his companion and then running to Mexico, as this one does, is bound to kill an amorous mood in a second.

8. "Blood"— Pearl Jam. Eddie Vedder lets out three minutes of the most hellish screaming ever recorded. You'd think he swallowed a bottle of Drano before recording, and after the first minute, your ears start to bleed and all your senses jar. Not very erotic, eh?

7. "Don't Worry, Be Happy" — Bobby McFerrin. This is a fairly dippy song to begin with. All those goofy "doo be doos" and whistling make this rate high on the annoyance scale. Plus, with something as complex as sex sometimes is, the last thing you need is someone reminding you to be happy. How about you get off my case, Bobby, and go be happy by yourself?

6. "Unlovable"— Smiths. There isn't one couple who really needs is Morrisey in the background whining and sobbing about how nobody loves him, and nobody ever will. This song can make

Sexual rivalry prevails war hits new territory

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Down in the deep, steaming hot, humid, bushy forests of Central America, a new form of warfare was born. Natives got Harvard PhDs in psychology with scholarships from the International Development Agency. They were then recruited by the United Nations Security Council to study the geometric increase in the population of Central America.

Their mission was to find innovative alternatives to curve down the Malthusian growth of the revolutionary forces of the isthmus that were threatening to surpass with their sexual prowess the dominance of the well-armed Marines.

The revolutionary Army called itself the Sendero Excitante (SEx). Far reaching field work showed how the guerrillas quietly reproduced at night while the Marines masturbated to the grunts of Roseanne Arnold.

Every morning the few, the proud, the Marines had to face the many, the seductive, the SExitantes. It was a psychological shock to the invaders to see how the co–ed SEx army never shrunk, regardless of the efficiency of their deadly work. The strategy of the SEx army was to attack at night when the Marines were back in their barracks smelling the dense odors of their male comrades.

At that time the ambush began: the SExitantes hid in couples, blanketed by the tropical night, slowly uncovering the lovely weapons, ready to receive the necessary hot lubricants for the ammunition to ignite. Together the couples had to simoultaneously grasp, rock, bite and lick the heavy artillery. The steam from the burning fluids and the lustful scent of perdition quickly travelled to the Marine headquarters, arousing the sexual instincts of the lonely, defenseless soldiers.

When the thunderous order to attack the carnal target was given, howls of revolutionary ecstasy surrounded the horny "gringos." Upon realizing the sexual inferiority the "proud" surrendered, nakedly begging to go back to their sweethearts.

Soon the SEx army had defeated ten platoons of sexually deprived Marines. The National Security Council in an emergency meeting to discuss a new fighting strategy, heard the testimony of the native psychologists. The the Father. This man always looks different in every role he plays. And he's so amazingly sexy.

5. Anthony Hopkins. He gives every character he plays a different depth and his performances are always top–notch. He's also older than the typical "stud," but I think he's hot.

6. Michael Jordan. He's the topic of controversy right now because many feel that he shouldn't be trying out for the White Sox. Sports be damned, I just think he's beautiful.

7. David Letterman. So Letterman isn't exactly a raging stud, but he's funky. Who wouldn't want to hang out with him? Plus, how in the hell can I have a legitimate top ten list without including the King of Top Ten?

8. John Malkovich. I have two words: Dangerous Liaisons. He was incredible. He's not sexy, but there is something about him.

9. Brad Pitt. The stomach muscles seen in Thelma and Louise are burned forever in my psyche. He's almost too sexy.

10. Denzel Washington. I love Denzel Washington. I sat through Pelican Brief and kept turning to my friend to tell him just that. The man is so attractive. And he's humble. According to him, his newfound stardom doesn't make him walk any slower past the mirror. Sadly, he too is married. I can always hope for a divorce.

you feel lonely even when you are with somebody, and that can't be good for sex, now can it?

5. "Too Drunk To Fuck" — Dead Kennedys. I think this one is pretty much self explanatory...

4. "Bring the Noise"— Public Enemy. Rap can be a very sexual music style, what with those thumping basslines shivering up and down your spine. Public Enemy, however, can use some especially grating and distorted sounds. Besides, what would your partner think if you put on a song that implores "bring the noise" over and over again just before sex? More importantly, how would you feel if he/she started to wave his/her hands in the air and chant along "somebody say yeah!" during the song?

3. "Women I Never Had"— Hank Williams. Another fairly self explanatory song. Whiskey–drenched machoism is not really that sexy.

2. Any Polka Collection Whatsoever. Who likes polka? Obviously no one who has ever had sex. Somehow funny suspenders and an accordion don't get my loins burning with desire. The only things more consistently annoying than polka are lakeside mosquitoes. Even then you can use bug spray. There is no defense against polka.

1. The Theme from "Sesame Street." Okay, say you're preparing for an evening of love, and you and your partner are just getting all close and snuggly. Suddenly, the voices of hundreds of four–year–old children start singing "suuuunny day, chasin' the clouds away..." You begin to picture Big Bird and Grover, Ernie and Bert. You picture Cookie Monster and Snuffalupagus. You picture your partner as a four year old watching "Sesame Street." You feel guilty. You feel really little. You feel like you don't want to have sex anymore. (Unless, of course, you have some bizzare fetish for Kermit the Frog.) I think you get the picture..

Marines suffered from "Sexus Inferioridum," a condition impossible to resolve given the current ban on homosexuals and women in the front lines.

The military strategists didn't believe the psychologists' theory and agreed to send 20,000 more, soon to be sexually incompetent, Marines. The psychologists went back down to the deep, steaming hot, humid, bushy forests of Central America and established Sexual Disorders of America that meteorically progressed with the arrival of the new troops. As for the SEx Army, it became the sexual symbol for all the Revolutionary forces of the Developing World next to Che Guevara, Ho Chi Min and of course, Menudo.

Chief wants more cops

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Last weekend's fights in front of North Pleasant Street bars Delano's and Time Out have come at the perfect time for the Amherst Police Department.

Last December, the APD filed a request to the town manager for permission to hire more cops in the department. They asked if they could have at least six new cops. There are currently 31 policemen in the department.

Chief of the Amherst Police Department Donald Meyer said last weekend's incidents have clearly showed their understaffed problem when the UMass police and the State Police were called in for assistance.

Meyer said there is a need for more cops on the force because he feels they do not have enough police and they need more help in town.

"The mass majority of the community is college students. So, obviously we have a problem all over the town with parties and alcohol," Meyer said.

The presentation made by the police department was approved by the town manager in December after he reviewed the budget for the fiscal year.

Nancy Maglione, finance director of the Board of Selectmen, said once the request is approved by the town manager, the next step is to confront the Selectmen's Board.

"On Monday night at the Board of Selectmen's meeting, the Police Chief and other members of the department asked to have more money so they could have more cops," Maglione said.

"After they made their request, people asked questions. First they asked about what they were exactly going to do with the money, and then what their actual need for the money was," she said.

Last night at 7 p.m. in the Bangs Community Center, the finance committee, which is an independent group of seven volunteers, listened to the request and discussed whether the issue is supportable or not.

"The main issue on the police departments request has to do

S. Africa divided on new elections

By TOM COHEN
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Nelson Mandela registered his African National Congress to contest in the nation's first all–race election in April, but pro–apartheid Whites decided Thursday to boycott the vote.

The decision by the Afrikaner Volksfront, an umbrella group of right–wing Whites seeking an independent White homeland, came two days before a deadline for parties to register for the historic election.

But the government said Thursday the deadline could be pushed back, and efforts continued to resume negotiations aimed at getting the Afrikaner group and its dissident allies to take part in the April vote.

A boycott could increase political violence that killed more than 3,000 Blacks last year and threatens South Africa's ability to hold the first elections open to the Black majority.

Mandela made the ANC the first formerly banned opposition group to register for the election when he signed the registration papers Thursday. The ANC, South Africa's largest political group, is expected to sweep the vote.

Talks between the government, ANC and the opposition Freedom Alliance deadlocked this week over the powers of regional governments in a new constitution.

Alliance members, including the Afrikaner Volksfront and conservative Black groups such as the Inkatha Freedom Party and

SGA reacts to chancellor's tuition plan

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association leaders talked with University of Massachusetts Chancellor David K. Scott yesterday on the deadline for the his decision on tuition and fee increases.

Two weeks ago SGA leaders asked Scott to make a decision about whether the University would continue to raise tuition and fees this year. The SGA had asked Scott not to make any increases.

"SGA is extremely upset that tuition and fees have gone up 166 percent since 1988," said the chair of public relations Loretta Curry. "We can't pay any more. We don't feel we should have to."

SGA gave Scott a two week deadline to make a decision on tuition and fee increases, or according to SGA president David Nunez, exciting things will happen.

Scott met with SGA leaders yesterday on the day of the deadline.

"Chancellor Scott said he would support a 3 percent increase in tuition and a 4.2 percent increase in fees," Curry said.

This will work out to a $600 to $800 increase in tuition and fees for in–state students, and a $1000 to $1200 increase for out–of–state students according to Curry.

"In regards to the Chancellor's response, the students are really upset," Curry said. "They don't understand how an administration that cares about us so much can turn away without regard to the most important area."

"Scott responded to the meeting with a press release saying he will also work with them to boost the state allocation to student financial aid assistant.

Scott promised to increase the campus' commitment to financial aid if student costs do rise by dedicating a portion of the increased revenues to helping those who cannot afford the tuition and fee hikes according to the press release.

According to the press release, the UMass system has asked for a $23 million increase, but Gov. William Weld's budget keeps the funding level at $322 million with the possibility of up to $4 million in strategic monies.

"What we are most upset about is that the administration says they care about the students, they say they care about the students and they want them to be happy," Curry said.

"The Chancellor almost seems as if he is contradicting himself," said Curry. "We get the feeling that he is saying these statements just to keep us quiet."

SGA had no comment on immediate plans, but sources say they will act quickly, possibly this morning.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina — People popped open windows shuttered during 22 months of war and cautiously peeked out. A few smiled as they stepped out on their broken balconies.

Children emerged from their shell–shattered apartments to run through the roads that had been off–limits for so long.

"I never imagined it was so beautiful on this side of the street," said 11–year–old Elvida Cernica.

The reckless signs of hope began just a few minutes after a U.N. tank pulled up near the Brotherhood and Unity Bridge, a place that hasn't seen much of either in two years.

Suddenly, the adjacent boulevard cluttered with gutted trucks and streetcars, known as Sniper Alley, was alive with laughing children heedless to the Serb snipers 100 yards away across the Miljacka River.

The children darted around the surprised, heavily armed U.N. Protection Force soldiers and played on a creaking seesaw in a park where shaggy grass hasn't been trimmed in 22 months.

Too many cease–fires have come and gone for Sarajevans to believe in them anymore. But Thursday's truce, backed by a NATO ultimatum and the deployment of U.N. troops, offered too much hope for some of it not to infect the children.

"I am not afraid of the Serbian snipers anymore because UNPROFOR is here," said Merima Durakovic, 11. "I'm afraid of my mother, because she will kill me if she sees me standing here."

At noon, the cease–fire between Bosnian Serb and government troops officially went into effect. A French armored personnel carrier pulled up to the bridge, took six rounds of sniper fire and zoomed away.

But a few minutes later, the first of six U.N. carriers and a tank took up positions on nearby Sniper Alley, cannon barrels pointed toward Serb positions across the bridge, 100 yards to the south.

Harding files against USOC

By BOB BAUM
Associated Press

OREGON CITY, Ore. — She doesn't have the money, she doesn't have the time, and if she did show up at the U.S. Olympic Committee's disciplinary hearing, she wouldn't get a fair shake, anyway.

Tonya Harding cited all those reasons in dozens of pages of court documents filed Thursday in a lawsuit seeking $25 million in damages if the USOC blocks her from figure skating in the Olympics.

The U.S. champion has been asked to defend herself at a special hearing in Oslo on Tuesday that will determine whether her role in the attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan warrants banishment from the Winter Games.

USOC executive director Harvey Schiller, reached at the Games in Lillehammer, Norway, declined to say immediately how the USOC would respond. However, he said committee lawyers were preparing a response.

"It's eight hours earlier in Colorado," Schiller said referring to the USOC headquarters in Colorado Springs.

A hearing was set for Friday on Harding's request for a court order against the USOC.

In one affidavit filled in Clackamas County Circuit Court, Harding said:

"I cannot afford to pay the expenses of attorneys and witnesses to appear for a hearing in Oslo ... and as a result, will not have the opportunity to be assisted in the presentation of my case, to confront

Cairo ceremony seen as PR move

By SAID GHAZALI
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip — Despite a new security agreement with Israel, that Yasser Arafat called a major step forward for Palestinians, there were no celebrations — much less change — on the streets of the occupied territories Thursday.

On both sides, many saw Wednesday's signing ceremony in Cairo, Egypt, as basically a public relations move.

After two meetings last month between Arafat and Shimon Peres, Israel's foreign minister, failed to produce such a deal, some said neither man apparently wanted to face an increasingly skeptical public with empty hands.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Thursday it would take at least a month to finish an agreement, and there would be no prisoner releases or Israeli troop withdrawal until then.

"Our people have lost confidence in all talks and negotiations because they don't see any change in the reality," said Diab Al–Loh, a member of the PLO delegation to peace talks. "Our people are waiting for change."

Israel's right–wing also saw the agreement as politically motivated.

Moshe Katzav, head of the opposition Likud Party faction in the Israeli parliament, said Rabin was under pressure to make an agreement because he had to show something for all the efforts. He condemned the Cairo document as a further step toward a Palestinian state that would endanger Israel's existence.

Israel was to begin pulling troops out of the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho two months ago under the terms of the Israel–PLO peace pact.

But such questions as who would control the borders and how much land Israel would cede around Jericho have proved nettlesome.

On Wednesday, Arafat and Peres initialed an agreement that resolved key issues blocking the Israeli withdrawal. Israel released a text of the Cairo agreement Thursday, minus the maps defining areas under Palestinian control.

Palestinians won the right to raise the Palestinian flag and post armed police at crossings from Jordan and Egypt into the autonomous enclaves — the Gaza Strip and the West Bank region of Jericho. Humiliating questioning and searches of Palestinians are to end. Palestinians achieved a foothold in the Dead Sea and limited control of two religious sites in the West Bank.

Israel, on the other hand, maintains all Jewish settlements in Gaza, controls roads leading to them and keeps army bases near the settlements.

Israel also maintains ultimate authority over border crossings, and the right to veto anyone entering.

After initialing the deal Wednesday, Arafat said, "We can say that Palestine — and the name of Palestine — has returned to the map of the Middle East."

But on the streets of Jericho and Gaza, where the population waits for the Israeli troops to leave, there were no celebrations.

Bophuthatswana Black homeland, want autonomous regions free of domination by the ANC.

The Volksfront, which claims to represent the nation's three million Afrikaners — the Dutch-descended White settlers of South Africa — said it would boycott the election and reject the results.

"We can't be associated to be part of the establishment of a Communist government in South Africa," said Afrikaner leader Ferdi Hatzenberg.

He said the group would seek a peaceful way to get a white homeland, but also would put "pressure on the election in various ways." He didn't elaborate.

A recent series of bombings in rural communities, including some that damaged ANC offices and electricity pylons, have been blamed on white extremists. Police have detained nine suspected right-wing Whites in connection with the blasts.

According to a news report Thursday, the Afrikaner-based Dutch Reformed Church is seeking foreign mediation on the issue of creating a white homeland. The conservative church is the religious backbone of the Afrikaners.

Dole takes aim at foreign policy

By JOHN KING
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate GOP leader Bob Dole delivered a scathing critique of President Clinton's foreign policy Thursday, labeling Clinton timid and saying America abdicating its global supremacy because it lacked "real leaders in the White House."

In a speech to the annual Conservative Political Action Conference, Dole said Clinton has repeatedly cried "wolf" in threatening Bosnian Serbs, offered communist North Korea incentives even as it ignores demands for nuclear inspections and let Russia veto opening NATO to the new Eastern European democracies.

On Capitol Hill, however, Clinton's announcement of a new NATO initiative to stop the violence in the former Yugoslavia was endorsed by some key Democrats Thursday.

"I am hopeful that this action will encourage all parties to renew their efforts for a negotiated settlement to this tragic conflict," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine.

Dole also welcomed the NATO plan but said it must not be "just another cry of wolf — a cry we have heard far too often from NATO and from the White House."

"Unfortunately, our image and position abroad is on the same downward spiral as during the Carter years, when the United States was feared by none, respected by few and ignored by many," Dole said. "The bottom line is that America, under the Clinton administration, is abdicating American leadership at the United Nations, at NATO and around the globe."

Under the NATO initiative, pushed by the United States and France, the Serbs would face allied air strikes unless they pull back artillery from hills surrounding Sarajevo.

Dole called on Clinton anew to unilaterally lift the arms embargo against Bosnian Muslims, and also to reverse his "willingness to sub-

Couple discusses bi-able options

By COLLEEN SHANAHAN
Collegian Correspondent

A social policy graduate student and a cognitive science graduate student told the University of Massachusetts that bisexual bigotry is still common and spoke about nonmonogamous relationships among bisexuals.

Rebecca Kaplan of Tufts University and Annie Senghas of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology were invited to UMass by Ben Zeman, programming coordinator for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual (GLB) Concerns.

The workshop forum allowed students to openly discuss their fears and concerns in an environment free of judgmental views and homophobia.

There is a bisexual community here at the university and elsewhere. Kaplan said she feels that bisexuals are slowly gaining ground, though she said bisexual bigotry is still rampant.

"Bigotry is still prevalent; as the movements progress, so does the bigotry," said Kaplan. There are now eight states which have passed legislation banning discrimination and harassment of lesbians, gays and bisexuals. There are still 26 states in which it is illegal to have sex with a person of the same sex.

Senghas and Kaplan said that they believe that part of the problems experienced by bisexuals stems from the lesbian and gay community. Some gays and lesbians feel that some bisexuals use their preference as a means of empowerment. They see systematic oppressions and the threats of conforming to the norms as weakening the lesbian and gay movements.

Kaplan and Senghas said homophobia is rooted in these viewpoints, as if a bisexual is agreeing with gender roles. Some gays and lesbians view bisexuality as abandonment or hatred of "the cause." Senghas began to see this mindset when she first came out of the closet as a bisexual.

Though she originally came out as a lesbian, she said the transition was very difficult. She said she felt a sense of rejection from her lesbian and gay friends, and found coming out as a lesbian to have been an easier, more gradual change.

In response to the theory that bisexuals use their sexuality as a means of empowerment, Senghas said that if homosexuality were perfectly acceptable, bisexuals would be no threat to the lesbian and gay community.

Kaplan said coming out of the closet was nothing short of a relief for her. The pressure, secrets and fears were alleviated, and she is happy and comfortable with her decision.

Another topic on the agenda dealt briefly with heterosexual oppression. Kaplan and Senghas said there are indeed other possible combinations aside from the monogamous dyad. According to them, society favors monogamy, while dating members of the opposite sex are considered the "norm."

Kaplan and Senghas, involved in a nonmonogamous relationship with each other, invited people to challenge heterosexual oppression and date whomever they choose. Nonmonogamy is about "queer politics."

A brush with greatness

I was nine years old at the time and a fan of what turned out to be one of the greatest bands ever. My cousin Brian, who was going to school at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, asked my mom and dad if I could go see this band and, miraculously, they said yes. Must've had something to do with the fact these guys didn't have crap painted all over their faces.

Brian always acted like the big brother I never had, which means I got punched a lot. My parents, while nervous at the age difference, knew that he'd always look out for me.

Anyway, a kid's first concert is his most exciting, and it was no exception for me. Nowadays, when I talk to my friends about their first concerts, they mention Ratt or Ozzy Ozbourne, but they can't ever touch this tale.

Michael Morrissey

Brian came to Braintree to pick me up on a Thursday night to see one of the best up-and-coming bands out at UMass the next night. They had sort of a desperate, haunting sound which still appeals to me, and I always liked whatever my cousin liked. He had the group's first two or three albums and all the live overseas stuff.

He lived over in Gorman (before the renovations), but before we had a chance to get there, Brian pulled over to help some stranded motorists in Belchertown. Seems their rental car, a 1980 Chrysler K car, had a flat tire and a burnt out engine.

I knew right away these guys weren't from America, but Brian was the one who almost crapped his pants.

"Guy, it's them! Don't let them know you know who they are."

Brian stepped because it was the right thing to do, even though I was tired and wanted to get to his dorm room. He did what my father would have done (and I probably wouldn't), and now we were reaping the benefits.

"Ow's it goin'?" asked the lead singer.

"Pretty good. What seems to be the problem?" Brian replied.

"This bloody car gave out on us. We're on our way to do a concert at UMass tomorrow night. Can you help us get there?"

"Sure thing. Hop in."

Off we rode in Bri's Lincoln Continental down Route 9 on the way to the Howard Johnson's. It wasn't the best hotel they ever stayed in; actually, it was probably quite forgettable.

We got to HoJo's and the band said their "staff" would be waiting for them to call. Because they'd played the Orpheum in Boston two nights before, they'd had trouble getting a hotel with their promoter and band crew, who were in the Hotel Northampton.

"Listen, we owe somethin' to you. Can I give ya two tix to our concert tomorrow night, front row?"

I had to speak up. "Mr. Hewson, we're already going to your concert. My cousin and I are the two biggest fans you got."

Brian was about to punch me when our kind benefactor replied, "Hell then, let's hit a liquor store and pick up a few cases of Heineken. You boys are hangin' with us tonight."

I told them a lie. I said I was practically 14. They didn't care because there were plenty of suds to go around. After two beers I started getting the spins.

The best part of the night came when they broke out their instruments. Adam lost something in the broken-down car that's probably very valuable today. He was searching through his duffle bag for 15 minutes to no avail.

"I still haven't found what I'm looking for," he said.

They jammed. Pure and simple, they jammed. No drugs that night, and I don't know if it was because of my age, because they didn't do drugs, or because they didn't feel like it.

The beer was enough. They wailed in the hotel room to the chagrin of their neighbors, who were trying to sleep at 1:30 a.m. I was konked out in a chair when the police almost crashed down the hotel door. I think it was Officer Mentoni who looked at the four guys' passports and said something to the extent of, "I don't know who you guys are, but in this country we don't like rowdy drunks. Go to sleep or we're throwin' you in the tank."

That was it for us. I went back to Gorman thinking I'd had a great time, but the next night was even better. Bowker Auditorium packed in about 700 people for a great band's awesome performance, before the hype, the Joshua Tree or the Fly. At the end of the night we got a wave from Bono, and we knew it we'd always remember it, even if he didn't.

The moral of the story: Always keep your head up for broken down Chryslers. You, too, just might find what you're looking for.

What makes a college great

U.S. News and World Report has recently published yet another issue of "America's Best Colleges." If you didn't know, these yearly issues are dedicated to the colleges and universities of America. Those of you who are familiar with the issue must know the infamous rankings of the "best colleges" in America.

The list has not changed much over the past few years. Harvard University has reigned at the top for the last four years. Unless U.S. News changes the way they determine their rankings, this list will never change. Some of the determinants are questionable and may not really reflect a "great university."

The six attributes that U.S. News uses are: academic reputation (according to various college presidents, deans and admissions directors), student selectivity, faculty resources, financial resources, graduation rate and alumni giving rate. With these determinants, it is no secret or sunrise why the list keeps coming up the way it does.

Does "alumni giving rate" really reflect a good university? It is no surprise that the Ivy League schools have the highest alumni giving rate because most of the students that they accept have high incomes anyway.

Sons and daughters of congressmen, senators and world politicians attend Ivy League schools and other schools of that caliber. Therefore, the alumni giving rate is guaranteed to remain high. State universities, which are geared toward making education affordable, are not as likely to receive high amounts of donations from alumni.

But there are still excellent state schools which can provide an education of just as high a quality as private, richly-endowed schools. State schools such as U. Cal–Berkeley, Virginia, UNC–Chapel Hill, UCLA, Rutgers, Wisconsin and, of course, UMass–Amherst are highly respected for a quality educational experience and distinguished faculty and alumni.

Another factor, "student selectivity," may be a questionable indicator of a top–notch university. Harvard and Princeton held the lowest acceptance rates at 16 percent. But that doesn't mean that they accepted the top 16 percent of applicants; each school has its own unique admissions process.

Most schools, especially those of the Ivy League caliber, give preference to those with alumni relationships because it can help boost future alumni donations. Also, schools have ratios to which they must adhere when making admissions decisions. For example, UNC–Chapel Hill has a 35 percent acceptance rate, but only 13 percent of out–of–state applicants are accepted.

Other goals such as racial and gender equality and international diversity also affect acceptance rates. An applicant with high qualifications may get nudged out by an applicant who is not as qualified but has alumni relationships, high income or fulfills a racial or gender role. In addition, most state schools have high acceptance rates partly because they have room for many students. For example, UMass–Amherst can house about 12,000 students, but Harvard can only house about 5,000.

Sons and daughters of congressmen, senators and world politicians attend Ivy League schools and other schools of that caliber. Therefore, the alumni giving rate is guaranteed to remain high.

David Chan

Although U.S. News' list is biased, I think that there are some determinants used by U.S. News that are reflective of a top–notch university. "Faculty resources" is essentially student to faculty ratio and percentage of faculty. "Financial resources" is the average amount of money spent per student on instruction, services, administration and academic support.

But there are other factors which U.S. News should try using. How about the percentage of graduates acquiring a job when they graduate? What percentage land a job related to their major? How about the availability of extracurricular activities within the university? How about the percentage of applicants who were accepted with no regard to a quota?

The determinants that U.S. News has traditionally used do not necessarily reflect top–notch universities. It is too complex an issue to rely on a comparison of every university in the country according to only six attributes — especially when some of the attributes are questionable.

David Chan is a freshman journalism major.

Student government must work together

Recently, the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors (BOG) has been attacked by the leadership of the Student Government Association (SGA) and the Graduate Student Senate (GSS). I see this as students working against students and not what student government is all about.

The GSS representatives have finally rejoined the BOG. However, they have not come with a vision of serving student needs in the Campus Center/Student Union (CC/SU) complex. Many of their members sit only on the Review and Restructuring Committee and, therefore, are not able to learn and understand what the BOG is all about. As for the other graduate representatives, they have yet to get on a committee and are in violation of basic membership requirements.

Not only has the lack of work by the graduate representatives on the BOG been destructive, but they have also (without truly understanding the Board) waged a PR war against it in the Nov./Dec. 1993 issue of The Voice. The editorial in that issue was not only destructive, it was also twisted.

The graduates' attack against the BOG does not stop there. The last three years they have ignore their funding responsibilities to the CC/SU BOG even though graduate students benefit daily from the BOG's existence. As a result of this financial irresponsibility, BOG funding to the Craft Center, Art Gallery, University Productions and Concerts and the University Video Center had to be cut. And while the GSS has cut their support, the BOG still supports services for graduate students to set up tables on the Campus Center concourse. During the last three years, the GSS has ignored students' needs in the CC/SU complex and has ignored the principles of student government.

As for the SGA, during the last three years they too, have ignored and damaged the Campus Center/Student Union BOG. The SGA did not help the BOG when our funding from the GSS was cut. Instead, they sided against the BOG and with those organizations whose funding had to be cut, rather than trying to work things out.

Most recently, the SGA has stated that it will cut BOG's funding and reorganize the Board to make it more efficient — a task of which they have no understanding because of a lack of communication between the two organizations. In fact, since the BOG takeover in 1991, the SGA leadership has not put any effort into trying to learn about the BOG and get it back on track. They have not come to the BOG to find out what we are doing but, instead, only listen to rhetoric. Now the SGA leadership has begun putting out irresponsible PR against the BOG in the Liberator without first finding out the truth.

If the Student Government Association leadership and the Graduate Student Senate leadership believe in principles of student empowerment and in student advocacy in the Campus Center/Student Union complex, they will end their train of destruction and irresponsibility toward the Board of Governors. They will at least try to improve the BOG rather than unjustly destroying it.

Outburst reflects negative attitudes

To the editor:

This semester I am taking Public Health 233, "Sex, Drugs and AIDS." On Tuesday, Feb. 1 and Thursday, Feb. 3 we watched Longtime Companion, a film about how AIDS first affected the gay community and the aftermath.

During the course of the movie, a member of the UMass basketball team and his friends felt the need to comment that the film was a "faggot movie" and that it was "nasty" when they kissed. They also felt it necessary to yell, "Don't go that route" at one point when one man touched another, as well as snickering and coughing whenever a man touched another man.

I realize that images of men kissing men can be unsettling and uncomfortable for people who have never been exposed to it. But it is imperative for people to at least try to have an open mind if we are all going to live together. This is not an issue of political correctness, it is an issue of being human. It is our responsibility as human beings to respect one another, to treat each other as we would like to be treated.

Our university is not only made up of heterosexuals. We are all different. We all contribute something unique and worthwhile to this place that I think of as my second home. I have always taken a great deal of pride in everything this campus has to offer, from a phenomenal faculty to excellent social and entertainment opportunities and a fantastic athletic program that promotes school spirit.

I found those comments particularly unsettling because they were made by a person who is supposed to representing our school at tournaments and games across the country. I go to many basketball games and have been going for years, but now I will be looking at the team in a different light.

The basketball team has a tremendous influence over others on this campus and in the community, and should use that influence wisely and remember that you are talking about someone's parent, sibling and friend. Conduct yourself with maturity and dignity at all times. Be a role model this entire community can be proud of.

My wish is that Coach Calipari will not only help the men under his tutelage become better basketball players, but better people, because that is something they will have long after the cheers of the crowd have vanished.

Objects to coverage of women's hoop

To the editor:

I was disturbed by the article by Michael Morrissey in the Feb. 7 issue of the Collegian entitled "Carroll, UMass beat URI WRams."

I am a senior journalism major and this article was a blatant display of what I am taught to fight to change about the media in today's society — misrepresentation of the facts. Women's sports, as a whole, are misrepresented on a consistent basis, if they are represented at all.

In reference to the article mentioned, I have a few things I would like to bring to light. Octavia Thomas earned Rookie of the Year honors last year and is currently our leading scorer again this year. Morrissey not only misidentified Octavia Thomas as a freshman, but made it the theme of his coverage. "A trio of freshmen players snatched victory from defeat..."

Secondly, our game against URI was televised for the first time on a national television network (SportsChannel). Most importantly, this double–overtime win put us at third place in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

My aggravation and frustration towards the Collegian and its poor representation of (or lack of) women's athletics grows stronger every time I try to recognize the black and white type as a news source. I have become desperate with hope for a change, but it only seems to get worse.

As a member of the women's basketball team, I could not help but notice the limited coverage that we receive. There were no articles about our road trip to Philly where we played two important A–10 games. We had a win in overtime at Temple. Our second game against St. Joseph's came down to the last seconds of the game when Octavia Thomas had a crucial steal and a chance to win the game. We were unable to convert the basket and lost by a point.

There was, however, a picture of freshman guard Beth Kuzmeski with a subtitle stating that we'd played Temple the night before (that was the night we played St. Joe's).

Articles covering women's sports get shorter while the information continues to lack the deserved outcome of intelligent reporting and research.

As a UMass student, I feel cheated because our school paper represents only a few out of the 20,000+ person enrollment.

As a basketball team, we know and understand the importance of the games we win and lose. We support and recognize our individual achievements as well as our team accomplishments. It would be nice, however, to see the same in the Collegian . . . unfortunately, we will have to wait until the Collegian recognizes Itself as a true news source.

Looking for volunteers

Community Service Program aids groups, students

By JAMES FINLAW
Collegian Correspondent

The Community Service Program is a new organization on campus designed to assist students in finding community service opportunities, while serving as a liaison between campus groups already involved in community service through the university's Community Service Council (V.I.V.A.).

Organized by the Community Service Program and V.I.V.A (Volunteers involved in Vital Action Service Council), the third annual Volunteer Fair took place in the Campus Center Concourse on Wednesday afternoon. In attendance were 16 agencies on hand to describe their volunteer opportunities to students.

Comprised of approximately 40 students, faculty members and administrators, the V.I.V.A. council meets bi–monthly to share information, plan events and develop ways to promote community service on campus. The council is always looking for new members who are interested in either starting their own volunteer group, or who simply wish to learn more about community service.

According to Community Service Program Coordinator Lori Mckinney, "students should know community service is not only for those they are helping, but also for themselves." Mckinney said she believes students who become involved in community service activities come away with "a great sense of accomplishment," as well as getting "actual hands–on work experience which will be valuable later in life."

V.I.V.A. council member Elana Aitkan echoed Mckinney's sentiments, and also added that the "student response to the fair has been quite encouraging." Aitkan said of the 16 agencies in attendance at the fair, many had been approached by students who were "sincerely interested" in becoming involved.

In addition to the Volunteer Fair, other spring semester Community Service Program events are being held. From Feb. 14 to Feb. 25 the first annual "Fill–A–Bus" food and clothing donation drive will be held. On Feb. 23 the first annual Community Service Planning Conference and Awards Dinner will take place.

Springfield Service Day is on Feb. 26, and the second annual "Into Amherst" Service Day will occur on April 30. Any students interested in getting more information about this program should stop by the Community Service Program Office at Machmer Hall E–25, or call 545–3327.

and cross–examine adverse witnesses, and to call witnesses and present oral and written evidence and arguments as required under the USOC constitution."

In another affidavit, Harding's coach, Diane Rawlinson, said requiring the skater to appear at the hearing "will make final preparation for the Olympic competition impossible." The Games start Saturday; women's figure skating begins Feb. 23.

"To allow such a procedure will severely prejudice Ms. Harding's ability to compete and will work to her severe detriment relevant to her competitors," it said. Rawlinson said in her affidavit that due to security concerns, Harding's Olympic team leader had recommended that Harding delay her travel plans to Lillehammer and make arrangement through the USOC's travel bureau. She said final travel arrangements have been confirmed, indicating it may be impossible to get Harding to Oslo by Tuesday, the day the hearing starts.

The documents noted that the USOC allowed shotputter Jim Doehring to compete in the 1992 Olympics even though he pleaded guilty to a drug charge in 1991.

Candidates Wanted For

1994 UMASS Mathematical Modelling Team

WHAT: There are two positions open on the 1994 University of Massachusetts Amherst Mathematical Modelling Team. Alternates are also needed.

WHEN: IMMEDIATELY. This competition is held on campus during the Washington's Birthday Weekend, Feb. 18-21.

ELIGIBILITY: Undergraduate status at UMA during the Spring Semester 1994. Second Bachelors students may be eligible.

INFORMATION: The Department of Mathematics and Statistics has entered two (2) teams in the Tenth Annual Mathematical Contest in Modelling an international competition for undergraduates. Each team had three members. The objective is to develop a solution to an applied mathematics problem and to submit it in suitable form prior to midnight Monday, Feb. 21, 1994. UMA teams have done very well in the past - the 1987, 1988, and 1990 were judged to be Meritorious, the highest ranking in the contest. The '87 team had another distinction as it was the first all female team to represent a coeducational institution.

APPLICATIONS: Inquiries and applications should be directed to:

Professor Ed Connors
1122 Lederle Research Tower
Department of Mathematics and Statistics
University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003

E-mail: connors@math.umass.edu
Phone:545-6037

Applicants should submit a brief statement of interest and a list of courses and relevant experiences. Names of two (2) faculty members who can attest to the suitability of the applicant for such an endeavor must accompany the application.

QUALIFICATIONS: Evidence of high quality work in mathematical sciences. Problem solving skills and the ability to work with others as part of a research and problem solving team are required. Communication skills (especially the ability to write well with clarity, precision, coherence, and comprehension) and computer information science proficiency are essential for each team.

Track hopes for better A-10's

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

It's a big deal in basketball, it's a big deal in softball. And it's a big deal in men's track and field, too.

It's the Atlantic 10 Championships, and for University of Massachusetts Coach Ken O'Brien's squad, it looms large at 10 a.m. tomorrow on the campus of West Virginia University in Morgantown, W.Va.

UMass was mired in the cellar at last year's meet, which was held at the University of Rhode Island, scoring just 34 points. From the start of this season, it was one of O'Brien's chief goals to improve that placing.

The only A–10 competition UMass has faced this season is URI, and it has given the Minutemen fits. The Rams were a cut above UMass and everyone else at the consolation meet of the New England Challenge Cup, which they won handily at Boston University Jan. 21.

And when O'Brien led his team into URI's Kingston campus last Sunday, he anticipated the meet would be a "test run" for his gang in preparation for the A–10s.

Wrong. Once again the Rams did their nickname justice, butting their horns to the tune of a 47–point victory over the bridesmaid, the Coast Guard, 171–124. And what of UMass? Picked by some to win, they could only show with 107 points.

Here's the scary part. At last year's A–10's, URI finished fifth with only 59 points, chicken feed compared to the top two entries, West Virginia and Rutgers, which earned 162 and 141 points, respectively.

Watch out for St. Joseph's, too, which set three Mackai Field House records at the 1993 A–10 Championships.

Who have we left out? Oh yeah, Temple. It did the same thing. All told, 15 Mackai bests were recorded that day, while UMass might have celebrated its two third places, courtesy of Kevin Greenhalgh in the 5,000 meters and the 4 x 800–meter relay quartet.

But the Law of Independent Assortment is rarely remembered when speaking of sporting events. Now for your daily Mendelian genetics refresher course: the law says each act is performed with no influence from any previous act.

O'Brien hopes it is not broken Saturday. Moreover, fear of a repeat of 1993's lackluster display would do him no good.

What's next, WWF, roller derby?

TORONTO (AP) — There will be NBA basketball in Toronto, after all. But you won't be able to bet on it in Ontario's sports lottery.

The league and the provincial government announced an agreement Thursday that clears the way for a Toronto team to begin play in the 1995–96 season.

The NBA threatened to void the Toronto franchise if league games were not removed from the Pro–Line lottery. But the issue was settled when the NBA and the Toronto team agreed to contribute more than $7.5 million to various programs and charities in Ontario.

John Bitove Jr., who heads the Toronto franchise group, praised Ontario Premier Bob Rae for getting the deal done.

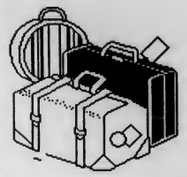
"The premier brought the ball up the court very well with only seconds left in the game and sank a 3–pointer," Bitove said.

NBA commissioner David Stern said the agreement showed the league is willing to pay for its anti–gambling stance.

"It's a principle," he said. "And we are prepared to pay to support the principle."

The NBA awarded the franchise to Toronto in November on condition that league games be removed from Ontario's sports lottery. Rae said he wanted an NBA franchise in Toronto but couldn't afford to give up the $4.5 million in revenue from betting on basketball.

In the end, the NBA and the Toronto team put up the cash and the province agreed to remove pro basketball from its lottery. Rae said the deal was worth about $7.5 million over three years and as much as $9.75 million over the next five years.



"We feel we came out way ahead," he said.

The agreement was reached just a few days before an NBA–imposed deadline for resolving the issue.

FAC to hold jazz tribute

TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

Have you had enough of winter's onslaught of snow and ice? Warm up to the sultry sounds of Afro-American jazz on Saturday at 8 p.m., when the Fine Arts Center will raise the temperature with a tribute concert to the original mambo king, Mario Bauza.

Bauza's Afro-Cuban Jazz Orchestra, now conducted by Victor Paz, will be joined by Rudy Calzado on vocals, Carlos "Patato" Valdez, congas, and special guest, Paulito D'Rivera on the clarinet and saxophone.

Bauza's music is a hybrid of African American jazz spliced with Afro-Cuban rhythms. Mario Bauza, the real life Mambo King, cultivated this unlikely mix, turning it into an international sensation. This new synthesis of music ultimately changed the course of modern jazz.

Bauza was always proud of his heritage and refused to call his music anything other than Afro-Cuban. He felt that the more popular names like "salsa" and Latin Jazz undermined the authenticity of the music's origins.

Bauza not only incited people to sway and move to his music, but he also was largely responsible for introducing the mambo, rhumba and the cha cha to North America, which later gave birth to the lambada and salsa Basco. His music continued to gain popularity through the years with help from renown musicians Cab Callaway, Charlie Parker and Dexter Gordon.

Even after his death last spring at age 81, Bauza continued to make his presence felt. He created the mambo craze in the 1940s and '50s, and later on in the 1990s with the release of the movie The Mambo Kings.

Bauza's 20-piece orchestra band reflects the type of energy and vibrancy he wanted his music to incorporate. He founded the orchestra in 1976 and featured many acclaimed musicians, such as Saturday's Victor Paz and congoist Carlos Valdez.

Tickets for the Mario Bauza Concert begin at $11, with half-price tickets for Five College students and $8 for children 16 and under. For more tickets or more information call the Fine Arts Center at 545–2511.

German & film departments sponsor semester–long series

COURTESY THE GOETHE INSTITUTE

The Gleiwitz Affair will be shown during the film series.

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Germanic languages and literatures department and the interdepartmental program in film studies, in conjunction with the Goethe Institute of Boston, is currently sponsoring "The Cinema of the German Democratic Republic." This film series features one film each week, and runs throughout the semester.

The series was created with three main points in mind: East Germany in retrospect, anti–fascism films and the work of director Konrad Wolf.

Because of the old political system of East Germany, its national cinema operated like that of eastern European and Russian nationalized film industries. The industry was thus sponsored as well as restricted by the government. The presentation of such a large collection of East German films is not only a rare event, but an important one.

The films being shown are all new prints of DEFA Film Studio's work that are owned by the Goethe Institute.

Barton Byg, the director of the series and a professor teaching about East German film this semester, named Wolf as the central figure in East German direction. As president of the Academy of Arts, and yet a romantic Russian," Wolf was raised in and attended film school in Russia.

Byg said that response and attendance has been good so far, even with the inclement weather recently. Perhaps this is because East German film is all too often overlooked and because, as Byg stated, "these are important films in film history."

The GDR film series screenings are free and open to the public, and begin each Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m., Herter Hall 231. All films have English subtitles. There are a few films which will be shown on Wednesdays also. A copy of the listing of titles and dates of the film series may be picked up in the German Dept., fifth floor, Herter Hall. For more information call 545–6671.

Sounds give UPC thumbs–up

As a music writer, it is necessary for me to label types of music in order for readers to understand what I am talking about. So I will call a band "industrial thrash" or "dream pop" or "glam rock" to clarify their particular musical style. However, one term that has outlived any usefulness whatsoever in terms of music is "alternative."

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Bolaneau & Matt Audette

"Alternative" was originally used to describe music other than what everyone else was listening to — music that stretched boundaries. Now, with the popularity of groups such as Nirvana and the ubiquitous Smashing Pumpkins, the media (i.e. MTV) has taken it upon themselves to call every new band that comes out "alternative," as a selling point. We desperately need a new term, lest we find NKOTB's latest album sandwiched between Nine Inch Nails and New Order in the "alternative" section.

Is it me or are the boys in Guns N' Roses taking themselves a tad bit too seriously? The band, which has always been known for their elaborate over–the–top videos, have finally out done themselves with their latest for the song Estranged. See Axl Rose shiver and hold himself. (He does this a lot. Is it a personal problem?) See him dive off an ocean liner and sink slowly to his doom. See him become one with nature as he swims with the dolphins. See rock messiah Slash rise from the depths of the raging ocean to play his guitar. Jeez guys, ever heard of the word "pompous?"

All hail the indie–rock God, Pavement is back in town. The high priests of slackerness have taken some hard blows in this column by those who do not realize the greatness these fine lads radiate. But that is all about to change. Their newest release Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain hits the shelves this month (buy multiple copies). Do not be surprised to see people dancing in the streets.

COURTESY DANNY CLINCH

Thumbs up to the ever hard working UPC for bringing the grandaddy of funk George Clinton and his P–Funk All–Stars to the Fine Arts Center. After having his music sampled by every rapper known to man (most recently by Snoop Doggy Dogg in his hit What's My Name) it is nice to see this pioneer of late '70s funk getting the recognition he so deserves.

Is anyone getting sick of seeing the face of Evan Dando? The head Lemmonhead's mug has graced every magazine this side of the equator for the last six months, and it is beginning to grow sickening. I know I will have legions of 14–year–old girls, who think Evan is the only one who understands them, beating down my door with baseball bats, but I had to get this off chest. Hopefully this will be a passing faze (i.e. New Kids on the Block) and the world will realize the "alterna–hunk's" music is really about as exciting as say, watching mold grow.

In SPIN magazine's latest issue Kim and Kelley Deal of The Breeders reveal their secret past, that they were actually . . . well adjusted, happy teen suburbanites. This past reflects itself in their fun–loving twisted pop songs, and is a welcome change from the eternally tormented souls of people like Eddie Vedder and Kurt Cobain.

The end of the world is truly near. Somebody resurrected ABBA, gave them a reggae beat, and called them Ace of Base. Now they top the charts, and I know that somewhere, Bob Marley is getting very upset. Sorry, Bob.

Marcus Camby and the Minutemen defeated URI 70–64 last night in Providence (RI). They will host Temple in the sold out Mullins Center Sunday afternoon at 3:45 p.m. The game will be nationally televised on ABC.

UMass wins, Temple next

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Some games are enthralling, some games are fulfilling, some games are a joy to behold.

This Massachusetts–Rhode Island game last night at the Providence Civic Center was none of the above.

But nonetheless, it was a tough, hard fought 70–64 victory for the Minutemen at the site where UMass was upset last year by URI. Using a 22–10 spurt early in the second half, the Minutemen survived a valiant comeback effort by the Rams to come away with the victory.

With the victory, the Minutemen move to 18–4 overall and 9–0 in the Atlantic 10. UMass Coach John Calipari said he was satisfied with the tough win, a present for his 35th birthday.

"It was a good win for us," said Calipari. "I'm very happy we won the game, I was concerned coming in and justifiably so, I guess."

After opening up a 16–point lead with 7:54 to go, UMass watched URI run off a 14–3 spurt of its own to pull within five late in the second half.

URI's Abdul Fox, who picked up four personal fouls In the first five–and–a–half minutes of the second stanza, led the way for the Rams, scoring 20 of 25 points in the late URI surge.

Just when it appeared that the Rams might make it all the way back, the Minutemen hit clutch shot after clutch shot until the end.

Junior guard Derek Kellogg (13 points, 3 treys, 3 assists) was the biggest Ram killer, knocking down two huge outside shots to keep the Minutemen in charge.

It took Kellogg a while to remember the last game when he hit so many clutch shots.

"I remember when i played, I think it was . . . Holyoke in high school," Kellogg said.

With its run early in the second half, UMass turned a 30– 26 lead into a 52–36 cushion. Scrappy defense and crisp ball movement allowed the Minutemen to finally take advantage of the undermanned Rams.

With 14:40 to go in the game, UMass center Marcus Camby grabbed an offensive rebound and laid the ball in, giving the Minutemen their first double–digit lead of the night at 36–26. On the next trip down the floor, UMass forward Lou Roe (11 points, nine rebounds) found a cutting Mike Williams (nine points) underneath the hoop for a layup and a 12–point bulge, 38–26.

Williams, who in his first game back (see related story) appeared tentative in the first half, made things happen in the second half; he was especially instrumental in the second half surge.

The first half of the game could be best described as uneventful. Neither team was able to establish anything whatsoever.

The Minutemen tried to quickly establish an inside game with Roe, but every time Roe caught the ball in the low post, Rams surrounded the Junior forward like he was a magnet.

The swarming defense helped URI in forcing four early turnovers from Roe, but it also allowed the Minutemen to shoot open threes, of which UMass hit three of six in the first half. Kellogg was the major beneficiary, hitting two of his first four attempts outside the arc.

Calipari was especially liberal in the first half with his substitutions; five subs saw action in the first stanza as Calipari desperately tried to get his team fired up and ready.

Junior center Jeff Meyer played a solid six minutes in the first half as he had a vicious two–handed jam and a pair of free throws for four points. For his aggressive play, Meyer was rewarded a start in the second half in place of Camby, who came out lackadaisical in the first half.

Camby (nine points, four rebounds, four blocks) did, however, play an instrumental role in the second half with a couple of big hoops.

Game Notes: The showdown at the William D. Mullins Center on Sunday between the Minutemen and Temple will be a battle of the top two teams in the A–10. UMass, at 9–0, is In first place, while the Owls are No. 2 at 10–2. The game is set for a 3:45 tip–off and is being televised nationally by ABC.

Player of the Game

Derek Kellogg, Massachusetts

Hitting two of four treys and leading the Minutemen in scoring (six points) in the first half, the 6–foot–3–inch co–captain gave No. 13 Massachusetts the steady hand it needed to pull out a victory, giving the Minutemen their ninth A–10 win (9–0) of the A–10 season.

In the second half, Kellogg scored seven points down the stretch and finished the game with 13.

Why Massachusetts won the game

After coming off a tough loss to Kentucky, Massachusetts played tough on both ends of the floor. Every time Rhode Island came within striking distance, the Minutemen tightened up on D and converted on the offensive end. Despite a 25 point performance by Rhody's Abdul Fox(20 points in the second half) the Minutemen held the Rams to 43 percent from the field for the contest and only 16 percent from three point range. Unlike their first meeting, Rhode Island refused to give up.

The Minutemen will host A–10 rival No. 8 Temple on Sunday, Feb. 13 at the sold–out William D. Mullins Center. Tipoff is set for 3:45 p.m. The game will be nationally televised on ABC.

Williams healthy, back in the fold for UM

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Mike Williams doesn't like to miss much on–the–court action. He thrives on making the big shot, being the go–to–guy for No. 13 Massachusetts. But when the 6–foot–2–inch junior guard collapsed his last time on the court for the Minutemen in a loss at Cincinnati, some wondered when Williams would again lace 'em up for real.

After being sidelined for precautionary reasons while undergoing a battery of tests attempting to find the cause of his collapse, Williams returned to the court for Coach John Calipari as the Minutemen picked up a 70–64 victory against Atlantic 10 and New England rival Rhode Island last night at the Providence Civic Center.

Williams had already proven he can come back from a prolonged absence from the court and find immediate success.

After missing seven games with a fractured hand suffered in a loss against West Virginia in the regular season last year, Williams returned with a vengeance in the first round of the NCAA Tournament against Pennsylvania, scoring 13 points to lead the Minutemen into the second round.

At 7:40 p.m. last night, Williams shed his trademark grey t–shirt, ran to the scorer's table and checked in for Massachusetts, the third man off the bench 4:59 into the contest.

He wasn't in for long, however; Rhode Island's leading scorer Abdul Fox nailed a trey in Williams' face, and Calipari sat him down with 14:07 remaining In the first half.

Just over a minute later, Williams was off the bench again, replacing freshman Carmelo Travieso, who had been getting more minutes during Massachusetts' stint without Williams. Calipari used this one–minute interval system with his star guard one more time, after Fox scored another hoop over Williams.

As Williams came to the bench, Calipari was on his case. It was apparent Williams was a bit rusty after the four–game layoff — in the first half, he was 0–3 from the field with one turnover in eight minutes of action.

Without Williams for three–and–a–quarter games, the Minutemen truly missed his ability to control the end of a contest. They didn't have to wait that long. Williams came back with 14:57 to go in the second half, seemingly with more confidence than he had in the first.

"In the first half, I was tentative, just trying to get into the 'flow of the game," said Williams. "But in the second half, I was patient enough to wait for my turn to score because they were doing a great job of defending me.

"The only thing I was thinking about was coming out of the game and Coach Cal yelling at me."

Only 56 seconds into the second half, a beautiful pass from junior co–captain Lou Roe on the block, Williams scored his first deuce on a reverse lay–up, giving the Minutemen a 38–26 lead.

The seal on Williams' scoring bottle was broken. He finished with nine points in 21 minutes of action, including two free throws with 34 seconds left to seal the win for Massachusetts.

The offense was there in glimpses. So was the defense. But the one thing that was there for the entirety, unlike the last four games, was the player himself — Mike Williams.

University of Massachusetts guard Mike Williams was back in the lineup last night since the Cincinnati game, playing 21 minutes and finishing with nine points.

Minutewomen squander opportunities

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

St. Joseph's, a 62 percent free throw shooting team on the season, made six–of–six free throws in the final 29 seconds to hold off Massachusetts, 48–43, in an Atlantic 10 showdown last night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

With St. Joe's up by four with 1:11 left, Massachusetts center Melissa Gurile hit both ends of a one–and–one to cut the Hawk lead to two, 42–40, before two free throws apiece from guard Kristen Sullivan, forward Audrey Codner and forward Robyne Bostick sealed the win for Coach Stephanie Gaitley's squad.

"They made free throws and we didn't," said Minutewoman Coach Joanie O'Brien.

Massachusetts (10–8, 4–3 Atlantic 10) was led by Melissa Gurile's 15 points and eight rebounds. Codner led the Hawks with 12 points and seven boards and spearheaded the intense defensive effort put forth by St. Joe's, limiting the Minutewomen to 33 percent shooting from the floor (13–39).

Massachusetts came out slow, committing unforced turnovers while watching the Hawks jump out to a 8–0 lead before O'Brien called timeout to regroup.

The Minutewomen then went on a 10–2 run, led by two three–point buckets from freshman Beth Kuzmeski.

With Massachusetts trailing by six courtesy of two Sullivan treys, the Minutewomen then went on a 12–4 run to end the half on top, 24–22, marking the second time this year Massachusetts has been on top of St. Joe's at intermission only to see its lead dissipate in the second half.

"They picked up the pressure and we folded," said O'Brien, 'whose team now only has one day to prepare for A–10 leader Rutgers, who invades the William D. Mullins Center Friday for an afternoon contest with the Minutewomen.

"One game —— we're ready for it — the next game we go back to being scared and that's what happened today."

The opening moments of the second half were a defensive struggle with neither team able to get anything going. Then, with the game tied at 26 with 15:40 left, Gurile picked up her fourth foul and had to go to the bench.

"Stupid foul. Why do It? You know you have three, why do it?" O'Brien said. "We're not going to win many games with her sitting on the bench for 10 minutes."

Still, Massachusetts hung tough and it wasn't until Gurile went back in at 6:21 with her team trailing 35–33 that St. Joe's (13–6, 5–4 A–10) started to show signs of pulling away.

ARAM COMERIAN / COLLEGIAN

Octavia Thomas and the Minutewomen will try to avenge last night's 48–43 loss to St. Joseph's tomorrow as they host Rutgers tomorrow at the Mullins Center. Tip–off is 2 p.m.

Great expectations in Arizona

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

There couldn't be a tougher test for a talented young group of gymnasts. The time has come to judge how far the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team has progressed.

UMass travels to Arizona for a meet with three of the nation's best collegiate squads. A crowd of 5,000 is expected for a quad meet with Ohio State and California–Berkeley as the other two participants.

"We really need to see where we are, we haven't faced anything like what we'll see Friday night," Coach David Kuzara said.

All four teams come in ranked in the top 30 in the country. Arizona, which has been ranked as high as 6, enters the meet with a number of gymnasts injured. Ohio State is a regional rival for UMass; they are likely to see OSU again in the regionals.

"I think we will perform up to the level of our competition," gymnast Tara Swartz said.

The Minutewomen have a special interest in Cal–Berkeley, which is coached by Alfie Mitchell. He left Amherst to take the Cal position this year.

"Alfie left for greener pastures, we want to show him we have a pretty good team here," Kuzara said.

UMass is coming off a one–sided victory over MIT last Friday in their first home meet and now goes into its toughest meet until the Atlantic 10 championships.

"Everyone is extremely excited, I won't have to get anyone pumped up," Kuzara said, "We can finish anywhere from first to fourth. The team really feels they can win the whole thing."

Kuzara has moved practice time to 7:30 p.m. to account lor the time difference. The Minutewomen left on Wednesday for Arizona, and the team will return on Sunday after tonight's 7:30 meet.

"We are going to see high quality teams, we need to put it all together and compete with good intensity. We can't beat Arizona in front of 5,000 screaming fans without performing at our best," Kuzara said.

"It's going to be fun performing in front of the big crowd, it gets me pumped up. I think we have a good chance, I'm not worried, we'll have fun," gymnast Shaheda Keels said.

Say What?

"I'd give Coach Cal my girlfriend for Temple tickets."

Swimming ready to go

Minutewomen's last chance to qualify for ECAC's

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Currently, the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team has 11 swimmers and one diver qualified for the prestigious ECAC's, taking place in early March. By the end of this weekend, Coach Bob Newcomb hopes to add six more competitors to that list.

The squad left yesterday at 2 p.m. for the New England Championships at Springfield College, the final meet where swimmers can qualify.

"I'm very excited," said Newcomb. "We're bringing a good crew down. We're using this meet to qualify the rest of the team for ECAC's."

The swimmers have tapered fully, which means the muscles in the body are fully relaxed after strenuous work. Before the meet they plan to shave down, another tactic that should add extra speed to a swimmer's time.

"We're pulling out the whole

> "I expect a lot of things from a lot of different people this weekend. This is their chance to shine."
> – Coach Bob Newcomb

works for this group," said Newcomb.

The team will be going up against representatives from schools like Connecticut, Boston College, Springfield and Rhode Island. Overall, The New England Championships are in a transition stage. Many teams have overlooked the meet, gearing for the ECAC's.

Next year the meet will be held in December, which will add significant importance to the event.

"Many teams are taking the emphasis of the meet in different ways," said Newcomb.

Is it possible for the team to have the maximum 18 participants qualify for the ECAC's?

"I think we're going to do it," said Newcomb. We have six spots for swimmers to qualify. I can think of seven or eight that have a tremendous chance to qualify."

From the start of the year, Newcomb targeted sending the maximum number of participants.

"One of the goals of this program was to send a full squad." said Newcomb. "I expect a lot of things from a lot of different people this weekend. This is their chance to shine."

Students take over Admissions

ANDREW SPENCER / COLLEGIAN

Students enter the University Admissions Center just before noon Friday, taking over the building in an attempt to protest a proposed increase in tuition and fees for the 1994–95 academic year.

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

At 12 p.m. on Friday afternoon approximately 75 students rushed out of the New Africa House and took over the Admissions Office Building at the University of Massachusetts.

The occupation of the Admissions Office by the students was a protest over the rising tuition and fee increases at the University. The students demanded that Chancellor David K. Scott unconditionally support a zero percent tuition and fee increase when he meets with the Board of Trustees.

The students were led by David Nuñez, the president of the Student Government Association, and Matt Pavesi, speaker of the Student Senate. The SGA has been fighting to get support from Scott.

"We can't take this anymore, we are in a state of emergency," Nuñez said. "The tuition and fees at this place have gotten completely out of hand."

"We can't take it any longer lying down," Nuñez said. "I think it's time we disrupted someone's day."

The takeover of the Admissions Office came as a result of Scott's refusal to support the students' demand of a zero percent tuition and fee increase before a two–week deadline.

"The chancellor doesn't have the power to increase or decrease the University's tuition," said Michael K. Hooker, president of the University. "It is up to HECC (Higher Education Coordinating Council) and the Board of Trustees."

The SGA had planned the occupation of the Admissions Office in the event that Scott decided not to support the students. The takeover prevented all business that would have been conducted in the building.

Most of the employees left Admissions immediately after the students entered the building. At 2 p.m., Nuñez announced that Scott would arrive shortly to speak with the students.

Scott was welcomed at 3 p.m. by students chanting a protest song. Scott entered with several members of his staff, including newly-hired Assistant Vice Chancelior for University Advancement Keith Williams.

The students demanded Scott agree to unconditionally support a zero percent increase in tuition and fees at the April 6 meeting with the Board of Trustees. Scott would only agree to support an increase in financial aid.

Scott told the students that he would need to speak with all the student groups and the unions to see how they felt about the proposed zero percent increase in fees and tuition.

"It is very important that we sit down with you and the union leaders and others to go through this as candidly as possible, and answer questions honestly and candidly on what zero, zero, zero means," Scott said.

"I have to be careful about what I do to this institution, I have to be very careful of what I do to you, and what I do to access," Scott said. "It is very easy to unbuild an institution but it is very hard to build it."

Scott and his staff left the meeting for 15 minutes while the students rediscussed their strategy for negotiations. When Scott returned he again held firm on his position. The students announced that they would remain in Admissions until Scott agreed to their demands.

"We are going to stay here as long as it takes," Nuñez said.

Tuition negotiations bring proposal

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

At about 3 a.m. Saturday morning, the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association ended its takeover of the Admissions Center as a result of Chancellor David K. Scott's agreement to support the SGA's fight for a zero percent increase in tuition and fees for next year.

The agreement reached between the SGA and the chancellor is as follows:

• Scott will support a zero percent increase in tuition and fees for next year if the state legislature increases the budget for the University system by 3 percent, which is the rate of inflation for next year.

• If the state does not increase next year's budget by 3 percent, Scott will support an increase in tuition and fees of no more than a total of 3 percent.

• If the state increases the budget by more than 3 percent, Scott will support a roll-back of tuition and fees.

In addition, Scott promised to increase Institutional (University) financial aid and to support an increase in the state financial aid pool. The ultimate decision as to whether tuition and fees will increase next year rests with the University Board of Trustees, who will vote on a tuition increase on April 6.

Sen. Lynn Robitaille said the change in Scott's position is that originally Scott would not unconditionally support a zero percent tuition and fee increase. She said Scott was going to ask the trustees for a 2.8–3 percent tuition

Panel looks at partnership

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is at the forefront of the domestic partner benefits struggle. In a forum held on Friday, the Domestic Partner Benefits Committee, a sub– committee of the Chancellor's Task Force on Gay Lesbian and Bisexual Matters explored and explained its findings about the issue.

Although thought of as strictly a homosexual issue, the sub–committee's report defined them as: "Domestic partnership benefits cover a wide range of relationships, including both lesbian and gay relationships, and heterosexual relationships."

The forum panel included Felice Yeskel, chair of the subcommittee and director of the program for GLB Concerns, Chancellor David K. Scott, State Rep. Ellen Story, D–Amherst, and State Sen. Stan Rosenberg, D– Amherst.

Other speakers included Arlene Avakian and Karen Lederer of the Women's Studies Department, and Lydia Rackenberg of University Mental Health Services.

Yeskel began the forum, speaking to the crowded room, by relating an experience of a t–shirt she saw at the National Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Rights march. "I remember a t–shirt that I saw. . .and it said: Love makes a family, nothing more, nothing less." Yeskel went on to list several instances in which domestic partner benefits have been employed and successful.

"What we're talking about is that families don't fit the traditional model any longer. At one point it might have been true that the typical American family was comprised of a heterosexual couple where the male went out and earned a living, and the female stayed home and raised the children and . . . the situation is that less than 25 percent of all families are of that type," Yeskel said.

Yeskel continued, "Out of the 91 million households that currently exist in the United States, 2.6 million are composed of unmarried heterosexual couples, 1.6 million are lesbian and gay couples. Therefore, approximately 8.4 million adults are living in domestic partnerships not defined by marriage."

Rackenberg spoke about her relationship and her need for health insurance for her partner. They have had a commitment ceremony, have two station wagons, one child, and another on the way. "I hope that this University finds a way within the context of its construction to tell me that I really matter as an employee here, that I deserve as much as my heterosexual colleagues deserve," said Rackenberg. Serbs continue weapon surrender

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs besieging Sarajevo resumed turning in their big guns on Sunday after the United Nations accepted a compromise plan.

The Muslim–dominated Bosnian government expressed concern that the Serbs were just buying time to prevent NATO air strikes that could begin Feb. 21 if the guns ringing Sarajevo are not pulled back.

The compromise allows Serbs to turn in their heavy weapons at U.N.–monitored Serb bases, rather than at Sarajevo airport as originally planned, said Maj. Jose Labandeira, a U.N. spokesman.

The Bosnian army objected. "Those weapons can be returned to combat positions very fast," said Bosnian army Gen. Fikret Muslimovic.

"I am afraid that such an approach and an attempt to appease the aggression further would bring a hardening of the Serbian position," said Haris Silajdzvic, the Bosnian prime minister.

The Serbs earlier insisted they would surrender their guns only if the Bosnian infantry abandoned its front–line positions. But after heavy lobbying by U.N. officials the Serbs turned over 11 heavy weapons on Sunday, bringing the total to 36 guns: 26 Serbian and 10 Bosnian.

The Bosnian Serbs are estimated to have at least 500 heavy weapons, while the Bosnian army has about 50.

With the four–day Sarajevo truce still shaky, the U.S. Embassy packed the families of 35 diplomats out of Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Dutch, British and German officials also have urged their citizens to leave Yugoslavia.

The pullout of dependents was a precaution against Serb reprisals in the event of air strikes. Many in the Serbs–dominated Yugoslav government and army support the Bosnian Serbs.

NATO has threatened to start air strikes against the Serb guns if they are not withdrawn at least 12 miles from downtown Sarajevo by midnight Feb. 20.

increase, without mentioning zero at all. Robitaille is the SGA's Student Center for Research and Advocacy's issues coordinator.

"We got him to stand by our side to advocate to the Trustees for that zero percent, which is a complete change from the original proposal that he presented," Robitaille said.

Scott said he thinks that now that students and administrators are unified, the fight with the state legislature to increase funding for the University should be more effective.

"I think we had a really good set of discussions and a lot of issues got clarified," Scott said. "Now that we have a united front, we can pursue increased funding for the University with renewed vigor."

Sen. Amy Lloyd praised Scott's efforts in reaching the agreement with the SGA after the takeover of the Admissions Center. Lloyd is the SCHRA legislative coordinator.

"I think it forced him to realize how serious the students were, and that they were willing to do anything to stand up for what they believed," Lloyd said. "His proposal was extremely well thought out. The man demonstrated integrity, strength and character. We negotiated for about six hours, the man was exhausted and we were all exhausted but we just went at it point by point and it was a very thorough proposal."

SGA Speaker Matthew Pavesi said now that Scott and the SGA are unified, students have to actively lobby state legislators to increase next year's University budget.

"It's now our job. We all have to work together to fight the legislature for a higher appropriation, we've talked the talk and now we have to walk the walk," Pavesi said. "We've got to drive to Boston, we have to call our parents and our parent's neighbors. This is an election year, we need to vote. If we all work together, I think that we can be successful."

also spoke on her needs for domestic partner benefits.

Lederer discussed how the various UMass unions could work collectively on getting domestic partner benefits at the UMass campuses. She also said the lack of benefits affected her personally.

Scott spoke about the status of domestic partner benefits at UMass and specifically at Amherst. "We aspire to be the best public system of higher education in the United States by the year 2000, as capitulated by President Hooker and the Board of Trustees," Scott said.

"When we go out for bids this spring to ask insurers about coverage, we will ask for bids which include domestic partner coverage," he said.

Rosenberg and Story both spoke on the issue of domestic partner benefits as seen in the legislature. They said there are currently two different bills proposed in the legislature, one by Sen. Diane Wilkerson, Boston, and Sen. Robert Havern, Arlington.

In both instances, the major block to benefits is the issue on whether or not the bill that is passed includes municipal employees as well as state employees. Because of Proposition 2 1/2, any state law mandating municipal changes requires for the changes to be paid for by the state.

Nuñez starts crusade against tuition hikes

By DAVE COPELAND
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association President David Nuñez began Friday morning's takeover of the Admissions Building by telling the estimated 110 protesters gathered at the New Africa House, "I think it's time we disrupted someone's day."

From there, Nuñez led the students to the Admissions Building and started a 16-hour standoff with the administration. Over the course of the day Nuñez said he used all of his emotions.

"I cried, I yelled, I was angry, and eventually I was happy," he said.

Coming to an agreement with Chancellor David K. Scott in which Scott pledged to support the SGA by advocating a zero percent tuition increase through the Board of Trustees meeting means that the SGA has only started its campaign.

To ensure a zero percent increase, the SGA now has to lobby the state legislature to ensure that state funding will increase by at least 3 percent.

Nuñez said he is hoping to organize students and alumni in conjunction with the University to lobby the state government.

"We have to write letters and we have to call our senators. We have to get people registered to vote, because this is an election year and they'll be playing to the voters," he said.

If the students are able to convince the state legislature to increase funding by more than 3 percent, a tuition reduction is possible.

"Right now we have the guarantee that tuition will not rise above the current rate of inflation, and we do have the possible chance of actually lowering tuition. But to do that, we need help from everybody on this campus," he said.

> "We have to ask, is Massachusetts dedicated to having public university?"
> — David Nuñez, SGA President

Nuñez said the decision to take over the Admissions Building was a symbolic gesture.

"That's what we're trying to help most; the admission of different students that have a right to an education," he said.

"We have to ask, is Massachusetts dedicated to having a public university? We have students trying to make a better life for themselves, but the legislature is closing off those opportunities by making the tuition of this place too high and the funding too low," Nuñez said.

He said the success of the campaign came from the students who went in there knowing that they had no other choice.

"There was a lot of bickering amongst ourselves, but we stuck together as a group and allowed everyone to have a say," he said.

Chancellor's statement on tuition

The following statement was signed by Chancellor David K. Scott and released early Saturday morning, Feb. 12, after discussions with students occupying the University Admissions Center.

Yesterday we released a statement expressing our commitment to urge the Legislature to increase appropriations to the University. Our discussions today have served to highlight the severe plight of many current and prospective University of Massachusetts students.

We have continued to discuss in earnest with concerned students the pressing matter of tuition and fees. We are committed to a zero increase in tuition and mandatory fees, and we are prepared to argue vigorously to increase the legislative appropriation to the University and the state appropriation for financial aid in fiscal year 1995.

We are committed to go forward together and to make a compelling case for the difficulties faced by a large number of our students.

We will propose a zero increase in tuition and fees contingent on the success of our collective efforts to increase state support. If our collective efforts are unsuccessful, we agree that we will support no increase in tuition and mandatory fees above the CPI. This is in line with ongoing discussions of the President and the Board of Trustees.

Further, in recognition of the difficult financial situation facing students and the limiting of access occasioned by the situation, we will recommend a reduction in tuition and fees to the extent that sufficient increases can be obtained from the Legislature.

We are resolute that the escalation of tuition and fees must be arrested, and therefore we will strenuously pursue working with students, their parents, faculty, staff, alumni, and friends of the University to persuade the Legislature that improved support of the University to ensure access, affordability, and quality of education is in the best interest of the citizens of the Commonwealth.

We shall also increase institutional financial aid to maintain the level of met need regardless of any tuition and fee increases. In addition, we will also increase institutional financial aid to reduce the current level of unmet need.

In view of the many pressing demands on this campus, this constrained funding will still force a series of very difficult decisions in the year ahead. But we are convinced that arresting the tuition increases and compensating with additional institutional financial aid must be a priority for the major Land Grant University of the Commonwealth. To this end, we will continue discussion with students and other constituents of the University.

We thank the students for expressing their concerns and are encouraged by their willingness to work together with the administration to articulate the University's position before the Legislature.

David K. Scott
Chancellor

Opinion

UMass needs student radio

Wouldn't it be great if UMass had a radio station that was cutting edge? College students learning the ropes as DJs by testing out cool new tunes while still playing those college rock staples that we love? UMass DJs doing talk shows that are fun, wild and, most importantly, entertaining? The station could bring UMass together.

That just ain't happening, folks.

What we've got here at this campus is WMUA, a station that just about nobody on campus listens to, and even fewer talk about. The station is irrelevant. WMUA plays polka, and they don't do it to get a laugh. What happened to the rebellious spirit of college radio? Well, I would put forth the proposition that at UMass, it was ruined by the community.

Martin Brown

WMUA is not a UMass station anymore, make no mistake. It is not for college students one bit; it's for the local community. It was originally a nice gesture for UMass to let the community use the station, but now they have a stranglehold on the place. WMUA as an organization borders on being a mismanagement of student funds. Things need to be changed.

Let me explain here what happened to me. I've been with the station for about a year and a half. I was scheduled for my first show at the beginning of the summer of '93. I didn't have many listeners over the summer, but that was fine; I was polishing up my show for the fall. By the time fall rolled around, I knew I was ready to do a late-night talk show.

At first it was slow going — not many callers and most of those who did call were friends of mine. The show was good, though, and word of mouth spread. It was funny. It was controversial. Over the course of the semester, my listenership grew and grew and the show got better and better.

About halfway through the semester, the phone was ringing off the hook the whole time I was on the air. By the end of the semester I'd say I had at least 200 active listeners and who knows how many silent ones. This was great for a midnight to 3 a.m. show. Along the way, I had filled in for other people's shows, but quickly found out that they only had about ten people listening. The only reason I had an audience was because I cared about my audience — college students.

Here I was with a popular show that a noticeable portion of UMass students liked, but then trouble hit — right after my last show at the end of last semester I found out I was canned. No more show. Nothing. Nada. I couldn't believe it. I protested to no avail. It seems that I hadn't played enough office politics within WMUA.

The station programmer said she'd wanted to see me help more. I tried to explain that I was a full-time film student who was taking two Amherst College classes, writing for the Collegian, going to film screenings, and writing a movie all the while trying to maintain a dean's list GPA. All this was very time consuming, I told her, but she just wasn't listening. She had never even listened to my show. How can you have an effective station programmer who hasn't even tuned in to listen to the DJs she's supposed to be in charge of?

Anyway, I was fired. Here I am, a full-time undergraduate student who pays all those stupid fees like a green grocer, and I can't even have my own show. WMUA gets a ridiculous amount of money from the activities fee — which every single full-time UMass student pays — but only a little more than half of the active DJs are students. Meanwhile, the local community members — who haven't paid dime one — keep right on playing. Doesn't sound too fair, does it?

It's time for UMass to take back its station so UMass students can create shows and listen to them — without the polka in-between. It's our University, it's our money — it should be our station.

Valentine's Day is about love

It is Valentine's Day once again, that day of the year when we take some time to remember the most special people in our lives. Whether woman and man, man and man, or woman and woman, love is as vital a need as food or drink and as great a gift as any two people can achieve. But even now, when gay and lesbian love is finally just beginning to be acknowledged as the same as any other, one group of people still feel the hatred of oppression — often from their allies and friends who know the feeling of hatred so well.

It is said that one who walks in the middle of the road risks being hit from both sides. Nowhere is this more true than in the case of bisexuality.

Peter J. Orvetti

For if there is just one thing that unites heterosexuals and homosexuals, it is the mutual oppression of bisexuals.

It doesn't seem to make very much sense. In pre–Christian human history, bisexuality was the norm. Whether one's partner was a man or a woman was about as important as if his or her eyes were blue or brown. After two thousand years, the fact that gays, lesbians, and bis are more the same as heterosexuals than they are different is just beginning to be understood. So why the hatred?

It is said that one who walks in the middle of the road risks being hit from both sides. Nowhere is this more true than in the case of bisexuality. From the smaller–minded portion of the heterosexual community, there are those who hate any sort of queerness. And from the gay community, there is the belief that bis have a sort of "straight privilege", an ability to pass for heterosexual when need be.

Both of these claims come from the same restrictive attitude — one side wants to restrict bis from same–sex love, and the other shuns them for sometimes desiring opposite– sex love. Here, both heterosexuals and homosexuals are guilty of oppressing bis the same way gays and lesbians have been oppressed: by telling them to hide who they are, or to not express it at all.

Then there's AIDS. Besides being a plague that has decimated the world's population, it is also the best weapon that homophobes and biphobes have ever had. Gay–and–bi– bashers say that bisexuals are the reason why AIDS has spread to heterosexuals, and fault bis for giving "straight" people the "gay" disease. One reason for biphobia is because without it, homo– and biphobes would lose this weapon.

Bis are also believed to be more promiscuous than other people, because there are twice as many attraction possibilities. This is another absurd idea; it is like saying a hetero man has to have sex with every woman he meets, and vice–versa.

If we are going to be truly honest with ourselves — and it is about time that we are — we have to realize that these categories just don't fit anyone. All of us have had sexual desires running the whole range at one time or another, and it is often the most hateful among us who refuse to acknowledge this reality in themselves.

So now that we have begun, let's bring the whole world out of the closet. We are past the point when we can set group against group, where without a common enemy we cannot justify ourselves. If you are heterosexual or homosexual, you know that what your orientation is really all about is love. It's the exact same way for bisexuals, too, and everyone else who falls somewhere in between. It is a matter of an adolescent "phase" or even "experimentation", although these things are very important. It is about the right of each and every person to love whomever he or she wants to, whenever he or she wants to, without having to worry about hatred or categorization.

It's about love.

Don't be afraid to be honest

Everyone has lost someone special in their lives — grandparents, parents, siblings, lovers, friends. Most of us wish we had said, "I love you," or expressed some warm feeling to our loved one before their death.

I feel that way about my grandmother who I wish I had told I loved her once more. I wish I could have told my friend John what a great person he was before he died of AIDS.

Marni E. Heftner

It is with this regret that I made a decision to always tell people how I feel. Today, most people know if you want the honest truth, ask Marni. Sometimes the truth is painful, but in the long run it works out for the best.

However, I can always find fault with myself. I cannot, for the most part, admit my initial attraction to people. Telling someone, "I really like you," is very hard for me to do.

Even though I'm a hard–core feminist, I feel uncomfortable asking men for dates. This is because even after the "women's liberation" movement, girls and women are told that nice girls don't ask guys out; that's the man's job.

I know you're saying, "It's the 90's — women can ask men out on dates." It's just not that simple. As a child, I was brought up to believe that women and men are equal; but the underlying idea was that they are equal in their own separate roles.

So I've never felt comfortable admitting attraction to others. I am envious of men (and women) who have the courage to call someone up and ask them on a date.

Honestly, there's a guy (I'll call him Fred) in my residential area to whom I'm very attracted. He's mature, sensitive, a good listener, and an overall nice guy. But I'm so uncomfortable with the idea of calling him up or just telling him, "Hey! I really like you," that I will probably never tell him.

There have been lots of people I've been attracted to but never said anything to, and it makes me sad to think about all I've missed; all the laughter, the tears, the emotion. I don't take these risks because it's easy to get hurt — it's just that not many people can look into a person and see the truth. We hide behind layer upon layer of personalities; no one knows the real person. Like Billy Joel's The Stranger, "Some are satin, some are leather," or Sharon Olds' son in Boy Out in the World:

...and anyway Gabey knows what's what, he can look deep into his own heart and tell you the nature of the human–kindness, courtesy, force.

But like I told my friend Ellen, "As humans, we take risks and open ourselves up to others. Sometimes we're hurt very badly by the people we open ourselves up to, but if we don't tell people how we really feel, we'll never find the right person. As the saying goes 'You've got to kiss a lot of frogs before you find the prince.'"

I know I should take some of my own advice, and tell Fred I like him, live without regret. But hey — maybe Fred will read this and call me tonight... maybe he's afraid to call me, too.

Happy Valentine's Day!

What do you think?

A group of students marched to the University Admissions Center on Friday afternoon, refusing to leave the building until Chancellor Scott agreed to support a zero percent increase in tuition and mandatory fees for the 1994-95 academic year.

The leaders of the student group said that their actions were necessary in order to convey to the administration and the Legislature the serious nature of the budget crisis at the University of Massachusetts.

What do you think? Was a building takeover an appropriate action? If not, why? If so, what is the next step?

Put your feelings on paper and send them to the Collegian by 3 p.m. this Wednesday afternoon.

Letters should typed and should be less than 400 words.

All submissions must include a full name, address and phone number (for verification purposes only). Students should also include their year and major.

Anonymous submissions will not be printed.

A chocolate lover's dream

Chocolate Lover's Festival
Hotel Northampton
Feb. 12, 1994

Valentine's Day is the celebration of St. Valentine and the universal day of love. Next to roses, chocolates in some shape or form are probably the one gift lovers exchange most on this amorous day. Many people decided, however, to sample this holiday's trademark a few days early.

On Saturday, the Hotel Northampton brought in a steady stream of chocolate lovers to their first annual Chocolate Lover's Festival. More than 20 bakeries, restaurants, ice cream and candy stores along with some of Western Massachusetts' specialty food producers and retailers offered samples of the most sinful tasting chocolate treats and desserts.

The Hotel Northampton held the festival in its elegant Grand Ballroom. China cups holding fragrant chocolate raspberry coffee from the Java House tinkled against carefully held saucers. People circulated the room holding dessert plates filled with luscious creations like Chocolate Kahlua Pecan Pie from the Lord Jeffery Inn and rich White Chocolate Mousse Cake from the Marriot Hotel.

One of the more popular sweets offered came from the Henion Bakery. Bite size heart shaped chocolate shells filled with a creamy mousse and topped with a fresh raspberry were rightfully called "Love Bites." If your palate was more on the discriminating side, you could purchase fine chocolates form Italy or Valhorona Chocolate–Xoho Pot au Creme.

There was even something for the exotic chocolate connoisseur. La Cuzuela offered to the daring, Chicken in Mole Poblano Sauce; a spicy dish made of chicken, chocolate, chili, garlic and nuts. Anyone who didn't feel like splurging could watch the numerous cooking demonstrations, sign up for drawings, sip a glass of wine from the open bar, or view the beautifully crafted chocolate swans and lifelike roses Wiggins Tavern displayed.

Even the children had something to do: Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory was shown in a side salon throughout the afternoon.

Chocolate originally comes from South America and was presented to the Europeans by the Aztecs of Mexico. The word "chocolate" comes from the Aztec word "cacahuatl." It was during Cortez's conquering of Mexico that one of his soldiers noted that the Aztec's drank chocolate on a regular basis.

The chocolate was believed to hold spiritual and healing properties. The Aztec often roasted the beans and ground them with other flavors such as vanilla, honey, maize and even flowers. The cacao was a very important part of the Aztec's culture and was even used as a form of currency. Chocolate was primarily drunk as a beverage long after it's discovery. It wasn't until the 19th century that a refining

'WKRP,' 'Remote Control' lead list for all–time TV show faves

We all have our favorite shows. Some of them are good shows, some of them are funny shows and some of them are terrible shows that appeal to us for one reason or another.

Keeping this in mind, I present my Favorite Shows of All Time. I don't know how many there are going to be, so I'm not going to pare this list down to a "Top Ten" or "Top Five." I'm just going to rattle them off, and we'll see what it looks like when I'm done.

•"WKRP in Cincinnati." I don't mean the lame new show in which Tawny Kitaen has replaced Loni Anderson. I'm talking the original with Les Nesman, Venus Flytrap, Bailey Quarters, Dr. Johnny Fever and my personal favorite, Herb Tarlie. Although this list is in no particular order, I think this is indeed my favorite program ever. Lots of laughs, and the characters are all classics. My favorite episode is the one in which Herb is followed around by a "Hard Copy"–like TV crew which digs up all kinds of dirt about him. A funny show; well written, well performed.

By Caleb Cochran

•"Remote Control." Why? Even I don't know. But I loved this short–lived MTV game show hosted by UMass grad Ken Ober and featuring Colin Quinn and Kari Wuhrer. Some of my favorite categories: "Dead or Alive," "Private Dicks," and of course "Sing Along With Colin." One of the funniest game shows I have ever seen.

•"Late Night/Late Show with David Letterman." What can I say about the King of Intenright that has not been said already? He hasn't missed a beat since moving to CBS. He gets the best guests, has the best band leader and employs the best writers. But what makes the show work is Dave. He's witty, he's goofy, he's down right hilarious. And he beats the hell out of Leno and Conan every night of the week.

•"My Two Dads." I could watch reruns of this show all day long. Paul Reiser and Greg Evigan are hilarious as the two fathers of young Nicole. I can't understand why this show didn't do better in the ratings. It had an interesting premise, intriguing characters, snappy dialogue and funny plots. Paul Reiser has since moved on to "Mad About You," with Helen Hunt, but I have yet to see Greg Evigan surface in any major projects. I guess I'll have to stick to my old tapes of "B.J. & the Bear" to see Evigan in prime form.

•"The Cosby Show." Don't try and tell me you didn't watch this. Last semester when I was in South Carolina, Cos was on every day at 4. Let's just say you probably wouldn't find me in the Thomas Cooper Library from 4–4:30 on weekdays.

•"Mr. Belvedere." This is one of those shows that fits into the category of "terrible, but somehow appealing." One winter afternoon during my freshman year, a floormate and I sat in front of the tube and watched four consecutive episodes of this show. Now you know why I like to call it the "idiot box." I don't know what the hell channel I was watching, but I can tell you that I was mighty appreciative of the person in charge of running four episodes of "Belvedere" in a row. Just imagine Bob Uecker as your dad. Uecker alone is reason enough to try and catch an episode of this gem every so often.

•"Growing Pains." I'll admit it: I watched every week when this baby was in its prime. Kirk Cameron is really not that funny, but he's such an idiot as Mike Seaver that you have to at least chuckle. Alan Thicke is remarkable as Mr. Seaver, and you have to love "Boner." Annoying aspects: Carol, Mrs. Seaver and especially Ben. He was such a crummy character that the writers brought in Leonardo DiCaprio to play Luke and take some time away from Ben. DiCaprio

Mississippi Delta taps Holland's troubled life

by TARA-MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

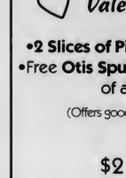
From The Mississippi Delta
Bowker Auditorium
Feb. 11, 1994

On Friday night, Feb. 11 at Bowker Auditorium, a few people braved the snow and ice to see a piece of American History captured on stage. From the Mississippi Delta was an inspirational autobiographical drama about the life of Dr. Endesha Ida Mae Holland.

This one-time area performance perfectly depicted the hardships and obstacles that Holland had to endure through her life. It also combined the harshness of racial prejudice with a few humorous anecdotes that somehow makes life worth living.

From the Mississippi Delta followed Holland's story of poverty, rape and prostitution and rise up to become a soldier in the civil rights movement. Her ultimate triumph over her past came when she earned her Ph.D. and later writing the prize winning biography of Ida B. Wells. At the present moment, Dr. Holland is a tenured associate professor of Woman's Studies at SUNY Buffalo.

The evening production was well staged by Daedalus Productions of New York. Three actresses assumed the roles of three different presences that influenced her life (alter ego, omnipresent mother, to the playwright herself). The trio skillfully brought to life all the images of the pain, sorrow, triumphs and joys Holland experienced throughout her struggle through life.



The actresses were able to convey these emotions without crossing over into melodrama. It became not just a play about a woman overcoming the boundaries that society sets, but it also celebrated the richness life had to offer along with its adversities.

was nominated for an Academy Award this year. I didn't see Jeremy (Ben Seaver) Miller's name on that list. I think it's safe to say we never will.

•"Moonlighting." I can't believe I almost forgot this one. Cybil Shepard and Bruce Willis make a brilliant tandem as partners Maddie Hayes and David Addison. We all know that Willis has gone on to fame and fortune, starring in the Die Hard films and marrying Demi Moore. Shepard, on the other hand, has moved on to television ads for Clairol. I wish she would get back into television acting. Without Willis, however, she probably wouldn't be half as entertaining.

•"Cheers." Obviously.

•"Lois and Clark: The New Adventures of Superman." Two words: Teri Hatcher. She's incredible as Lois Lane opposite Dean Cain's Clark Kent. The plots are somewhat silly, but then again, so is the idea of a man in a ballet suit fighting crime. It's a good show, but until it gets out of its current time slot (opposite "Murder, She Wrote"), this one will probably dwell near the bottom of the ratings.

•"Seinfeld." I'm not going into it. If you haven't seen it by now, I'm not going to explain it to you. NBC. 9 p.m. Thursday. Watch it.

•"NYPD Blue." Hands down, the best new show of the year. I think it's the best drama on TV, period. I'm probably going to devote a column to this show at some point, so I don't want to say too much, but this is a terrific show.

That's all for this week, viewers. Tune in next week for another stirring edition of "On the Tube." Happy viewing.

Caleb Cochran is a Collegian Arts & Living Associate.

Bruce Willis, seen here as yet another renegade cop on the edge in "Striking Distance" was charming and funny on TV's "Moonlighting." Maybe he should go back there. (Cybil's not doing anything...)

process allowed it to be made into candy and other tempting dishes.

Like the Europeans, the solicitors of the festival had to also pay a price for their addiction to the cacao although many agreed that the price ($2–5) for each delicacy was more than worth it. The Chocolate Lover's Festival was presented by Cuisine Arts Production and judging by the amount of satisfied participants, next year's festival will be eagerly anticipated.

Men's track stuck in Pittsburgh

Saturday's Atlantic 10 men's Indoor Track and Field Championships were cancelled. The meet was to be held at West Virginia University, but severe ice storms prevented several of the teams, including the University of Massachusetts, from reaching Morgantown.

UMass had arranged to travel to WVU by bus from a Pittsburgh airport, but upon arriving in Pittsburgh the team discovered the connection would not be possible. The University of Rhode Island team landed in Pittsburgh shortly after UMass, and both clubs were forced to spend the weekend there, as they could not schedule flights back to their respective campuses. The Temple and St. Joseph's entries never left their Philadelphia campuses due to airport closings in that city.

The University of Massachusetts Media Relations Department said Atlantic 10 officials will conduct a conference call at 1 p.m. today to determine if the meet will be re-scheduled for this weekend or completely cancelled.

UMass is slated on its original schedule to participate in the Eastern Conference meet at Southern Connecticut this Saturday at 11:00 a.m.

Williams does it again for Minutemen

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

All in attendance at the William D. Mullins Center yesterday afternoon knew Massachusetts' final shot would be Mike Williams' to take. Massachusetts Coach John Calipari was going to call a play for Williams who has a history of making the big shot when it counts.

Everyone knew Williams would get the ball. Temple must have known it. But as the Owls and Coach John Chaney learned, you can't stop the unstoppable.

Williams ran off a screen from Lou Roe (nine points, nine rebounds), took a Dana Dingle (four points, three assists) inbounds pass and went to work with 10.2 seconds left and his team trailing by one point, 55–54.

With Owl point guard Rick Brunson on his hip, Williams started at the top of the key, spun around Brunson and with his defender well-behind him, stroked a 14-foot leaner with four ticks left on the clock, giving No. 13 Massachusetts a thrilling 56–55 victory over Atlantic 10 rival, No. 8 Temple.

A last-second, desperation three-pointer from Temple's Aaron McKie fell short as the Minutemen ran their conference record to 10–0 (19–4 overall), while the Owls dropped to 10–3 (17–4 overall). McKie led Temple with 20 points and six rebounds. Senior forward Eddie Jones was the only other Owl in double figures, recording a double–double (19 points, 14 rebounds).

Williams was the high-scorer for Massachusetts, tallying 17 points in only his second game back for the Minutemen since collapsing on the court Jan. 27 at Cincinnati. He played 33 minutes.

"Basically, I was going against the clock to make sure I got the shot off ... I think teams now are going to start doubling me. I keep scoring those winning baskets," said Williams, who defeated both George Washington and Rutgers on the road last season with buzzer–beating three– point field goals, not to mention his game–winning shots over No. 1 North Carolina and Oklahoma this season.

"I thought they were going to run two guys at me. I was looking for the double team but nobody came, so I just got the shot off."

The Minutemen only led twice in the second half; both times came with under a minute to go in the contest. Massachusetts sophomore forward Donta Bright made two clutch free–throws with 36 seconds left in the game to give the Minutemen their first lead since halftime, 54–53.

Bright (six points) earned his trip to the line by making a great defensive effort off a Temple inbounds play. Brunson (eight points) hurled a pass from the Owl endline completely over midcourt to the opposite end of the parquet, attempting to hit Chris Ozment, instead, Bright read it perfectly, beat Ozment to the ball, and forced the Owl guard to foul him.

"When he [Brunson] threw it up, it felt like the ball was in the air for 10 or 15 seconds. I just had enough time to run under it and steal the ball," said Bright.

In the first half, Massachusetts built as much as a five– point lead, 27–22, with three minutes to go until halftime.

Temple wouldn't trail for long, though, as two McKie free–throws cut the Massachusetts lead to two, 30–28, at the half. The Owls held the Minutemen to one field goal, an Edgar Padilla lay–up, in the first seven minutes of the second stanza, regaining control and the lead.

Chaney's club was in front for a majority of the second half, pushing its lead to as many as eight, 49–41, with 6:27 to go, on a McKie jumper. Back came Massachusetts on a Marcus Camby follow–up jam off a bright miss, cutting the Owl margin to 49–43 at the five–minute mark.

Williams nailed a trey from the left side with McKie in his face just 44 seconds later, slicing the Temple lead to three, 49–46, and forcing an Owl time–out to regroup. The rest didn't stop the Massachusetts run, however, after both teams had fruitless series down court, Williams struck again.

The guard from Hartford, Conn., stole a pass intended for McKie in the corner, went coast to coast and brought the Minutemen within one, 49–48 with three and a half minutes to go.

After Jones connected on a seven–foot jumper and Roe made one of two free–throws, Temple was ahead 51–49 when McKie again attempted to bury the Minutemen, nailing a jumper which gave the Owls a four–point lead with 2:12 left.

In his post–game press conference, Chaney was quick to credit and praise Massachusetts.

"[Massachusetts] is a championship ball club. This is a fine team, a very balanced team," said Chaney. "This team should perhaps be the number one team in the country in my opinion."

During Calipari's post–game, however, Chaney returned and incited an altercation between the two coaches [see related story]; he said Calipari complained to the officials after the contest, undeservedly so. Chaney continued on, saying, "When I see you, I'm going to kick your ass." The two needed to be restrained as Chaney was escorted out of the press conference.

Massachusetts travels to Temple on Feb. 24 in the rematch at McGonigle Hall in Philadelphia. The Minutemen have never won on the Owls' home court.

Mike Williams, Massachusetts

Williams, in just his second game back since collapsing during the Jan. 27 game at Cincinnati, proved to be Mr. Clutch for the Minutemen yet again. On UMass' final possession, Williams spun past Temple's Rick Brunson and hit a leaner in the lane to give the Minutemen a 56–55 lead with just under four ticks to go. The 6–foot–2–inch Hartford native led UMass with 17 points, including eight down the stretch when the Minutemen needed them most.

Why Massachusetts Won the Game

After falling down 49–41 with 6:27 to go in the game, the Minutemen battled back effectively, holding the Owls at bay while finding their own offense during the game ending 15– 6 run. While Temple was led by the play of Eddie Jones (19 points, 14 rebounds) and Aaron McKie (20 points), numerous Minutemen stepped up to in addition to Mike Williams (17 points) and made big plays in the end.

UMass played Temple's slow, methodical game and still came out on top. The Minutemen had only eight turnovers, including just one in the second half and were able to score when they had to. In the first half, the outside shooting of the UMass guards allowed the Minutemen to keep pace with the Owls despite not finding much room inside to operate.

The UMass defense held every Owl besides Jones and McKie in check and did not allow Temple to hit a single three–pointer in the game.

Say What?

"You got a good team and you don't need that edge. That's why I was telling my kid to knock your fuckin' kid in the mouth."

– Temple Coach John Chaney in a tirade following UMass' 56-55 victory yesterday, camplaining that UMass Coach John Calipari was riding the officials.

A–10 rivals wage war again on, off court

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

This was no ordinary basketball game. This was a war. Literally and figuratively. During the game, after the game, it was a war, plain and simple. Nothing else.

Massachusetts and Temple appear to be the Hatfields and McCoys of the college basketball world. There was never more evidence to that fact than UMass' 56–55 victory over Temple yesterday at the William D. Mullins Center.

Both teams knew what was on the line. UMass (19–4, 10–0 Atlantic 10), the two–time defending A–10 Champion, was trying to build a three–game lead over Temple (17–4, 10–3 A–10) in this year's conference race for top gun. The Owls, meanwhile, were trying to pull a step closer to the Minutemen. It was a game Temple needed but UMass wanted.

Believe it or not, it was the mascots who set the tempo even before the game began as the UMass Minuteman and Temple Owl had a skirmish which ended with the Owl dropping the Minuteman with a vicious punch from behind. it was truly just a sign of things to come.

Both teams came out playing their Sunday–best defense, not allowing an easy basket. No good looks at the rim, no uncontested shots. UMass' in–your–face man–to–man D versus Temple's suffocating matchup zone D. While a contrast in styles, it was definitely not a contrast in efforts.

There were physical confrontations and there were mental confrontations. UMass guard Derek Kellogg and his Temple counterpart Rick Brunson were the first to engage in some good ole' fashioned jawing early in the first half. Others would soon follow.

Bodies were flying all over the place inside the paint. On one occasion, officials had to separate the teams after a mad scramble for a loose ball on the floor in the first half. Timid play was nowhere in sight, it was ferocious all the way.

"That was as physical a game as we've had all year," said Kellogg.

This was not run and gun, there was no showtime. Instead it was a bruising, halfcourt affair in which both teams found it hard to score against the defensive clinics being held. That is not to say that the teams didn't play well; to the contrary, both teams combined for just 16 turnovers and hit numerous tough shots throughout the contest.

And in true Minuteman style this year, it was chock full of drama and heroics. And once again the true hero for UMass was junior guard Mike Williams.

Williams, in only his second game back since collapsing on the court Jan. 27 at Cincinnati, hit a leaning jump shot in the lane over Temple's Brunson to give UMass the 56–55 lead with just under four seconds to go. Temple's final shot was no good and the Minutemen left the battlefield tired and emotionally drained, but most importantly, victorious.

It was another comeback win for UMass, who trailed by eight, 49–41, with 6:27 to go in the contest. For everyone involved, it was yet another chapter in what is becoming a storied rivalry between the two best teams in the A–10.

"Great ball game, wasn't it?" said Temple Coach John Chaney. "We've been in situations like this before and I hope my kids get experience from these situations."

"That was a terrific basketball game by two teams that I think have the chance to go somewhere in the NCAA's," Calipari said. "It was a great college game, both teams fought like heck."

That was basically the only thing the two coaches agreed upon as the two nearly came to blows after Chaney berated them charged after Calipari in the middle of the post–game press conference (see related story).

UMass forward Donta Bright got his first taste of UMass– Temple and it is a taste Bright will not soon forget.

"It was a lot different (than other games), because the way they play is so hard," Bright said. "They got that matchup zone and three great players (Brunson, Aaron McKie and Eddie Jones). If you don't come to play the whole 40 minutes, you will lose."

Williams, speaking for most players, said UMass–Temple is more than just a basketball game.

"There is just so much intensity, there are so many emotions," said Williams. "It's like whoever loses the game dies."

Sounds like a war.

Chaney blasts Calipari in post–game

Temple Coach John Chaney.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Some coaching rivals leave the battle on the court, but Temple Coach John Chaney decided to engage in a war of more than words with Massachusetts Coach John Calipari yesterday after Calipari's Minutemen got a hard–fought 56– 55 win over Chaney's Owls in the William D. Mullins Center.

During Calipari's post–game press conference in the media room, attended by approximately 25 people, Chaney entered and interrupted the Massachusetts coach in mid–sentence, saying, "Could I say this to you, please? You've got a good ball club, but what you did to the officials out there was wrong."

Calipari said, "You weren't out there Coach, you don't have any idea," before he was interrupted again.

"I don't care, let me tell you this, man, you don't say shit to officials without me being involved in it," said Chaney, who had finished his own separate press–conference five minutes before Calipari entered and started his.

Chaney accused Calipari of riding the officials for the entire game and approaching them after the contest in the hallway outside the press room. Calipari said that he did talk to the trio of Gerry Donhehy, Joe Mingle and Larry Lembo before he entered his press conference, but refused to say what they talked about.

Calipari attempted to respond, but Chaney would have no part of it. He proceeded to approach the podium on which Calipari was speaking; Chaney was cut off by three Massachusetts players [Donta Bright, Mike Williams, Derek Kellogg], who were seated at a table next to the podium.

The two continued to exchange verbal blows while they were being restrained by various members of the media and teams. Chaney continued to belt out comments to Calipari, such as, "You remember that; when I see you, i'm going to kick your ass," and, "You got a good team and you don't need that edge. That's why I was telling my kid to knock your fuckin' kid in the mouth."

According to Calipari, Atlantic 10 Commissioner Ron Bertovich and University of Massachusetts President Michael K. Hooker were in the hallway when he spoke to the officials. Bertovich refused to comment, but the A–10 released a statement which said they would not make any decisions until all persons involved were questioned.

ESPN Radio contacted the three officials, and all three refused to comment.

Chaney brought up a game Massachusetts won 56–55 over George Washington in the Mullins Center on Jan. 22, saying, "You got a game that was given to you by the officials right here with GW on three bad calls."

According to Chaney, he was "blasted from given 'em [the officials] hell down in West Virginia," when Temple lost to West Virginia for the second time this season; the latest a 78–71 setback to the Mountaineers in Morgantown, W.Va., last Tuesday.

Scuffle results in suspension

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Temple University President Peter Liacouras suspended men's basketball coach John Chaney for the Owls' game against St. Bonaventure tomorrow night for attacking, both verbally and physically, Massachusetts Coach John Calipari in a post–game press conference Sunday at the William D. Mullins Center.

Chaney apologized for his actions but was still suspended by Liacouras.

In a statement released by Temple's athletic department yesterday, Chaney extended his apologies "to everyone for yesterday's unfortunate incident following the basketball game ... to the Atlantic 10 Conference, the University of Massachusetts, the teams, those persons who were present and those who witnessed the incident, everyone."

"Coach Chaney overstepped the line this time," Liacouras said in a statement released yesterday afternoon. "I believe the University must pursue the highest standards in competition, and even his sincere apology, he agrees, is insufficient in these circumstances."

Atlantic 10 Commissioner Ron Bertovich said yesterday that he planned to "talk to everyone involved" in the incident, adding that the investigation would be conducted by the league office "in a timely fashion."

According to Calipari, Bertovich was in the hallway outside the press room where Calipari spoke to officials Gerry Donhehy, Joe Mingle and Larry Lembo, complaining about the job they did in his Minutemen's 56–55 victory over Chaney's Owls.

Calipari was quoted as saying, "They'll [the officials] never work here again," by Associated Press reporter Trudy Tynan, who said the Massachusetts coach uttered this in the hallway before he entered the press conference.

Nature photographer dances with wolves

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

Naturalisi, author, photographer, Park Ranger and UMass graduate Rick McIntyre has spent thousands of hours photographing wolves in their natural habitat. Now he hopes that the lower 48 states will once again be the natural habitat of thousands of wolves.

McIntyre, who graduated from UMass in 1971 with a bachelor's degree in forestry is the author of A Society of Wolves: National Parks and the Battle Over the Wolf.

The book was published last October and details the extermination of wolf populations in America and efforts to reintroduce the wolf into many areas in the lower 48 states where they once lived, including Yellowstone National Park.

"If there's any place where a wolf reintroduction can succeed, it's Yellowstone. It's an ideal place for it," said McIntyre.

McIntyre, who spent 16 years studying and photographing wolf populations in Denali National Park in Alaska and Glacier National Park in Montana, said he feels that support for the return of wolf populations is increasing, and he is optimistic that populations will continue to grow.

While wolf populations in the lower 48 states numbered in the millions at the time the pilgrims landed, extermination efforts have drastically reduced their numbers in the past several hundred years. In the 1950s, the wolf population in the lower 48 states was down to about two hundred.

McIntyre, whose wildlife photographs have appeared in naturalist magazines such as Audobon and National Wildlife and in over 150 books, is also the author of Denali National Park: An Island in Time and Grizzly Cub: Five Years In the Life of a Bear. A fourth book, The War Against the Wolf: America's Attempt to Exterminate the Wolf, will be released next fall.

Tonight McIntyre will give a slide/lecture presentation covering the issues raised in A Society of Wolves: National Parks and the Battle Over the Wolf at 7 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall.

A limited number of copies of the book will be available at the event, which is sponsored by the UMass Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society and the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management.

Farrakhan visit topic of debate

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Louis Farrakhan, the fiery leader of the Nation of Islam, has accepted an invitation to speak in the spotlight at the University of Massachusetts. On March 10, Farrakhan will speak as a guest of the Black Student Union and Phi Beta Sigma fraternity.

The minister has been labeled as anti–Semitic and racist by many critics but is an esteemed leader and inspiration to many members of the Black community.

"Just as Mr. Farrakhan and those who wish to hear him have constitutional rights, so do those who oppose his message," said Chancellor David K. Scott. "I have the right and the obligation to state unequivocally that this campus does not endorse any messages of hate."

The cost of Farrakhan's visit is $15,000 along with a $10,000 security fee for Farrakhan's body guards called the "Fruit of Islam." Farrakhan last spoke at the University in 1988.

Farrakhan, formerly Louis Eugene Walcott, was raised in Boston where he was a track star and honor student. He took over Malcolm X's temple in 1965 after the leader was assassinated and became the leader of the Nation in 1975 after the death of Elijah Muhammad.

"We feel that Louis Farrakhan is a bigot against Jews, Asians, Catholics, women and gays," said Alan Weinfeld, president of Hillel. "We feel that students should be avidly protesting his visit. Farrakhan doesn't discriminate in his hate."

Weinfeld said there would be a student protest over the minister's visit, but declined comment on the time and place. He also stated his outrage that student money is "being used for a hatemonger." Weinfeld was recently removed from his position as student senator from the Third World Caucus.

"I appreciate those who say they want to hear the messages of the Nation of Islam because some messages empower African–Americans who have long been subjected to pain, hatred and discrimination," Scott said.

He also said controversial ideas and speakers

Weld promotes recycling plan

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group is applauding Governor William Weld's support of the new Solid Waste Master Plan, a plan MASSPIRG believes promotes recycling instead of burning trash, the University of Massachusetts MASSPIRG media coordinator said.

The new plan, which was released yesterday, is a plan by the Weld administration to educate manufacturers on the need to use recycled content in their products and packaging, MASSPIRG Media Coordinator and intern Jayson Stohl said.

MASSPIRG statistics report that 77 percent of our state landfills will be filled in the next five years.

Stohl said in order for the plan to work, however, the Weld Administration must follow through with iis commitment to reduce solid waste and recycle more. He also said recycled goods need to be in greater demand.

"The Weld administration must do everything it can to create a demand for the recyclable materials collected in local recycling programs," Stohl said.

UMass MASSPIRG Campus Organizer Julie Farb said one of the products that is filling up Massachusetts landfills at a rapid rate is the Kool Aid "Kool Burts," which are packages of four plastic bottles of Kool Aid.

"This is a disgustingly over packaged product," Farb said. "It is made of number four plastic, which is very difficult to recycle in Massachusetts, and it is also shrink wrapped."

Farb said a more environmentally conscious way to consume Kool Aid is to buy the mix in a small paper container.

"The Kool Bursts are packaged 300 percent more than the packages of Kool Aid and they produce twice as much Kool Aid," she said.

Farb said Kraft, the company that produces Kool Bursts, said it will continue to sell the Kool Bursts in the plastic bottles because their customers like the "squeezability" of the bottles.

To combat the Kool Bursts, MASSPIRG is launching a public awareness campaign and is pushing for people to boycott the product statewide, Farb said.

Farb also said MASSPIRG staff members will be visiting elementary schools statewide to educate kids about the dangers of over packaged products and about recycling in general.

Vigil hopes to end strife

Local community urges end of genocide in Bosnia

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

A candlelight vigil for Bosnia was held last Thursday at the Unitarian Church, Northampton. The vigil was preceded by speeches asking for the stop of the genocide going on in Bosnia.

About 100 people attended the vigil including the Mary Ford, mayor of Northampton. The vigil was sponsored in part by the American Friends Services Committee and the Hillel House.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter was one of the main speakers at the vigil last night. The speakers focused on asking for an end to the rape of Bosnia.

"We are expressing concern about the genocide going on in Bosnia," Perlmutter said. "We are calling to put a stop to the killing."

The speeches were highlighted by the attendance of two Bosnians who had recently returned from the troubled country. They spoke about the situation in Bosnia through translators.

"What's going on now is a tragedy," Perlmutter said. "Innocent people are being killed."

"Women are being raped as a part of a stated policy of ethnic cleansing," Perlmutter said.

Perlmutter also used the story of a piano teacher as an example of the plight of the Bosnians.

"She had to break up her piano and use the wood for fire, just to stay warm," Perlmutter said.

The vigil not only called for a stop to the killing in Bosnia, but also for action by government leaders.

"Our leaders meet and make sympathetic comments about the situation in Bosnia, but they don't take any affective action to stop what is going on," said Perlmutter.

Perlmutter also commented on the affect of the arms embargo on the fighting in Bosnia.

"Personally I think it is obscene that there is an arms embargo which prevents the Muslims in Bosnia from exercising the very basic right of self–defense," Perlmutter said.

U.S. halts Japanese phone trade

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration decided Monday to authorize sanctions against Japan on cellular phones, increasing pressure on the Japanese after the collapse of trade talks. President Clinton conceded trade war could erupt but warned Japan it stood to lose the most.

"It's just not acceptable for the United States to continue on the same path" after last week's breakdown in talks, Clinton said.

U.S. officials from ihe president on down issued Tokyo some of the strongest warnings yet, following up quickly on last Friday's failed trade talks at a summit between Clinton and Japanese President Morihiro Hosokawa.

"We haven't ruled anything out," Clinton declared.

Administration officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity said the United States would announce the beginning of trade–sanction proceedings on Tuesday against Japan on cellular phones.

The move could lead to prohibitively high tariffs on Japanese–made instruments and set the stage for sanctions In other areas as well.

Although the cell–phone case, stemming from complaints by Motorola Inc., had been in the works for some time, the administration found it fit conveniently inio its efforts to ratchet up pressure on Tokyo.

Clinton called it a "classic example" of the difficulties U.S. companies face In penetrating Japanese markets.

In 1989, Japan agreed to give Motorola from one–third to one–half of its cellular phone business in the Tokyo area. But Motorola officials contend Japan deliberately ignored the bargain, holding the company's percentage of business under 5 percent.

U.N. forces demand cease–fire

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press

SARAJEVO — The U.N. commander for Bosnia told the country's Serbs on Monday they must give his forces control of their heavy guns by Sunday or face air attack by NATO.

Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose's statement stepped up the pressure on Bosnian Serbs, who control most of the artillery ringing Sarajevo, and closed the gap between plans developed by the United Nations and NATO for ending 22 months of bloodshed.

Rose gained a cease–fire agreement for Sarajevo on Wednesday, just hours before NATO told Bosnian Serbs to remove their heavy weapons by midnight Feb. 20 or face air strikes.

While the NATO plan calls for the weapons to be removed more than 13 miles from Sarajevo, Rose's plan simply called for them to be placed under U.N. control.

However, Rose said Monday that the U.N.'s exclusion zone for heavy weapons around Sarajevo will be enforced by the end of this week.

"Any heavy weapons there will be either under U.N control or subject of an air attack," he said after meeiing with Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic. He said that applied both the Bosnian Serb weapons and those controlled by the outgunned Bosnian government.

The ultimatum came four days after a mortar attack on Sarajevo's central market killed 68 people and wounded 200. The attack is widely believed to have been made by Bosnian Serbs.

Many observers speculated that the Bosnian Serbs could exploit the differences between the U.N. and NATO plans to delay withdrawing their weapons.

But Farrakhan has spawned an equally passionate outcry from the African-American community praising his leadership for the community with his ideas on "black nationalism" and self-determination.

Last week, Farrakhan held a press conference in Washington D.C. demoting his senior aide, Khalid Abdul Muhammad for his anti-white and anti-Semitic statements in his recent book, The Secret Relationship Between Blacks and Jews.

Farrakhan denounced his aide, but supported the "hidden truths" in the book stating that Jewish people were active in African slave trade, owning 75 percent of slaves in the antebellum south.

Farrakhan later accused the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith of trying to destroy him.

Muhammad was recently scheduled to speak at Brandeis University but cancelled for "unclear reasons" in a wake of protest by many students.

re-entered the media room after he already held his post-game conference, and interrupted Calipari during his address of the media. Chaney entered saying, "You've got a good ball club, but what you did to the officials out there was wrong."

Chaney's initial outburst was followed by his accusations that Calipari was unfairly riding the officials during and after the game.

When Calipari began to respond from the podium, Chaney charged him, screaming such obscenities as, "You remember that, when I see you, I'm going to kick your ass," and, "I was telling my kid to knock your fuckin' kid in the mouth," but was cut off by Massachusetts players [Donta Bright, Mike Williams, Derek Kellogg] who were sitting at a table beside the podium in the press conference. Both coaches needed to be restrained by players and coaching staff from both teams.

EZLN stuns Latin America

•Why should we ask for pardon?

I direct myself to you to ask you to diffuse the communiques of the Ejercito Zapatista de Liberacion Nacional (EZLN). They document the many violations of cease fires by the federal troops, the amnesty proposal of the executive branch and the performance of Mister Camacho Solis as the Commissioner for Peace and Reconciliation in Chiapas.

Until today, January 18, we have only received the Federal Government's formalization of the "pardon" for our forces. For what reason do we have to ask for that pardon? Of what are we going to be pardoned? For starving to death? For not silencing our misery? For not humbly accepting the gigantic historical weight of abhorrence and abandon? For raising up in arms when all the other roads were closed? For not abiding by Chiapas Penal Code, the most absurd and repressive known?

"Of what are we going to be pardoned? For starving to death?"
Subcomandante Marcos

For demonstrating to the rest of the country and the entire world that human dignity is still alive and within its poorest inhabitants? For preparing ourselves well and consciously before the start? For using fire arms in combat instead of bows and arrows? For learning to fight before doing so? For being Mexicans all of us? For being a mostly indigenous group? For calling the Mexican people to fight, in all possible ways, for what they own?

For fighting for liberty, democracy and justice? For not following the patterns of previous guerrillas? For not surrendering? For not selling ourselves? For not betraying ourselves?

Who's the one who has to ask for pardon and who can grant it? The ones that for years and years sat at a plentiful table, and ravaged while daily, next to us, sat the Grim Reaper, so friendly that we stop being scared of it? The ones that filled our pockets and souls of statements and promises?

The dead, our dead, so mortally dead of "natural death," namely from measles, cholera, mononucleosis, malaria, bronchitis, typhoid, typhus, tetanus and other gastrointestinal and pulmonary beauties? Our dead, so overwhelmingly dead, so democratically dead from shame since no one did anything. Because all of the dead, our dead, departed, just like that, without being taken into account, without anyone saying "ENOUGH" to give them back their senses; without anyone asking the forever dead, our dead, to come back to die but first to live? The ones that rejected our right to govern ourselves? The ones that rejected the respect for our culture, our color and our language? The ones that treat us like foreigners in our own land and ask for papers and obedience to laws which existence and justice we ignore? The ones that tortured, jailed, assassinated and made people disappear for the grave "crime" of wanting a piece of land, not a big piece, not a little piece, just a piece of land for extracting something to complement the stomach?

Who's the one who has to ask for pardon and who can grant it?

The president of the republic? The secretaries of the state? The senators? The congressmen? The governors? The mayors? The policemen? The federal army? The big owners of banks, industry, retail and land? The political parties? The academics? The media? The students? The teachers? The colonizers? The indigenous? The dead of worthless death?

Who's the one who has to ask for pardon and who can grant it?

Well, this is all for now.

Cheers and a hug. With this cold both things are appreciated (i think) even when they come from a "professional of violence."

Insurgent Sub-commander Marcos is the spokesman and one of the leaders of the Ejercito Zapatista de Liberacion Nacional (EZLN).

•The people of Chiapas lose again

January 1, 1994: the North American Free Trade Agreement comes into effect.

January 1, 1994: the Ejercito Zapatista de Liberacion Nacional begins its revolutionary war against poverty and hundreds of years of constant oppression.

That morning I was watching the news from Mexico. Being a day of victory for the government of Salinas de Gortari, one of his representatives was invited to the program to comment on the enactment of NAFTA. He explained how Mexico would quickly achieve industrialization, simultaneously raising the income of the entire population. I felt Mexico had chosen a development model based on free trade and therefore the agreement was the final step of that process.Feeling good about myself, I left with my friends to go to a "corrida." In Costa Rica, they don't kill the bull. The bull chases the people brave enough to go inside the plaza. One of the people sitting next to me in the stands, was listening to the news. I could not believe it! How could that happen? Today! "This peasant movement calls itself Ejercito Zapatista de Liberacion Nacional," the news report concluded.

"The problem is that the losers today were the same losers in the past and will be losers in the future."
Juan J. Chacon Quiros

The corrida soon became a nightmare for me. The one was an old men, completely drunk, trying to impress the women of his dreams. The bull had no pity. It stepped on the body a few times and then turned around and gave the corps a last gore. The crowd was in tears.

I guess that being a young soul, I could turn my face to the grey clouds surrounding the mountains and say: "is there any justice in this world?" It was getting dark when I got back home. My father was watching that same Mexican station. This time, the Mexican government representative was explaining the reasons for the uprising. It didn't sound like the truth.

My mother knew how bad I felt that night. She talked to me about the bull, the old men and the Zapatistas. "We all cheer to see a tragedy and only later we cry," she said. Finally I feel asleep.

Make the best conclusions yourself from this new revolutionary war. The only thing I can be sure of today is that the EZLN is the first expression of a resentment that all Latin America shares. The poor masses testify: the World Bank and the IMF are wrong. These underdevelopment advocates say there's got to be some losers from the adjustment. The problem is that the losers today were the same losers in the past and will be losers in the future. The people of Chiapas have been losers for centuries.

A couple of weeks after the uprising in Chiapas, I had the opportunity to talk to a former President of Costa Rica. He governed the country between 1978 and 1982. It was during his administration that the crisis began: both the price of oil and the interest rate on the debt skyrocketed. At the same time, the price of coffee, the primary export for more than a century, plummeted. Soon, the country was flooded with specialists from the international agencies.

Rodrigo Carazo, now in his early sixties, was crucified by the press and portrayed as a loser for many years. His sin: he had the nerve to brake relations with the IMF. "They wanted me to close public schools, hospitals, nutrition centers...and at the same time to give tax breaks to the rich exporters...I refused," he said with a smile of confidence.

The next government was rapidly seduced by the IMF. "I have no choice," the new President said. Soon, the country had adopted a new development policy.

Driving back from Mr. Carazo's house I realized how many new Benz and BMW's were cruising the streets. I stopped at a red light. Next to my car, a businessmen was using the cellular phone of his Jaguar. He was interrupted by a pair of eyes that could barely reach his window. "Go away," he screamed and went on with his telephone conversation. The little kid looked down and walked away...

We need to make an adjustment in our economies but let's spread the weight among the entire population, the poor should not be the only ones to pay. Latin America today is looking at Chiapas because soon the little kids will grow up to become Subcomandantes Marcos...

On world classism

We are incapable of successfully tackling the issue of third world development before first discussing the issue of Classism. The term class is used to refer to a group with a particular relationship to production and appropriation of surplus. The two classes, capitalists and workers, characterize a systematic relationship of unequal power, where capitalists possess power over workers.

We shall demonstrate that just as Classism is inherent in capitalism, its set of institutions perpetuate Classism on a global scale as well. Just as rich and poor people are created through capitalism's exploitative vertical hierarchy between capitalist and worker, so are rich and poor countries created through capitalism's drive to expand through imperialism.

Paradoxically, many praise democracy because it creates equality between citizenry, yet at the same time embrace capitalism, an economic system that inherently produces inequality between the same demos. Marx recognized the same economic inequalities that capitalism produced, especially the inequality in standard of living between workers and capitalists.

Marx exposed the vertical hierarchy to capitalism that Adam Smith ignored. Capitalism helped to keep the worker relatively poor while making the capitalist more wealthy through the extraction of surplus. The capitalist structure in the production process helped to create two distinguished classes, one wealthy, and the other poor. But just as there are rich and poor people within countries, there are rich and poor countries as well.

Wealth is extremely concentrated in the world and the income gap between rich and poor countries is growing. This phenomenon does not appear spontaneously. It is merely a logical working production of capitalist institutions, namely the accumulation drive. Capitalism's accumulation drive helps lead to imperialism. Imperialism is defined as the economic and political domination of one country by the dominant class of another country. Profit seeking leads to economic expansion across national boundaries. But why does it lead to domination? And what do expansive capitalist firms look for?

"[Capitalism] allows the transfer of surplus product from the periphery to the center."
Khatak and Haynes

They look to export goods, obtain raw materials and export capital. When firms export their capital, they look for cheap labor, weak environmental laws, less regulation (taxes) and to avoid tariffs to sell abroad more effectively. Ironically, in global capitalist relations, the government plays a central role in creating a friendly atmosphere for foreign investment by giving capitalists the condition they are looking for. This is one way the capitalist possesses power over government, in its ability to choose or not to choose to invest in a particular geographic area.

Due to competition between capitalist countries, it becomes obvious how the domination of a satellite by the metripole serves as an advantage. It allows the transfer of surplus product from the periphery to the center. Surplus is critical in continually modernizing the production process to stay ahead of the competition. The ownership of surplus illustrates the unequal power relations both between capitalists and workers internally within countries and externally between industrialized and non-industrialized

To the editor:

Yes, we agree that the state legislature doesn't adequately support higher education and that UMass students pay higher tuition than at most other state universities. Because we work with prospective students, we are all too aware of this reality. In this respect, we are student allies and would have supported students in their efforts to make change happen.

As student protestors shouted their opinions and demands at us, we didn't find much with which we disagreed. What we did find disagreeable was the way in which student protestors chose to make their voices heard: by harassing and demeaning Admissions and New Students Program staff members. Taking over a building is, by definition, an act of violence on staff members.

When we learned that students were planning to take over the Undergraduate Admissions Center, we didn't imagine how threatening the experience would be. It became clear to us when we looked out our windows and saw a mass of students stampeding towards the building, heard the thunderous tramping of feet in the stairwells and hallways. We had all heard stories from colleagues who had experienced the heartbreak of work and personal property destroyed in student takeovers. What would our own fate be?

Most of us with locks on our doors were quick enough to lock ourselves into our offices, where we waited to see what would happen next. Those of us who were unable to lock ourselves into protected space faced students who forced us out of our chairs, who went through our drawers and our mail, who handled pictures of our children and other personal possessions, who took photographs of us without our permission. Students took over the phones and restricted our calls. Later, they stole and ate our food, coffee and drinks.

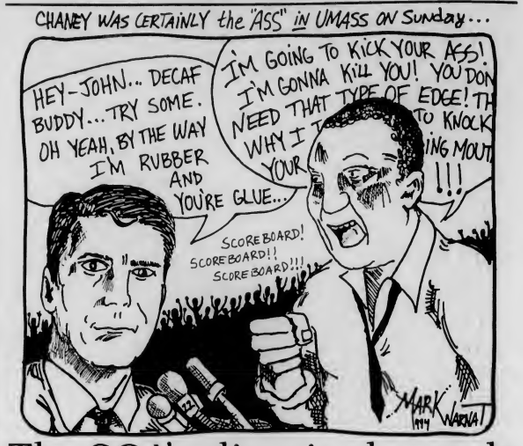
Upon arrival, student voices began chanting against tuition hikes. Soon, stamping feet accompanied the rhythm, and we felt the shaking of our floors and the floors above us, a shaking so violent that pictures fell from walls and an overhead light fixture crashed from the ceiling. Students tried to roust us from the safety of our offices. The door banging started, the repetitive pounding of anger misplaced against us. When that drew no result, huge slamming blows and kicks, screams telling us to "go home." Students came to take over a building, but some of them would not rest until they had taken over the people inside as well.

We talked to one another from locked offices via phone and computer, weighing the risk of leaving our offices. Given the developing mob mentality, would our physical safety be at risk? Who was on the other side of the door? Who was behind the pounding fists and kicking feet? If we left, would students rush in to destroy our work, our personal property? How could we defend ourselves, our personal space, the work in which we had invested so much of ourselves? We experienced both fear of the frenzy outside our doors and anger at being victims of student terrorism.

This was not a peaceful protest. Unfortunately, these student protestors were soldiers on a mission who only saw their own point of view and remained confident of the righteousness of their actions regardless of the impact on other human beings. They did not see that we were people with feelings and rights of our own. We were instead human targets in their war against the University.

Some students began stalking some of the staff members locked in our offices, stalking our names, calling for us to come out. After over an hour of being trapped in our offices, being harassed by students, hearing incessant pounding on our doors, campus security finally escorted us to safety outside the building. On one floor, we were forced to depart with jeering chants of "hoot, hoot, hoot" surrounding us.

Students are not the only ones who have been hurt by the lack of support for higher education. Just as it costs students more each year to study at UMass, it costs faculty and staff more each year to work here because of a historical lack of raises and an increased share of health insurance. The people in this building are not in any position to make administrative or legislative decisions about tuition and fees. Why, then, did the people in this building become the targets of student anger?



Technically, yes, this is "University property," but it is also the place where we spend a great amount of our lives, and we have invested ourselves both in our work and in our space. We have photos of our children here, artwork, valentine flowers from our spouses, and other items of personal value to us, including the work we have done. We wondered if it would all be there on Monday when we returned.

Protesting students have gained their "power" at the cost of our own, without regard to our personal rights and feelings. In their desire to win this battle against the University, we have been used without regard to our humanity, we have been harassed and intimidated, and we have had the safety of our working space violated... and that's what it looks and feels like from the other side of the door.

Opinion

The SGA's disguised agenda

Andrew Davidson

I worked for a non-profit Washington-based political organization over intersession called Lead or Leave. The group was borne out of the co-founders' frustration with expanding federal budget deficits; what they saw was inequity based on generational distinctions. During the 1992 congressional campaign, they convinced 107 candidates to sign a pledge to reduce the deficit within four years or not run for re-election; 17 of those candidates won seats.

Lead or Leave realized that college students comprised a major portion of their constituency, so they decided to include higher education funding among their major issues. They have begun compiling a statistical source for the charter schools to link-up to, thereby further increasing the strength of their national network, and have fostered a number of important political contacts, including a summit with senior Clinton advisor David Gergen in April.

In order to take advantage of the work done by Lead or Leave, a student government must pass a simple resolution which costs no money and can be cancelled at any time. So far, over 90 colleges and universities have passed the resolution, in most cases either unanimously or near-unanimously.

Nick Nyhan, Lead or Leave's deputy director and a UMass alum, proposed that the UMass SGA pass this resolution. I contacted Matthew Pavesi, undergraduate student speaker, several times per week during my stay in Washington, and he assured me that "...between you and me, it's gonna pass." I was also told by Student Government Association President David Nuñez himself that the resolution was his first priority and was assured that he was more adequately capable of getting it passed.

I went to the SGA meeting on Feb. 2 to make sure the proceedings went smoothly. Their first item on the agenda was to ratify the new senators. A few names were called out that I didn't recognize, and then one that I did: it was mine.

"I'm here," I announced, "but I'm not a senator."

"Yes you are, don't worry," Matt Pavesi assured me.

I then sat through a series of abysmally boring proceedings, during which less-than-dedicated senators sauntered in and out of the door, desperately looking for a way to quell the monotony caused by this ridiculous meeting. An hour and a half later, the Lead or Leave resolution came up.

The resolution was being sponsored by the SGA president himself, David Nuñez. Now, David and I don't go back too far, but I feel confident enough to give you this piece of advice: if David Nuñez ever offers to deliver the eulogy at your funeral, tell him it's already been taken care of.

Nuñez proceeded to deliver the most pathetic, inarticulate argument as to why the SGA should pass the resolution. After I coughed my adam's apple back up, I somehow managed to deliver a fairly coherent speech off the top of my head that I hoped would make the room forget about the one-syllable-per-word banter that comprised Nuñez's speech.

The opposition distributed an article from a publication which was dedicated to exposing the sensationalism in our media today (think about that for a second — it is logic along the lines of "Death to all fanatics"). This article painted Lead or Leave as a media-manipulating organization in cahoots with Ross Perot. The left-leaning wing of the senate took the text of this story as gospel, ignoring the fact that the report of Perot's involvement was a complete fabrication.

I then listened to a speech delivered by Sen. Charles Lenchner, a professional student in his mid-20's. He espoused his version of the SGA creed, which was that no outside organization was going to have any influence on the student senate's agenda. They have convictions; they don't work with groups who rely on underwriters or political connections, as Lead or Leave does. They are above media stunts and posturing — these kind of things aren't what student government is about.

So the SGA nixed the resolution. Fair enough. They apparently decided they had their budget fight under control enough so that they don't need outside help.

The UMass SGA is dedicated to low tuition and fees at current levels. Fighting hikes, however, ignores a more fundamental problem: the decline of state money. According to a study I worked on (at Lead or Leave), the Massachusetts state higher education system has experienced a decline in state appropriations of 39% between the school years 1986-87 and 1992-93. A rational solution would be to meet with state and national governments and try to lobby on the students' behalf.

I almost forgot: the SGA shuns outside help, and is too liberal to foster contacts with experienced politicians. Since all of their work must be done at the local level, at least we can be assured that, since they are above media- manipulating, whatever actions they do take here on campus will be free of political posturing.

Think again. The SGA threw caution to the wind this past weekend and decided to take over the Admissions Building. A student government which shunned an outside influence because it manipulates the media then resorts to headline-grabbing building takeovers, something they wouldn't have had to do if they'd been capable of focusing on the real problem: our stingy state legislature.

As it is, we can't be expected to believe that the SGA really thought they accomplished anything by their actions on Friday other than satisfying their rally-hungry egos. I certainly expect more from my student government, and so should you.

Chaney an embarrassment

Justin Doyle

The Temple versus UMass game was one of the most exciting basketball games that the University has ever seen. Unfortunately, it was overshadowed by the postgame press conference and a disrespectful Temple Coach.

Temple Coach John Chaney embarrassed himself and his team by storming into UMass' press conference and screaming at John Calipari for "riding the officials" after the game. Chaney nearly turned the press conference into a schoolyard brawl, and his actions were far too childish for a nationally-recognized coach.

As men's basketball coach at Temple University, Chaney brought the school a great deal of success, but he has now brought shame to one of the best college basketball programs in the country. The latest incident of Chaney blowing his cool was possibly the worst.

Calipari and Chaney squared of in a triple-overtime loss at the Curry Hicks Cage. With 3:44 left in regulation, Temple scored after the shot clock had expired. Calipari complained to the officials who had initially counted the basket because they hadn't heard the buzzer. As Calipari was making his case with the referees, Chaney walked over and began yelling. It lead to a pushing and shoving match in which both coaches had to restrained. After the coaches were separated, the officials disallowed the shot.

After losing to UMass three out of the last four meetings, Temple came into this Sunday's basketball game at the William D. Mullins Center more than a little fired up. The fight between the mascots, the Temple Owl and the Minuteman, set the tone for the game.

The officiating during the entire game was a problem. In the first half Temple had the obvious advantage. The fouls were called late and put Temple guards on the line frequently. The second half was just the opposite. Reach-in fouls and lose ball fouls suddenly went UMass' way. Calipari was visibly upset in the first half about the foul calls. He spoke to the officials after the game, but would not comment as to what he said.

When Chaney held his press conference after the game, he had nothing but praise for the Minutemen, calling UMass "a championship ball club." Shortly after Calipari began his own post-game press conference, Chaney rushed into the room and started verbally attacking the coach for complaining to the officials. After Calipari tried to answer Chaney's accusations, Chaney went on a tirade. He rushed toward Calapari threatening, "I'm going to kick your ass."

Michael Williams went from saving the game to saving Calipari's neck. Williams stepped in front of Chaney and tried to restrained him.

Chaney's outbursts, vulgar language and threats made front-page news and the first story on ESPN's SportsCenter. WGGB-TV was at the press conference so the entire country could see Chaney attacking Calipari.

Calipari was all class through the entire episode. After Chaney left, Calipari paused a minute before making a statement. He refused to comment on what had occurred at the press conference and he asked that none of his players be asked about it either.

The confrontation between Calipari and Chaney was a climax of the rivalry between the two schools. Chaney lost his cool after a disappointing loss in a big game. The difference between the two coaches became evident in their press conferences.

Sixth-year coach John Calipari has learned to become the type of coach that can take talent and bring it together into a winning team. He has also learned the importance of keeping his temper. Just try to keep the technical fouls to a minimum, Coach.

Graduates support building takeover

To the editor:

On behalf of the Graduate Student Senate, I would like to thank and congratulate the Student Government Association, UMass Student Trustee Al Lizana and all the concerned students for leading an organized and principled fight against tuition increases.

As we all know, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is the second most expensive public university in the country. The result is that higher education has become inaccessible for the working poor of this state, a disproportionate number of whom are people of color. In the struggle to lower the cost of higher education, the student protestors have highlighted the inherently racist and elitist consequences of this policy of continuous increases in tuition and fees.

We appreciate and applaud their courageous and excellent efforts, and wish them success in their future endeavors to make public higher education once again accessible to the public, and not just the privileged few. Risking their status as students, the protestors decided to fight for the future of the youth of Massachusetts and deserve the broadest possible support of all Massachusetts residents who, in fact, are the true shareholders of this University.

Celtic rock they are not: Cordelia's Dad explains

Cordelia's Dad, hangin' tough.

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

Cordelia's Dad
The Black Sheep Cafe
February 12, 1994

Cordelia's Dad performed a soulful concert this past Saturday evening at a crowded Black Sheep Cafe. The band played two sets, the first of which was acoustic, minus the drummer.

Lead singer Tim Eriksen started out the evening with "As I Travel," a song filled with the sense of dark clouds overhead as a man travels a rough road. Barely intelligible, the words are difficult to pick up. But following the words is not nearly as important as Eriksen's voice, carrying the brooding tone convincingly.

Other songs featured were "Babes in the Woods" and "Johnny Oh Johnny." The latter was a crowd favorite shouted out at Eriksen's call for requests. As the Cafe only permits a fairly small audience, Cordelia's interaction with the crowd was constant and humorous.

With many of Cordelia's songs being about children and death, the band has learned to develop a sense of humor about the lyrics. If they didn't, shows would be rather morbid. Drummer Peter Irvine said that the band plays "a lot of American traditional music from the 19th century." Fairy tale moroseness is brought to mind when hearing "Babes'" description of children dying in the woods.

Having been together for seven years, Cordelia's Dad has developed a tight sound. Guitarist Tom King's consistent and agile strumming continuously supports and compliments Eriksen's voice, which steadily reaches emotional highs and lows. Together they create a solid strand of harmony.

Although King's playing has an Irish tone to it and lyrics Eriksen sings could describe rural life in Ireland, there isn't much that is Celtic about Cordelia's Dad. The band is often deemed in caiendars and other listings as Celtic rock.

"This is a label and misconception that started somewhere" because "there isn't much that's Celtic or rock" about them, according to Irvine. He added that they don't perform jigs and other types of traditional Celtic music. As far as the rock is concerned, in their electric sets the band has an alternative style. Aucostic sets could be considered traditional folk, as opposed to modern folk.

Cordelia's music is thought of by band members as music which had roots in Ireland but has now become American. Irvine said that the band enjoys playing traditional music with their own take on it, and that when the music "crossed the ocean it developed a life of its own."

Local to the area, Cordelia's Dad will play in other venues soon, so be on the lookout for other dates. I would personally like to see the band in a different setting. Saturday night drew a rather young and hormonally-charged group. But this isn't the fault of the Black Sheep or Cordelia's Dad, and it couldn't take away from Eriksen's smooth performance.

Empty Getaway, My Girl who?

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

The Getaway could have been a great remake. Slick and stylish, boasting a script by modern-day Peckinpah, Walter Hill, this could have been the perfect vehicle for newlyweds Alec Baldwin and Kim Basinger.

Unfortunately director Roger Donaldson sugarcoats his nihilistic fantasy, sending this Bonnie and Clyde story by way of Benny and Joon.

Not much has changed since the 1972 original, a Steve McQueen vehicle also scribed by Hill. Newly sprung jailbird Doc McCoy does the thing he knows best, pulling off one more heist for the shady Jack Benyan (James Woods). When his racetrack robbery goes sour, McCoy grabs his marital partner-in-crime and makes a run for the Mexican border with an armada of cops and redneck gestapo on his trail.

Since The Getaway is essentially one long chase flick, screenwriter Hill fills the screen with many garish eccentrics and explosions, each pulling equal time.

However it's these outlandish villains that sink the film. Their over-the-top energies strongly contradict Baldwin and Basinger's mundane posturing.

Baldwin can play compelling bad guys, he's proven that in films like Miami Blues, but Donaldson chooses to let the leads pull anchor duty to the mayhem around them, letting everybody else chomp scenery with wild abandon.

Had Baldwin and Basinger been given as manic a turn as Michael Madsen and Jennifer Tilly's rival crook and housewife-turned-gun moll, the cartoonish excess of sex and violence would have had a purpose. instead it's just one more tightly orchestrated orgasm of crane shots and slo-mo, posing to stylize screen violence, but ultimately achieving mere space filler status. C (Hampshire Six).

My Girl 2 — Coming of age stories are always interesting venues for films. The emotions inherent in the burgeoning growth from child to adolescence and beyond translate well to the screen. The heartache rings true because we've all traveled those anxious roads to adulthood. The problem is, wasn't that ground already covered in the original My Girl?

Still haunted by thoughts of a mother she never knew and the death of her childhood friend, Veda (Anna Chuimsky) decides to journey to Los Angeles to unravel clues to her mother's short but rich life. There she drops death for thoughts about love, pining for the affections of her wary tour guide (Austin O'Brien).

Director Howard Zieff doesn't do anything new, instead aiming to ride the coattails of pre-established characters, creating a very dull sequel.

The original film had good cast turns by Dan Aykroyd and Jamie Lee Curtis as well as a breakthrough performance by the talented Chulmsky. Surprisingly, Macauley Culkin's wide-eyed tenderness brought real tears to the effort.

Chulmsky is still very good and Aykroyd and Curtis appear fleetingly, unfortunately Zieff only offers an absence of plot and a drought of heart and humor.

Halfway through the movie you start to wish they'd drop the poor acting by O'Brien and pull a Weekend at Bernie's number on Mac's old bones. Anything to keep you awake. D+ (Hampshire Six).

Two new trax make waves

Nick Heyward
From Monday To Sunday
Epic Records

Nick Heyward is a child of the early eighties new wave movement as the former lead singer of power-pop meisters Haircut 100. They made somewhat catchy, and eventually boring pop tunes, pure ear candy whose every twist and turn could have been guessed minutes before it happened. Heyward's new solo effort, From Monday to Sunday, is not really much different.

Heyward writes very traditional pop tunes that demonstrate nothing overwhelming in terms of uniqueness or construction that hold a listener's attention. The one particularly bright spot is "Kite," the only track played and sung with any passion. The rest of the songs are as colorless as their silly and contrived titles, such as "January Man," "How Do You Live Without Sunshine" and "Mr. Plain."

Unfortunately for Nick Heyward, "Mr. Plain" sums up his album perfectly. He needs to add some passion and spark to his folk-pop in order to add listeners. C- (B.B.).

The Billys
The Time Has Come
BMI Records

One could make the generalization that this group is a straight foreword folk group, in the vein of Tracy Chapman and the legendary James Taylor. In doing so one would unfortunately overlook a unique band in terms of both their arrangements and use of different musical styles.

The Billys, a name derived from the first names of the two members of the group Billy Melanson and Billy Jonas, can be considered traditional folk, but a quick listen to the songs on their release The Time Has Come: Music Played on Foraged, Found and Traditional Instruments will shed light on a band that should be considered more than that.

Songs like "Chain Letter," with reggae influenced vibe and celtic music touches at the chorus, and "Christoffer," a poignant ballad about a young boy's death at the age of six (with lyrics like "he kissed a car going 35 mph,") show off the well rounded song writing skills of Melanson and Jonas.

Other notable songs include the acoustic instrumental "I Will Follow," "Wichita" (which is a must for all you Phish heads out there) and "Primordial Ooze III" which uses rap and funk based grooves to present social satire the way the The Billys see it. A (R. Bertrand).

Helium
"Hole In The Ground" 7"
Pop Narcotic Records

Let this be a warning: this brand new Helium 7" single includes two addictive pop melodies, and after a listen, you are likely to sing the tunes for days.

Helium is a relatively new Boston based band featuring ex-members of Autoclave and Dumptruck. The A-side of the single, "Hole in The Ground" has become a hit on college radio and after hearing it, you know why. However, the B-side contains an even better tune, "Lucy."

Ballet troupe prepares for tour

By KRISTEN ROUNTREE
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst Ballet Theatre Company
Bowker Auditorium
February 13, 1994

The town of Amherst is home to five prestigious colleges and universities, and also to many lesser-known, but nonetheless remarkable establishments.

Among these is the Amherst Ballet Theatre Company, a group of women aged 12 to 17 who will later this year travel around the world to perform in the 22nd Aberdeen International Youth Festival in Scotland. The company performed their repertoire Sunday in Bowker Auditorium to an almost full audience, allowing those who attended an early glimpse of talent to be seen by dance companies around the world this summer.

The program was comprised of six pieces, starting with "Sevillanas," a lively, folk-like number with a touch of humor. The next two pieces, "Hoe Down" and "Beat on Time" followed the first piece effectively, the former with a similar folk style and the latter with American flavor, complete with disco music and spandex shorts.

After these first three pieces came a more mellow second half to the show. The jumpiness of the first half may have been missing from the second, but the talent and style were not. Slower, more melodic pieces such as "Salsa Nuestra," performed in white, ankle-length gowns reflected the moodiness of a modern dance piece, and "Cello Concerto," done to the music of Vivaldi, was a graceful piece reminiscent of classical ballet.

The most unusual number, "Sea Study" featured the dancers moving in wavelike patterns around puppets in the form of seagulls and fish, and ended with a giant octopus clasping the shredded, blue-green costumes, giving the appearance of seaweed.

The work of these young women was met with much applause by the audience. With six months left to be perfected, these dance pieces should make the Amherst Ballet Theatre company proud to represent this small town in a worldwide competition this August.

Cafferty & co. rock Pearl Street

By CALEB COCHRAN
Collegian Staff

John Cafferty & the Beaver Brown Band
Pearl Street
February 12, 1994

John Cafferty's show at Pearl Street last Saturday night featured no mosh pit, no stage dives, no light shows and no dancers. Cafferty's old-fashioned delivery of foot-stomping, hand-clapping, beer-drinking rock and roll, however, was enough to please the packed house downstairs at the Northampton nightclub.

Cafferty and his five bandmates played with a barroom intensity reminiscent of George Thorogood and the Destroyers, sending the crowd of mostly thirty-somethings into fits of dancing and head-bobbing. Cafferty's gritty, working-class voice bears remarkable similarity to that of Bruce Springsteen, and the similarity was even more striking in person. On a few occasions I found myself closing my eyes and imagining the Boss himself belting out Cafferty's songs.

Cafferty is known for his hard-driving, no-frills rock, and he did not disappoint on Saturday night. The evening began with "Hell on Wheels," which led into the band's biggest hit, "On the Dark Side," widely known from the Eddie and the Cruisers soundtrack. This second song was especially pleasing in a live context, as the tune lends itself to hand- clapping audience participation.

Another memorable tune was "Tough All Over," as saxophonist Michael "Tunes" Antunes performed the song with fire and gusto.

Cafferty charmed the audience throughout the evening by introducing several of his songs with short anecdotes to serve as explanations of the music. Listening to Cafferty's stories, it became clear that he and his Beaver Brown Band are the definition of a true rock and roll band — touring non-stop, playing at small clubs night after night, and making fans all over the country happy in the process. Saturday night's stop at Pearl Street was no exception.

Throughout this entire song there is a constant clash between innocent, child-like vocals and the loud driving guitar and bass. Near the end of the song the guitars build loudly and the vocals rise in octaves, creating a chilling effect.

In both songs, Helium effectively changes tempo and dynamics, similar to the Smashing Pumpkins. The change in tempo can be a powerful tool in music, and Helium does this very well. Expect to hear a lot more from Helium in the near future, as Matador Records will be releasing their debut CD soon. When it comes to singles, they don't get much better than this, and the only regret that I have is that two songs is not enough to fill my Helium addiction. A (M.Burke).

The Far Side By Gary Larson

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be decisive; uncertainty could offset your travel efforts. There are excellent devices designed to meet your health needs; use them without embarrassment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): If a family matter interferes with your work plans, ask for understanding. The clue is to maintain harmony in the home. Step lightly when it comes to romance and commitment. Answer overdue mail.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Promises made to others are in the spotlight. A relative demands more of your attention. Coming on too strong this evening could give someone a false impression. Act in a dignified manner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A discussion about money could catch you off-guard. Do not be discouraged; encoming aspects denote an easing of tension. Try not to envy a friend's good fortune. Help comes from an unexpected source.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Weigh all available information before making a new commitment. Someone could be misrepresenting things or putting up a fake front. Deal with a minor health problem before it comes more serious.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial backing comes through a loan or sale. Seek free entertainment if low on funds. Museums, libraries and parks hold special pleasure. Travel may be necessary in connection with your work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your talents could win you a special prize or gift. Share the limelight with someone who has been by your side for a long time. Keep entertainment spending to a minimum.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Exaggerated hopes could be scaled down to avoid disappointment later on. Promises may not be kept. Hold tight to your ideals and love of family. Give prompt attention to a pressing financial matter.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You cannot be in two places at once, or accomplish everything you want at the same time. Work at a steady pace, without taking too many breaks. Higher-ups notice your diligence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A business expansion enjoys favorable influences. Make sure you and your partners are on the same wavelength. An upbeat mood during the workday yields to romantic impulses this evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some opportunities are truly "once-in-a-lifetime"! Let nothing take you away from a fascinating project or work assignment. Find more rewarding ways to spend your leisure time. Self-improvement activities are favored.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are not one to waste either time or money. Establish the day's agenda along practical lines. Loved ones are in a cooperative frame of mind. Accept offers on your journey to success.

This serves to illustrate that just as elite rule by industrial workers concern nations domestically, such domination resembles the more broader picture internationally by developed countries over developing countries as well. Both capitalism's drive to expand as well as its tendency towards monopolization have helped lead to a coordinated effort on the part of the former colonizers to create an monopoly on International governance of developing nations. For developing countries to finally free themselves from imperialist relations, they must find alternative means to capitalism. They must recognize that attempts to develop as dependent capitalists in an economic arena where developed countries possess a sizeable comparative advantage, will result in losing out to competition.

ration for a road meet at Northeastern this weekend. Kuzara will alter the line-up in an attempt to rest some of his young freshmen.

"We'll rest our best people for the end of the season, rewarding some of the other gymnasts," Kuzara said.

UMass showed off its young talent with a second place outing against three upper level gymnastics squads. The performance was the highest score of the year for the Minutewomen.

"This is the way we can perform throughout the whole season, we have proved to ourselves we can do this well," Keels said.

AUSCHWITZ
NOT A HOLLYWOOD MOVIE!

Polish documentary film maker David Cole has produced a shocking, absolutely necessary video on Auschwitz. You will see and hear things in this video that you will never forget as in Spielberg's Schindler's List!

"A powerful video..."
(Yitzhak Rabin, Director Holocaust Studies at Hebrew University)

See the personal journal of the camp put in perspective for the first time on film. Learn how Polish non-Jews guide the true history of the Auschwitz gassing chamber. See Auschwitz survivors tell their story. See Franciszek Piper, curator of the Auschwitz Museum, during which he reveals facts about Auschwitz to David Cole never before allowed to be filmed.

An Extraordinary Offer

The very trained offer is being run in selected college newspapers only. The documentary is on 2 VHS cassettes (4 hours total). Regular price is $59 in the U.S. and Europe. For a limited time you can obtain this video of David Cole's documentary for $14.95 + postage!

Today we are making this singular special offer: To provide information about the Auschwitz story that almost certainly you will never get from any source in your campus. This is a milestone historical documentary! The price is right. Order now!

Swartz leads team in tough match-up

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team turned in a remarkable performance at Arizona in its toughest meet to date. And once again, the Minutewomen were led by their great group of freshmen.

UMass placed second in the meet with a team score of 189.175, with California–Berkeley finishing first (190.450). Arizona came in third on its home floor, the McKale Center, with Ohio State finishing fourth.

"I'm just thrilled, really pleased with a second place finish. We put as much pressure on Cal as we could," Coach David Kuzara said.

Tara Swartz won the all–around with a personal best of 38.75. The standout freshman has paced UMass in the all– around throughout the season, and Friday night's performance was no different.

"It's so gratifying, the best thing was that it helped to beat Arizona and Ohio State," Swartz said.

Swartz set a Minutewomen all–time team record with a 9.850 on the bars. Senior Magaret Furtado followed with a 9.7. UMass lost the event by .025 to Cal.

Swartz again led the Minutwomen on the vault with a 9.8, edged by Heather Schneider and Candice Kwok of Cal who each scored a 9.850.

Shaheda Keels won the floor exercise with 9.725 and freshmen Lianne Laing picked up a 9.550. Swartz also led the Minutewomen on the beam with a 9.450.

"To compete and win in Arizona is just tremendous. A performance like that on the road puts UMass on the map," Kuzara said.

California, led by former UMass coach Alfie Mitchell, rode good performances by Schneider, Kwok and Lisa Washington.

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team performed well in Arizona this past weekend, and hope to keep it up as they travel to Northeastern on Saturday, Feb. 19.

"Alfie was really nice to us, he had so much fun, he was impressed by our squad," said Kuzara.

"I see this as one of the most rewarding I ever coached, we showed our stuff and never faltered," Kuzara said.

Minutemen on the road, meeting Hawks in Philly

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

When a majority of the 9,493 fans in the William D. Mullins Center rushed the court after Massachusetts defeated Temple, 56–55 last Sunday afternoon, no Minuteman was thinking about the next game, at least not until the team returned to the locker room.

But Sunday's action didn't end on the court. Temple Coach John Chaney and Massachusetts Coach John Calipari went at it in Calipari's post–game press conference, and both needed to be restrained before order was restored.

The ramifications of the altercation are still being felt in Amherst, Philadelphia and nationwide (see story on page 1). However, the Minutemen, who have moved back in the Top 10 as No. 10 need to shake off whatever effects Sunday's events may have as they travel to Hawk Hill in Philly to face Atlantic 10 rival St. Joseph's tonight (7 p.m.)

St. Joe's, coached by John Griffin, was touted by many in the pre–season to challenge the upper echelon of the A–10. But injuries have taken their toll throughout the course of this season, leaving the Hawks grounded in last place of the conference at 2–11.

Bernard Blunt, the Hawks' leading scorer last season and a member of the first–team all–conference squad, shattered his knee cap earlier this season in a loss against Arizona, ending his 1993–94 campaign before it even started.

Griffin and the Hawks also lost Bernard Jones to injury prior to the season, along with starter Mark Bass with a broken bone in his foot just recently.

Even when St. Joe's got good news, it came with some more bad. Last Sunday, during the Hawks contest with Rhode Island, forward Carlin Warley scored his 1000th point in the second half. It was also announced that Warley, a senior, was awarded another year of eligibility. The celebration ended there.

Trailing by only two, 65–63, the Hawks lost Warley when he injured his neck; he was carried off the court on a stretcher. On the same play, the Rams came down, hit a three–pointer, pulling away to a 73–64 victory.

Despite the injury, Warley is expected to see action tonight against the Minutemen.

In The Paint: Minuteman center Jeff Meyer and his wife, Joanne, welcomed their newborn son, Jacob, into the world late Saturday ... Massachusetts Assistant Coach James "Bruiser" Flint returns to his alma mater tonight where he starred for the Hawks at the point.

Hockey team heads north, plays St. Anselm

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Don't think the University of Massachusetts hockey team is licking its wounds and feeling sorry after a 4–1 rematch loss to Merrimack 10 days ago.

No, the Minutemen (17–8) have been through rigorous practices to gear up for their contest with Division II powerhouse Saint Anselm College (13–3–3) tonight in Manchester, New Hampshire. Coach Joe Mallen said the team still has many battles left.

"Our rationale for working the guys hard is that the season's not over. It's as simple as that," said Mallen. "I think we've had a fair amount of success and we've got a chance to finish up something special. Saint Anselm is not a game to be taken lightly.

The team defeated Alabama–Huntsville, No. 1 in Division II, earlier in the year. They are currently on an 11–game unbeaten streak and crushed their two weekend opponents, Middlebury College and Norwich University, by a combined 20–7 margin.

"I think up front we have some depth, which is nice to say," said Saint Anselm Coach Ken Cusack. "We have four pretty good lines and our scoring is spread out."

While Saint Anselm has been scorching hot, UMass has been at the practice rink, working hard and getting ready.

"It was good to get time off because there was a stretch there when we played five games in a week and a half," forward Gerry Cahill. "Coach worked us hard so it's not like we're losing anything."

Both teams have a bit of a goaltending dilemma. Saint Anselm's starting netminder, John Herrick, suffered a slight concussion over the weekend and is questionable for the game. Herrick, a freshman, has started every game this year.

UMass is in a similar situation with Rich Moriarty and Dave Kilduff. Kilduff may get the opportunity between the pipes, but Moriarty has come on strong, according to Mallen.

"Rich has made some improvement over the year and we like to go with whoever we think the 'hot goalie is," said Mallen.

"I think collectively we have to step up, all of our players," said Cusack. "We don't have the talent to compete with UMass so we need 18 skaters and our goalie ready. A good game against UMass, win or lose, is going to help us."

Swim teams fare well in big meet

•Men's swim wins New Englands •Women's swim takes third place

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

A good sign for any coach is to have to find space on the office wall for trophies. Coach Russ Yarworth is faced with a little redecorating this week following last weekend's New England Championships at Springfield College.

For the eighth consecutive year, the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team captured the New England Championship.

The Minutemen finished first with 1050 points, 276.5 points ahead of runner–up Springfield College. Rhode Island placed third in the meet with 705 points followed by Southern Connecticut with 629 points. Boston College rounded out the top five scoring 587.5 points.

"It's a good feeling to win it again," Yarworth said. "We went there to win it again. The kids worked hard to do that."

Aside from the team championship, the Minutemen also claimed two individual awards.

Junior Tim Milbert was named as the top swimmer of the meet for finishing first in all three of his events.

Milbert was victorious in the 200–yard individual medley with a time of 1:57.11, the 100–yard breaststroke in 1:00.13, and the 200–yard breaststroke in 2:12.44.

Tim Nubar took home another piece of hardware for UMass when he was awarded the Hugh MacCurdy Award. The award is given to the senior who has compiled the most points over his four years of competition in the meet.

"He swam great for us," Yarworth said.

Yarworth said the best performances of the meet were turned in by Jeff Little in the 500–yard freestyle and by Greg Menton who anchored the 400–yard freestyle relay.

"That was a great unshaved performance," Yarworth said of Little's victory in the 500–yard freestyle. Little won with a time of 4:43.35.

Menton swam the anchor leg of the relay with an impressive time of 44.88.

"It was just phenomenal for anyone this time of year unshaved," Yarworth said.

Two members of the UMass squad qualified for the ECAC Championships in March. Kerry Hueston and Rob Coletti filled in the 16th and 17th spots on the 18–man roster.

The Minutemen travel to the University of Connecticut today for the New England Invitational. Yarworth said the invitational is an opportunity for the team to swim under time trial conditions.

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

An overall sparkling team effort by the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team resulted in a third place finish at the New England Championships this past weekend in Rutgers.

"I'm happy. For the kids that we brought, I think it was a great meet for them," said Coach Bob Newcomb.

In the third day of the three day meet, UMass crept up to second place in the standings behind BC. But a late surge by Springfield left the Minutewomen third, ahead of a highly– regarded URI team.

"The team responded well," said Newcomb. "They decided they were not going to let Rhode Island beat them."

Two swimmers swam well enough to earn an appearance in the ECAC's, which take place in early March. Carolyn Curran swam the 500–freestyle in 5:22.43.

"She qualified right on her first swim," said Newcomb. "That was a tremendous swim for her."

Curran also swam a personal best in the 200–freestyle.

Heather Saunders was the other swimmer to qualify, notching a time of 2:14.77 in the 200–backstroke. That swim also leaves her eligible to swim in the 100–backstroke and 200 IM at the ECAC's.

"That gives us four backstrokers in the 200–back and three in the 100–back (for the ECAC's)," said Newcomb.

Other spectacular performances and personal bests were turned in by Meghan O'Connor (500–freestyle, 400 IM, mile), Kristen Schapelle (200–freestyle, 100–freestyle) and Jen Sheehan (200 IM, 400 IM, 200–breaststroke).

The divers also performed well, with Dede May placing tenth in the one–meter competition and sixth in the three– meter. Allison White was the recipient of the Senior Diving Award, given to the diver who has accumulated the most points in their four–year career.

"That (award) is a sign of her longevity and ability in this sport," said Newcomb.

Senior Amy Lewis also earned accolades from Newcomb for her inspiring performance.

"She came back and the last night she swam her fastest 200–breaststroke ever," said Newcomb. "She played a great leadership role, coming in and taking charge of things."

"I can't say enough about this team and how proud of them and the way they swam this weekend," said Newcomb. "This is a great way to set up what's going to happen in the ECAC's."

Jansen slips, fails to take gold

By JIM LITKE
Associated Press

HAMAR, Norway — This was supposed to be the first day of the rest of his life, the first day of the rest of all their lives. Instead, it turned out to be just one more cruel version of yesterday.

Whenever and wherever Dan Jansen and the Olympics turn up in the same sentence, it seems fate is working with a photocopier.

On Monday, six years to the day after he fell in Calgary, and two years after he skated tentatively through the next–to– last turn in Albertville rather than risk another fall, a slip cost Jansen an Olympic medal.

"As soon as i saw him slip, i said, 'Why, God? Why again?'" his wife, Robin, said.

For a moment, she paused, waiting for an answer she did not expect anytime soon.

"God can't be that cruel. I'm sure one day we'll find out why. "One day," she added, "we'll understand."

To her left, baby daughter Janie still smiled. For most of the hour she sat while 20 speedskating pairs buzzed the oval at Viking Ship hall, the 8 1/2–month–old blonde had bounced from the lap of one relative to another. Thus occupied, Janie remained oblivious to the disappointment of her father's eventual eighth–place finish. Her blue eyes still sparkled mischievously afterward, above a white wool sweater on which "Go, Daddy, Go" was embroidered in red and blue letters.

Yet, had Robin looked to the side of her, where almost two dozen family members and friends had collected in the stands, she would have seen her own sadness being reflected back. But not for long.

Two seats over, Gerry Jansen had dropped her scoresheet and pencil into her lap, and was already mustering a smile of her own.

Unlike most of the people looking on in Calgary in 1988, the matriarch of the Jansen clan never forgot the real tragedy of that day was losing her daughter, Jane Beres, to leukemia — not Dan's well–publicized fall a few hours later, nor his backing off the throttle four years after that, settling for a moral victory and a fourth–place finish at Albertville.

The 1994 Atlantic 10 Conference Men's and Women's Indoor Track Championships have been cancelled and will not be rescheduled this season.

Because of inclement weather this past weekend, the championships were postponed. However, the conference office was unable to reschedule the championships because of prior scheduled committments among the participating teams.

The next Atlantic 10 Conference Men's and Women's Indoor Track Championships will take place in 1995.

Crime bill is tough on repeat offenders

By NANCY BENAC
Associated Press

LONDON, Ohio — President Clinton stepped up pressure on Congress to pass a tough and smart crime bill Tuesday but warned against reaching too far in trying to put chronic, violent offenders behind bars for life.

Surrounded by a field of uniforms at the Ohio Peace Officers Training Academy, Clinton declared, "The American people have waited on this bill long enough."

Clinton reiterated his support for a "three strikes and you're out" proposal to require life imprisonment of repeat violent offenders. But he pointed out that most violent crimes are state - not federal - offenses and cautioned against making the provision too broad.

"There should be no partisanship in this, no politics, no posturing," he said. "We shouldn't litter it up with every offense in the world that the average police officer would tell you on the front end shouldn't be part of it.

"In other words," he continued, "we need to draw this properly and right so . . . it means something that every American can agree with."

The Senate-passed crime bill contains a "three-strikes" provision, which would require a life sentence for anyone convicted three times of violent crimes - if the third conviction was on a federal charge. The House has approved its own anti-crime legislation but not a three-strikes measure.

Aides said the president wanted to make sure the final version is constructed so that it covers only the most violent, habitual criminals.

Clinton stressed that because most criminal laws are made at the state level, Congress should set a federal standard that states "will embrace so we can identify the relatively small number of people that are wreaking heartbreak and devastation and death and put them behind bars and keep them there."

Attorney General Janet Reno sounded a similar message earlier in the day, telling reporters the provisions "simply need to be tailored to focus on the truly violent criminal, the three-time armed robber, the people who really hurt other people and should be put away and kept away."

Clinton said he wants a "tough, smart" crime bill that puts 100,000 new police on the streets, offers more money to build prisons and encourages boot-camp-style programs for young offenders.

"I'll make this commitment: If Congress will pass the bill soon, I will respond by cutting red tape," he said..

Israeli scholar discusses Arab rights and autonomy

By BARBARA A. CANNISTRARO
Collegian Staff

At a lecture at Amherst College, an advisor to former Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said that the rights of those living within Israel ought to be legally defended, but that in practicality, "they ought to be negotiable."

Yossi Olmert, who called himself a "card–carrying member" of Israel's right–wing Likud party, and a columnist for Israel's largest newspaper, Yedioth Ahronot, spoke last night about his views concerning the prospects of peace in the Middle East and the rights of Jews and non–Jewish Arabs living within the "Land of Israel."

Adamantly supporting the rights of Jews to live anywhere within the "Land of Israel," Olmert commented on Muslim demands for religious freedom and access to Jerusalem. "We gave up [Israel] for 2,000 years, they will give up for 2,000 more."

Olmert stated that under Israeli law the rights of all religious groups are protected. In response to a question about Palestine Liberation Organization claims to Jerusalem, Olmert stated, "Jerusalem is in good hands — family hands." Olmert's brother is currently the mayor of Jerusalem.

Olmert, whose three–month trip to the United States is sponsored in part by the American Zionist Movement in cooperation with the World Zionist Organization, defined the "Land of Israel" as a geographical area including the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which has been occupied by Israel since 1967.

Olmert stated that he supported Palestinian autonomy to the extent that Palestinians might govern their day–to–day lives without gaining control of "external security" or foreign relations. He also said that his support of Jewish claims to the occupied territories does not necessarily entitle Jews to political control of those areas.

Olmert said that he was completely against the September peace agreement between the PLO and the Israeli government. In light of discussions between the two political entities, he said that he is now opposed to the agreement even more.

"Autonomy is a good thing provided we don't allow this to become a full–fledged Palestinian state," he said. He said that he did not expect that a Palestinian state to be formed within the next five years.

Olmert also predicted that unless the PLO is able to provide jobs as well as security against terrorism to the people of the Gaza Strip, that the "old game of blame the Jews will become passe," and that the people will rise up against the Arab authorities.

Olmert will speak at UMass tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Campus Center Room 165.

Student government elections on the way

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Government Association will hold elections for president of the student body and for student trustee on Tuesday, March 8 and Wednesday, March 9.

Governmental Affairs Chair Cam Tewksbury said the nomination papers for the positions, which went out last week, can be obtained at the SGA office located at room 420 of the Student Union. The nomination papers are due by February 22 in the SGA office.

Candidates must get 250 signatures to get on the ballot, Tewksbury said. She also said the trustee position is open to both undergraduates and graduate students, but the president's position is open to undergraduate students only.

Tewksbury said she thinks some of the issues that this year's candidates will address will include tuition, housing and the quality of education. She said last year, voter turnout was exceptional because last year's candidates did a stellar job of campaigning and educating students about their stances on the issues.

"Last year 10 percent of the student population voted, which is a tremendous turnout. It is unparalleled in recent years when the percentage of students who voted was only in the single digits," she said. "The candidates worked vigorously to talk about the issues to their constituents."

Tewksbury said she thinks students should turn out to vote for their new leaders because it is a way for students to get their concerns about the campus voiced via their leaders.

"There are so many things on this campus that students have got to have a problem with something. I don't think there is any student on this campus who is totally satisfied with the University," she said. "Even if you are satisfied, there is no guarantee that things won't change.

"It's important that students follow the election so that they can make an educated choice about who is going to represent them," Tewksbury said.

Wolves are back from near-extinction

Rick McIntyre, author of "A Society of Wolves."

By JAMES SMITH
Collegian Correspondent

The human understanding of the wolf in nature was one of fear and misunderstanding throughout history, according to Rick McIntyre in his address A Society of Wolves: National Parks and the Battle Over the Wolf.

McIntyre, a 1971 graduate of the University of Massachusetts Forestry Department, said that due to this understanding the wolf had been a target for extermination by humans since the Middle Ages. An extermination, which in the lower 48 United States saw the wolf population fall from two million before Columbus arrived, to a few hundred by the 1950s.

However, McIntyre said that by the 1960s, during a time of greater awareness for nature and the environment, attitudes towards the wolf changed. An attitude which saw the "extermination of the wolf as very wrong," McIntyre said.

According to McIntyre, the wolf was praised than feared by human civilization. First seen as a god in Egypt and a symbol to the Romans, the wolf was latter to be feared in both fairy tale and folklore as the "big bad wolf," and the dreaded werewolf, McIntyre said.

"The early settlers (in both Europe and North America) inadvertently destroyed the natural habitat of the wolf," McIntyre said. "Causing the wolf to switch targets, and hunt slow and easy to catch domestic animals."

In the United States, this natural habitat was the Bison Buffalo, and when its numbers were reduced from 75 million in the 1600s to 75 by 1884, the wolf turned to domestic livestock, McIntyre said. "And the war against the wolf" had begun.

Campus escort service overwhelmed by calls

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Correspondent

The campus Escort Service, which picks up students and sends them to their destinations in the evenings, has been inundated by requests, reaching levels that are "overwhelming," according to Larry Holmes, the Deputy Chief of Security.

The service, run by the Division of Public Safety, received about 22,500 calls last year, almost twice as many as it received in 1992 and 30 times as many received in 1985.

"It is beyond anyone's comprehension," Holmes said. The volume of requests the Service receives is testing the limits of the employees, both students and faculty, who take requests and dispatch the two vans.

Holmes says that dispatchers are allowed to handle calls four out of the eight hours they work. Any longer, he says, is too much for one person. "I've had them come in tears," Holmes said. "The phone just doesn't stop ringing."

The situation is exacerbated when a group of people make a call, Holmes said. Since each van seats only five to seven passengers, drivers must make more trips to take care of all calls. Delays are frequent, with callers waiting up to 20 minutes, he said.

The Escort Service is available seven days a week, from 5 p.m. to 3 a.m. during the academic year. Peak calling hours are on Thursday to Saturday nights, averaging 130 to 150 calls a night. During the rest of the week, 60 to 100 calls are taken, depending on the weather. Bad weather seems to increase the number of calls, Holmes said.

Most of the callers are women, Holmes said, although more men have been using the service recently.

The problem is not money, according to Holmes, since the $2 million budget the Division of Public Safety receives has survived cuts. Although planning and evaluation of the Service is constantly ongoing, Holmes said that the Service may undergo some additional reorganization of personnel or driving routes. He said that a survey on the Escort Services this March will help in redesigning the program.

To alleviate the situation more can be done, Holmes said. He recommends that people use the walking escorts instead of the vans. Another van purchase is being put into next year's budget also, he said.

The Escort Service is just one part of the effort to make the campus safer for students, Holmes said. The Division of Public Safety also houses the campus Police department and security officers, and is responsible for emergency phones and lighting walkways.

Job fair rescheduled, large turnout expected

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Representatives from over 40 companies will speak with students about cooperative education and internship experience at the Co–op Job Fair on Thursday.

The Co–op Job Fair will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. All students are welcomed to attend.

"Students need to get experience before they graduate," said Jeff Silver, director of the Field Experience Program. "They should do co–ops and internships to try and fine tune their career goals, gain experience and get connections."

There will be representatives from The Boston Globe, Massachusetts Dept. of Travel and Tourism, Filene's, K– Mart, Raytheon, IBM, U.S.D.A. and T.J. Maxx.

"I'd like to think we have representatives for every major," Silver said.

The Co–op Job Fair will give students a chance to learn about what co–op jobs and internships are available in their field.

"The opportunities are there," Silver said. "The companies are driving hundreds of miles to meet with students."

Companies will be at the fair to take resumes and give out information about jobs.

"I think students who go to school for four years without getting co–op or internship experience are hurting themselves when they graduate and look for jobs," said Silver.

Co–ops put students in paying jobs for six months. Internships are non–paying jobs which count as credits.

"The co–op jobs available pay very well and internships give students experience and credits toward graduation," Silver said.

N. Korea to allow inspection of nuclear sites

By STEVE JAHN
Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Bowing to increasing international pressure, North Korea agreed Tuesday to allow outside inspections of its declared nuclear program under conditions set by a U.N. watchdog agency.

But the deal did not cover two sites that Western intelligence agencies suspect are doing nuclear work, and inspectors cautioned that meant they could not settle the debate about whether North Korea is developing atomic weapons. Negotiations on that issue have made no headway.

The hard-line Communist regime in Pyongyang contends its nuclear program is devoted to peaceful uses of atomic power. But suspicions about North Korea's refusal to allow inspections have increased tensions with South Korea and raised fears of a military confontation.

The inspection agreement was announced by the International Atomic Energy Agency a week before its board of governors was expected to advise the U.N. Security Council to invoke sanctions on North Korea.

Hans Meyer, spokesman for the Vienna-based U.N. agency, said North Korea's agreement came "out of the blue," after months of little progress in talks over terms for the inspections.

North Korea had argued only it should determine when and how inspections be conducted at the seven sites it has identified as part of its nuclear program. The U.N. agency has always made those decisions for inspections in other nations.

"This appears to be a step in the right direction," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said, adding: "We hope that North Korea follows through on it."

The Clinton administration, which conducted much of the negotiations with North Korea, urged quick inspections and a system to ensure the North Koreans do not secretly divert fissionable nuclear material to weapons work.

"It is a necessary step for the agency to be able to reassure the international community that there has been no diversion of nuclear material," said Michael McCurry, the State Department spokesman.

He said North Korea also must resume discussions with South Korea about ensuring nuclear weapons are kept off the Korean peninsula before Washington would resume talks on political and economic ties.

Less formal talks between the United States and North Korea were to resume later Tuesday in New York.

W.E.B. DU BOIS

W.E.B. Du Bois fulfilled many roles in his lifetime which spanned from 1868 to 1963. His socio-economic and political writings on race relations are considered masterpieces, relevant even today. He was a leader of the African-American community, a Pan-Africanist, activist, organizer, writer, journalist, publisher and poet. But the role he valued most was that as an educator. W.E.B. Du Bois acknowledged that whatever success he had in addressing and changing the forms and structures of oppression in this society and in the world at large emanated from his access to education, and that the liberation of his community and of all oppressed peoples would flow from knowledge and action to change existing imbalances of income and power.

It is in this spirit that we tie together the naming of the tower library, the issue of access to public higher education for those historically denied such access, financial backing for those lacking the means, and the changing of other institutional symbols to reflect this new attitude and openness on campus. We, the undersigned, want to create the broadest possible movement in support of these goals, and we ask you to join us in these efforts by signing this petition.

PETITION

In order to serve the goals of multiculturalism, diversity and accessibility, we the undersigned at UMass Amherst demand the following:

1. Keep the pledge made to the African American, Latin American, Asian American and Native American (ALANA) students in the Fall of 1992 by increasing the enrollment of ALANA students to 20% at the undergraduate level, and push for a similar percentage at the graduate level.

2. Increase the availability of scholarships for economically disadvantaged students.

3. Name the tower library after the African-American educator, scholar, organizer and leader: W.E.B. Du Bois.

NOTE: Chancellor David K. Scott announced in the Fall of 1993 that he would hold an open university sponsored debate on the issue of whether or not to: "Change the UMass mascot and university symbol from the "Minuteman" to a more appropriate symbol which reflects the cultural and gender diversity representative of this institution of higher learning."

nation had been taken on by the federal government, McIntyre said. U.S. "predator control agents" carried out a policy in which the agents "didn't stop until every last wolf in their district was killed," McIntyre said.

Due to this policy, McIntyre said, there was an explosion in the deer population, an explosion which led to mass starvation of deer in the United Sates. "People didn't understand that by killing off the wolf, they ended a natural safety valve against overpopulation (of other species)."

People began to realize, McIntyre said, that in the long run, the wolf makes other species, such as deer, stronger, by killing off the sick and old.

Peace Corps offers help

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Peace Corps held a general information session last night for students interested in helping people in foreign countries.

The Peace Corps is made up of volunteers who make a tremendous impact in developing communities throughout the world. Volunteers work in Business, Education, Agriculture, Health and the Environment.

Austin Stokes and Meredith McCartney, two graduate students at the University of Massachusetts, spoke about the Peace Corps. Stokes worked for the Peace Corps in Honduras in Central America and McCartney in Benin in West Africa.

"The Peace Corps works in 90 different countries around the world," said Stokes a graduate student in the wildlife department. "There are about 6,000 people out working for the Peace Corps today."

The information session included an explanation of some of the jobs the Peace Corps does. Stokes and McCartney talked about the jobs they did while in the Peace Corps.

"I worked in wildlife protection and national park management," Stokes said. "My primary job was setting up boundaries for a national parks."

"I worked as a rural community development volunteer in Benin," said McCartney a graduate student working for her masters in Family Therapy Counseling. "I worked with seven different woman's cooperatives on everything from nutrition to well projects."

Stokes also explained the benefits which included free airfare to where the Peace Corps sends you, a salary which is put into an account for when you return to the United States and stipends for living expenses.

"You get about $5,400 waiting for you in a bank account when your service in the Peace Corps is done," McCartney said.

The Peace Corps also covers your health insurance if you get hurt or sick while overseas and will differ your college loans until you return home according to McCartney.

"You would be hard pressed to find a group which gives you as many benefits as the Peace Corps," Stokes said. "You might make more money somewhere else but there won't be as good a safety net."

The Peace Corps puts their volunteers through three years of training to help adjust to a foreign country. They also put you through extensive language training.

"The Peace Corps has helped me in every aspect of my life," Stokes said "It gave me a different outlook on life."

SEMESTER OR YEAR ABROAD
The American University of Paris is a four-year liberal arts college in Paris welcoming visiting students.
Majors in: Applied Economics, Art History, Comparative Literature, Computer Science, European Studies, French Studies, International Affairs, International Business Administration, International Economics, and Modern History.
Two programs especially designed for visiting students:
The Institute for French Studies in Paris (IFSP) offers students with strong French language proficiency the chance to combine their studies at AUP with courses at the Institut d'Etudes Sociales, Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales, Université de Paris IV–Sorbonne, and Institut d'Etudes Politiques ("Sciences-Po").
The Program in European Affairs (PEA) allows students to select Europe-focused courses from three of our majors, and to integrate them through an on-going seminar. Year-long students may qualify for international affairs internships in their second semester.
- 1000 students from 80 different countries.
- 36% U.S. citizens, 12% French.
- In 1992-93, 12% visiting students.
- Housing is guaranteed.

Full college credit summer courses:
- Three-week French immersion.
- Six-week regular summer session.

FINANCIAL AID.

Only the GE Classic MasterCard. offers students this unequaled package of benefits.

9.9% APR The GE Classic MasterCard is the educated choice for students looking for smart ways to save. It offers one of the lowest APRs you'll find on campus – 9.9%* variable APR for the first year with a low 16.9% variable APR thereafter. That means that even if you're only able to pay the minimum amount due, you'll pay just 9.9% on your outstanding balance.

This great offer could only come from a team like GE Card Services and MasterCard. GE Card Services is part of one of the leading financial services companies in the world. And MasterCard's the credit card more widely accepted than any other on the planet. Together, they provide you with unparalleled financial security.

NO ANNUAL FEE!
While other credit cards charge annual fees of $20 or more, the GE Classic MasterCard has no annual fee. Frankly, we don't see why you should pay just for putting our card in your wallet.

STUDENT DISCOUNTS.
As a GE Classic MasterCard member, you're also entitled to special discounts at many of your favorite stores. Through the COLLEGE MasterValues℠ program, you'll enjoy savings of up to 40% on everything from CDs to travel

The GE Classic MasterCard. An educated choice.
Look for an application on campus or in your mail.
And get the financial aid every student needs.

*APR is shown as of 1/1/94. Low rate APR applies to the first [illegible] closing cycle after that a variable APR, which as of 1/1/94 was 16.9%, will apply to all existing and new balances. At any time your rate and minimum finance charge may increase or decrease based on changes in an independent index. A minimum finance charge of $.50 will apply to all billing cycles in which a loan is outstanding. A cash advance fee of 2% of the advance, minimum $2 and maximum $10, will be charged for each cash advance.

Stylin' and profilin' in NYC

Paramount Pictures contacted Daily Collegian sports editor Art Stapleton to offer an all expenses–paid trip to New York City to see the private screening of the movie Blue Chips. The screening of the Nick Noite/Shaquille O'Neal movie happened to fall on the same weekend as the Massachusetts– Kentucky game. Art had to decline the offer because he was covering the big Minuteman game in New Jersey. So, I whole–heartedly accepted the offer.

Poor little ol' me had to accept a free trip to the Big Apple for the weekend. Don't feel bad for me. Really.

As fast as I'd accepted the offer, I was on the plane to New York City. I'll admit, I was nervous at first. It just seemed to good to be true. I had visions of a sting operation where I was getting set up so I could be pummeled at the hands of some lunatics in the big city. But my dad assured me that they wouldn't spend big bucks on little ol' me just for a murder. Thanks for the reassurance, Pops.

Andrew Bryce

I got off the plane at LaGuardia Airport and headed downstairs to a cab. Walking by signs that warned travelers of Bandit Cabs (which basically means cab drivers without cab licenses who take you to the middle of nowhere, beat the pulp out of you and take your money), I cautiously looked for a sane–looking person to take me to the hotel.

As I was on my way outside, a man stopped me and asked if I needed a cab. I (gulp) said yes, told him where I was going, and he said he could take me. He brought me outside, and opened the door to let me in . . . to a Lincoln Continental.

I kindly asked the man why I wasn't going into a traditional yellow cab. The man uttered in broken English that his yellow cab had a flat, and this is the car he was using. Great. You gotta love entering a mysterious car with a man who you can't understand, in a city where you basically have no idea how to get around, on your way to a free, luxurious trip.

As we were driving through the streets of New York City, I thought of plans for attack. If he made a move to rub me out, maybe I could crank him with my bag. Or, I could pack the loose change into the palm of my hand and pop him one. I am certainly not one for violence, but I was nervously awaiting the worst possible scenario.

He drove me to the hotel. He charged me the expected amount. He was a nice man. He thanked me for my services. I thanked him. I was there in one piece. And to think I doubted you, Mr. Cab Driver.

Righa Royal Hotel. I entered the place, relieved and full of excitement. I went to the desk, and confidently stated my name. The beautiful woman behind the desk looked me straight in the eyes and said she did not have an "Andrew Bryce" listed. Okay, I thought. Stay calm, Andrew. Don't make plans for attack. She then told me to go to the 43rd floor to clear the problem.

Without the bag or the loose change in my hands, I headed up there and met a woman who could help me. I looked at the list of names, and my namr wasn't on there . . . but Art's name was. So, I told her that I was Art . . . well, Andrew . . . well, you get the picture, and everything was settled.

I slipped my card–key into the door, and entered. I don't think I'll be able to explain in full what the room actually looked like. I just wouldn't want to make anyone jealous. I'll just say that one of the three phones in my room was next to the toilet — right by the john in case of an emergency. That basically explains my living arrangements.

I was then told to go to the 53rd floor for a dinner buffet with the rest of the press invitees. I got all dolled up, and went upstairs. Filet mignon, salmon, asparagus tips . . . you know, basically the same food they serve here at the DC with a bit more ambiance. And three forks. And an open bar. But no Hot Heros. I could live with that.

We then headed to the Paramount Theater, and saw Blue Chips. Is that what I was there for? Almost forgot about it. Yeah, I enjoyed the movie. Anyway ...

The next day was filled with activities. I attended the Knicks–Magic game, went to another buffet at the Madison Square Garden grill room, headed over to the Blue Chips press conference, shook hands with Shaquille O'Neal and Anfernee Hardaway, got my picture taken with Bob Cousy, and chatted with Gene Siskel on the bus ride back to the hotel. When we got there I ordered a $23 hamburger from room service with a couple of others on the $125 incidental fees given to us, called my family and some friends on the same bill (but did not use the phone next to the Oval Office, which I now regret), and watched Spectravision from the humongous bed while munching on the complimentary snacks before hitting the hay.

Looking back on the two days of events, I realized a few things. I honestly didn't expect it to be as high–class as it was, but I managed to deal with luxury. I didn't spend a dime on anything, despite being bombarded by men giving me pamphlets of nudie bars on the streets of the city. I didn't get mugged by my cab driver, despite my anxieties. I'll do alright for myself, and if Paramount Pictures or any other corporations call for another free trip . . . I guess I'll accept.

A letter to John Chaney

Dear Coach Chaney,

Figuring you've cooled down a bit by now, thought I'd drop you a line. Sunday's game was a thriller, huh?

A national TV audience got to see two great teams play, teams that play with a burning desire. Two teams that left nothing on the court.

Those three players you have are sensational: McKie, Jones and Brunson. And that vicious matchup zone is a tough riddle for opponents to figure out.

I remember when you were steamrolling through the NCAA tournament last year, your team was looked at as the picture of class, poise and composure by the college basketball world.

Now, especially after Sunday's uncalled–for barrage, it seems you've lost that respect for the school. And yourself.

Throughout the '80s, Temple reached nothing short of excellence in college basketball. Even Massachusetts Coach John Calipari will agree to that. In fact, your excellence over the years was called a "blueprint" by Calipari in building his own program here at UMass.

Perhaps you should take Calipari's cool, calm reaction to your uncaged emotion as a "blueprint" of how to handle yourself in public. Your actions, in one word, were disgraceful.

It must hurt now for you, coach. It must have seemed so easy when you stomped on opponents over the years. You were supreme, the ultimate power.

You were the leader of the pack, much like the leader of a marathon who has been in control for the first 25 miles. But then, all of a sudden, from back in the pack comes this one runner. This one runner is one that you had beaten 21 times in a row. Quickly, the runner grazes your shoulder, whizzing by with one mile to go.

As the runner flies by, there is a focused look on his face. A look of determination is seen in his eyes, one that implies a challenge is being applied within himself. The runner races by with dignity, crossing the finish line with grace. From behind, you look on stunned.

The next race, the same thing happens. But this time, you were neck and neck coming down the stretch. At the finish line, you are edged out again in a photo finish.

It must be frustrating.

"You could have walked away gracefully, accepting defeat, knowing you'd have another chance at victory in a little over a week. But instead you lashed out."

Michael Reiss

Sunday, when the starting gun was blasted and the race began, there was excitement in the air. It was a great scene to be a part of.

When the topsy–turvy race had ended, you had come in second once again. It was that pesky little runner that had your number before. "Where did this guy come from anyway?" you must have thought. Oh, Sir John, he was the runner that studied the way you ran the race those 21 times before. He was the one that when you turned your head to see the nice lead you created for yourself, was far in the distance, a blur in your eyes. It was hard to see him looking back, but it must be a lot clearer now looking from behind.

You could have walked away gracefully, accepting defeat, knowing you'd have another chance at victory in a little over a week. But instead, you lashed out.

When you shoved Williams and unleashed on Calipari, you effectively insulted the UMass community. Alumni too. You insulted college basketball as a whole.

With that in mind, I've enclosed some stamps and self– addressed envelopes to send your apologies in.

We'll be checking our mailboxes.

Opinion

Damage weakens stance

October 1989. Massachusetts state college students rallied outside the State House on Beacon Hill. The reason? Budget cuts and tuition increases. The result? Publicity about the trampled flowers on the front lawn.

May 1992. The Collegian was taken over by student protesters. The reason? Students were upset over an Ed/Op piece concerning the Rodney King verdict. The result? A smashed window in the production office.

February 1994. Students marched in and took over the Undergraduate Admissions Center. The reason? Tuition increases. The result? Bags of trash, stolen items and pizza boxes in the front foyer.

What do these situations have in common? Two things. One, despite good intentions, the results focused on the destruction. The second? I happened to be at all three.

In 1989, as a University of Massachusetts sophomore I rallied on the Hill. I wasn't too concerned with the issues, but my friends were going, so I went.

The 1992 incident was not by choice. As a senior, working on one of my last columns, I joked, "Hit F10 and run!" when warned of approaching protesters. The lingering of laughter was quickly replaced with the shattering of glass as protesters filled the newsroom.

The third protest happened last Friday. Now an employee of the University, I was working in the Admissions Center when a message flashed across my screen, "Protesters on their way over to our building." I continued to work. Minutes later, the entire building filled with chanting students. Occupying every room, they threatened to stamp and holler if we attempted to work. So there I was, in the midst of yet another protest.

I called the Collegian (strong ties never break), then addressed one of the leaders of the protest. Thirty minutes later, listening to her complaints, I found myself agreeing.

I agreed they had a right to be upset over the rising cost of tuition, but I was unnerved about them being in my office, among my personal belongings. I felt violated.

Surrounded by students playing cards and phoning others to join them, I felt a sudden jolt of nostalgia. Part of being a student is feeling part of a community. Whether by living in a residence hall or joining a protest, it comes down to fitting in. Being a graduate, those opportunities do not come often enough or as easily. That's not why I stayed.

I spent two hours walking from room to room. I felt like there was a party going on at my parents' house and It was my job to keep them from touching anything valuable.

"How would you feel if a bunch of loud, angry protesters stormed into your room, sat on your bed, used your phone and rummaged through your belongings, because they were unhappy about something you had no control over?"

Felice Cohen

The protesters left during the night, but I didn't find that out until later that day, after a restless night. How would you feel if a bunch of loud, angry protesters stormed into your room, sat on your bed, used your phone (one student had the nerve to ask me for my personal long distance code) and rummaged through your belongings, because they were unhappy about something you had no control over?

Before I left Friday afternoon, I pleaded with them not to break anything. Entering my office on Monday, I was surprised and relieved. Everything was pretty much how we'd left it. Except one thing.

A little, blue liquid bubble timer.

Before I had left I'd specifically hidden it in my desk drawer. It was the only thing I hid. The fact that people went through my drawers immediately canceled any support I had for their cause. How can I take their actions seriously when those actions caused distress?

When the protesters first arrived I told them of the unflattering press in '89 because of the flowers. "It just overshadowed the positive issues," They agreed.

"Our intentions are not to do destruction," they promised. Meanwhile, I was trying to keep them from using the computers.

They wonder why we focus on the negative. The truth is, when you exhibit unreasonable actions, the attention focuses on them. If you want to be treated as a leader, act like one.

A righteous protest, one I was willing to support, has now left me with a sour taste in my mouth.

However, someone left a valuable electronic appliance in my office. I don't consider this quid pro quo, but if the owner wants it back, the cost is a little, blue liquid bubble timer.

Letters to the Editor

Employees should support students

To the editor:

As a professional staff member who works closely with some of the students involved with Friday's demonstration, I want to express my dismay at the response of the Admissions staff printed in Tuesday's Collegian ["Admissions staff responds to protestors"].

The action by these students was clearly an act of desperation, brought on by the continued indifference of the University administration to the serious plight facing UMass students. After two months of meetings with administrators throughout the state, the students were faced with the unyielding insistence by the University to raise the cost of their education.

This insistence came from University administrators who make over $100,000 per year (plus perks) and continue to hire expensive bureaucrats and enjoy large expense accounts despite the budget cuts facing our campus. It's no wonder that these administrators could not appreciate how continued increases were going to push many of these and other students over the edge and out of school.

There is no more pressing danger facing this University than the continued restricting of access based on economic resources. For the Admissions staff to somehow equate this danger with the disruption of a work day or the ruffling of personal possessions says to me that they don't understand the severity of the crisis students face.

I applaud the efforts of these students. They are faced with either standing up for themselves or silently fading away along with the dreams and aspirations that brought them here. They have chosen to stand. The least staff can do is support them.

WMUA leadership defends station

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Martin Brown's column ["UMass needs student radio," Collegian, Feb. 14]. Although Mr. Brown's program was not renewed for the spring semester, WMUA remains, as our slogan says, "the student radio voice of the University."

WMUA is indeed supported by student fees. Each undergraduate pays approximately $5 per year for the station. However, it is untrue that the community does not contribute "dime one." Approximately one–quarter of our budget is raised from contributions from the community. This amount is significantly more than 10 cents.

More importantly, WMUA is firmly and primarily committed to student radio. This is reflected in our constitution, our programming, and our staff. WMUA employs over 17 students, all undergraduates. We employ no community members at all.

We encourage everyone to become part of WMUA, regardless of their ethnicity (even Polka). On WMUA, you can hear students playing blues, jazz, world, and folk music; doing news and sports broadcasting; conducting talk shows; and playing gospel music. It is this commitment to diversity that makes us as unique and well–respected as we are.

Our criteria for assigning shows is clear and consistent. UMass students have priority over non–students. The program director also considers the strength of each application, as well as an individual's commitment to WMUA, as measured by their work here.

At WMUA, students and community alike work together doing the endless behind–the–scene tasks that make a complex organization like ours run.

Mr. Brown is upset at not getting a radio show, yet the sympathy we are to feel for him is lost in his inaccuracies and obvious lack of knowledge of how WMUA is run.

Library should honor W.E.B. Du Bois

A proposal was put forth earlier this academic year to name the library of the University of Massachusetts after W.E.B. Du Bois. The structure dominates the central quadrangle of the sprawling campus and is one of the tallest libraries in the world. Erected in the 1970s, the building is home to the collected works and personal papers of the great African–American scholar, but has never been formally named.

That the proposal has given rise to controversy is

"If this is done, the University will have taken a signifigant step toward the healing of the scars of recent racial conflict within its community" hardly surprising. Du Bois was commonly near the center of controversy throughout most of his extraordinary life, which spanned nearly a century, from the early years of Post–Civil War reconstruction until the late eve of the 1963 Washington civil rights march.

Such is the inevitable character of a life featuring singularly brilliant and prolific scholarship in the tireless service of the promotion of racial civil equality and social justice. The current controversy, reflecting as it does the nature of Du Bois' life and revealing as it does the racial and economic conflicts still searing the heart of our society, confirms, In my view, the importance of naming this building after this man.

Born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts in 1868, Du Bois was a correspondent for several respected journals even before graduating as valedictorian of his high school class.

He attended Fisk University and then Harvard, receiving the B.A. from both cum laude. He was awarded the Ph.D. from Harvard in 1896, an extraordinary achievement given the more blatant prejudice of that era. Harvard University Press published his dissertation, "The suppression of the African Slave trade."

While teaching at the University of Pennsylvania during 1897–97, he published "The Philadelphia Negro," which confirmed his reputation as one of the foremost urban sociologists of that era. He continued in academia teaching history and economics at

Atlanta University, publishing perhaps his most famous work, "Souls of Black Folks," in 1903.

He was founder of the Niagara Movement and then, in 1909, among the founders of the NAACP. He served that organization over the next 25 years in many capacities, including director of research and editor of "The Crisis," Its monthly magazine. He simultaneously published far too many historically important and highly regarded books to list in this space. His was the most articulate and effective voice championing the cause of uncompromised equality among the races in a complex and tenaciously engaged public debate. This generated a major part of the carefully reasoned moral underlayment for the Civil Rights Movement.

Throughout the 1930s and '40s, he continued his academic and activist involvement. He headed the Department of Sociology at Atlanta University, chaired the Peace Information Center and attended the founding conference of the United Nations as representative of the NAACP.

He was accused by the United States government of subversive activity, was exonerated of these charges, and ultimately left to live in Africa for the remainder of his life, never ceasing his research or writing until the end. His example and achievement were formative inspirations for Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, and virtually all activists for justice and civil equality who arose after him. As Dr. King said in 1968, "It is time to cease muting the fact that Dr. Du Bois was a genius."

After his death it was arranged that the great public university of the state of his birth should be the permanent repository of his papers, and this vast collection is now housed in the unnamed UMass library. There was avid competition from Harvard and others of this privilege, but now Du Bois scholars from around the world come to Amherst to make use of this centerpiece of African– American historical scholarship.

Let us resolve the question recently raised by Daniel Melly, UMass vice chancellor for university advancement, as to whether or not the extent of the UMass collection merits consideration of the Du Bois memorial. Du Bois' entire personal collection of work is here, with any occasional materials in the libraries of other institutions of incomparably lesser importance.

But now we read that the executive committee of the UMass Board of Trustees has just endorsed a proposal that reserves the naming of buildings as an honor to be awarded exclusively to financial donors. Let us hope this timing is not deliberate in response to the Du Bois proposal, but only terribly unfortunate.

The recommendation to memorialize Du Bois must be evaluated separately from this lately arising fundraising proposal. There is reason to be optimistic that if the decision to name the library after Du Bois is first confirmed, donations to reward the university for taking this laudable action can be successfully solicited. But the decision to ought to be reached on the merits his immense achievements and the enormity of his esteem, particularly among the scholars of the African–American scholars who have been slighted for so long.

If this is done, the University will have taken a significant step toward the healing of the scars of recent racial conflict within its community. It will have enhanced its deserved reputation as a center of progressive scholarship regarding the African–American experience. And there is a realistic likelihood that it will be able to parlay these accomplishments into the financial benefit it seeks to produce from the naming of buildings.

If this is not done, or at least fairly and sympathetically evaluated, and if the name of the library should instead go to the highest bidder, I have grave concern for the already tarnished reputation of this University as a center of equality and diversity. I would love to see the unified University community productively energized around the memorializing of this great man, rather than polarized in the process of contending an alternative decision empty of any educationally inspiring merit other than financial accruement.

Tonight at 5 p.m., Johnathan Klate, the host of WTTT's weekly "Amherst Airways" (1430 AM), will be hosting the third in a four–part series on the life of W.E.B. Du Bois. Tonight's guests will include a panel of college and high school students who will deliver readings and discussion of Du Bois' writings.

Mr. Klate says he put the series together to highlight the achievements of African–Americans during February, which is Black History Month.

This year, Klate has decided to focus on the achievements of W.E.B. Du Bois in order to "bring about a greater awareness of his significance as a scholar and activist for racial equality and social justice."

Klate also expressed his hope that the series would also highlight the importance of Du Bois' papers, which are permanently housed in the University Library as part of its special archives collection.

So far, guests on the series have included David G. Du Bois, stepson of Du Bois and visiting faculty at the university, and Dr. Randolph Bromery, the former UMass chancellor who succeeded in purchasing the papers for the university nearly 20 years ago.

The investment has paid off tremendously. David Levering Lewis, a professor at Cornell University, has recently published a biography of Du Bois in which the Du Bois papers served as the main source of his research.

On next week's show, a taped interview between Mr. Klate and Mr. Lewis will be broadcast during the final installment of the series on February 23, Du Bois' birthday.

Caribbean food now in Amherst

By MONICA JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

This past January, three UMass graduates opened a Caribbean restaurant here in Amherst. Garfield Vaughn, Evon Walters, and Mellisa Neary are the founders of a family operated restaurant called Caribbean Cravings.

The three got the idea to start their own business after participating in the annual international food fair held last spring in the Campus Center Auditorium.

At the food fair, they sold Jamaican–style beef patties in addition to other varieties which included Broccoli and cheese, chicken, vegetable and spinach and cheese.

The response was so overwhelming that they decided to hand cut surveys with the patties, asking what products would be the best sellers, and if they wanted to see this food sold in the area. They decided to stay in Amherst, because they were familiar with the area and attending school there.

Located at 61 Main Street, Caribbean Cravings has become a favorite of the locals in the three weeks since it opened. Surprisingly, most of the customers are not college students, but local townsfolk who make up approximately 80 percent of its business. The restaurant is catching on fast, and if stop by around midday, you will see people having business lunchings and after the local bars and clubs close on the weekend and can find many students stopping by for a midnight snack.

Felicia Cousins, a native of Jamaica, is absolutely thrilled that the restaurant has opened.

"It's like a dream come true," said Cousins. "I never imagined that I would actually get chance to eat Jamaican food in Amherst!"

Business partner Garfield Vaughn hopes the restaurant various ethnic communities in a relaxed setting.

"We wanted a place where West Indian, African–American, and Caribbean people could relax and have food that they are familiar with," he said.

He also gave some good advice on starting a business.

"Don't give up, a lot of work has to be done. It's not easy at all." Vaughn also said to "educate yourself and speak to people who done it before."

In the near future, the restaurant will begin offering cooked foods and traditional Jamaican recipes such as: rice and beans, jerked chicken, jerked pork, curry chicken, etc. They will also start delivery service, so get your wallets and taste buds ready.

Caribbean Cravings is now open for business from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. Thursday through Saturday, and Sunday Noon to 5 p.m.

Us3 brings unique blend of hip–hop and jazz to Pearl Street

By JONATHAN RATCLIFF
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight the Valley gets a chance to experience live an artful blending of classic jazz cuts and '90s hip–hop rap via a performance by Us3 at Northampton's Pearl Street Nightclub. The show is part of an aggressive six–week, 40– city tour the band is busy with.

Hip–hop, until recently, has relied largely on mixing in samples from '70s R&B. Us3 takes their music a step closer to the roots of it all by utilizing tasteful segments of jazz. Us3 draws samples form the likes of Herbie Hancock, Art Blakely and Thelonius Monk, among others.

"Jazz and hip–hop have so much in common," said Mel Simpson, the band's co–producer. "Rap has its roots in scat singing, which is a jazz form. The rhythms of rap blend so well with the rhythms of jazz," Simpson said.

Other musical outfits such as Guru's Jazzmatazz, Digable Planets and Gang Starr, to name a few, have attempted this fusion of musical styles, but none with the level of success that Us3 has achieved.

This is undoubtedly due in part to the resources that Us3 had in the making of their debut album, "Hand on the Torch." The band had the entire catalogue of the Blue Note archives at its disposal. Blue Note (for you jazz laymen) has become the jazz recording label standard in its 54 years of existence.

"We're fierce jazz fans," Simpson stated. "Jazz purists act like we have no love or respect for jazz. On the contrary, we love it and know it very, very well. The difference between us and the purists is that we don't think jazz should be protected and kept in a jar on the shelf. We like to see it evolve and blend with other musical forms."

And blend it does. The first single from the album, "Cantaloop" utilizes jazz man Herbie Hancock's "Cantaloupe Island" (Herbie himself approves) as a base for Brooklyn rapper Rahsaan's loose, fluid rapping. Other tracks from the album feature rapping from Rahsaan's longtime partner Kobie Powell, and also Jamaican born Tukka Yoot.

Us3 seeks not to exploit the jazz it uses: the band combines it with its own live instrumentalists (six of them), and the very style in which the sampling is done shows respect for the originals.

"I try to retain the original musicality of the jazz," said Simpson. "I don't like to chop things up . . . we use good chunks of jazz, not snatches."

This degree of respect for the jazz classics landed Us3 a spot on Blue Notes label, instead of, well, in a courtroom. Us3 had sampled some of Blue Note's material without clearance on earlier releases in Britain. Instead of suing, the label signed them, realizing the potential present in the outfit.

Us3 will play a special 7 p.m. show at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton tonight. Call 586–7771 for show and ticket information.

Understanding Eating Disorders:
Strategies for Friends and Family
Wednesday - February 16
6:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m.
Campus Center - Room 802

I think my roommate has an eating disorder. How can I be sure? What should I do?

I think my sister is anorexic and she isn't getting any help. How can I convince her to see a professional? Who should I suggest...Where should she go?

I'm concerned about my friend who has bulimia. She says it's under control, but I don't think it is. I'm really afraid...What can I do to help?

If you're concerned about someone who you know or suspect is struggling with an eating disorder, come to this informal workshop to explore how you can help and cope with these issues.

The Far Side — By Gary Larson

This time, his practical jokes had gone too far, and Welly was finally booted off the hill.

Your Horoscope
By Joann Stone

ARIES (March 21–April 19): You need to make a completely realistic assessment of your financial position. Changing priorities at work require fresh strategy.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Innovative ideas — yours or someone else's — will introduce more fun into your routine. An original concept is really quite practical. Roundabout methods work best when dealing with opinionated people.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): All unusual ideas should be closely examined. Otherwise, you might dismiss a proposal that has real potential! Welcome an opportunity to use someone else's resources, but beware of secret dealings in the night.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): An opportune time to invent, travel or explore. Use your imagination to visualize an ideal state of affairs, then work to bring it about.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): An unexpected condition requires prompt attention. Proceed with counseling, scheduling and organizing efforts. Be careful when handling financial matters this afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Having a traveling companion is not conducive to creative thought. Go it alone. Browse for books or videos. Someone flatters you. Refuse to become involved in a get-rich-quick scheme.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A good day for exploratory activities. Probe for truth. A business liaison holds interesting possibilities. Latch on to anything with a profit potential. Dress comfortably.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): You may find someone a bit unpredictable from time to time. Learn to live with it! Self-reliance is the name of the game. Polish your skills. Pursue a favorite hobby evenings or weekends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Your ability to see more than one side of an issue brings new financial rewards. Gravitate to people who love you for who you are, not for what you can do for them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): A chance encounter may clue you in to what is really going on. Pay attention to your personal needs, not to what other people have accomplished. Overseas business interests could lead to a windfall.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Something exciting happens today. A public relations coup puts you in an enviable position. The next few days may be critical. Guard against making a misstep.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): There could be a mystery surrounding someone you meet for the first time. Do not be taken in by a deceptive financial proposition. Guard your valuables. Put the finishing touches on an important project.

No. 10 Minutemen shocked

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The No. 10–ranked Massachusetts Minutemen travelled to Philadelphia last night and the response was filled with anything but brotherly love. The St. Joseph's Hawks climbed out of their Atlantic 10 basement window and shocked UMass 81–80 on swingman Kevin Connor's free throw with :0.2 seconds remaining in the game.

This wasn't supposed to happen. Not this week anyway.

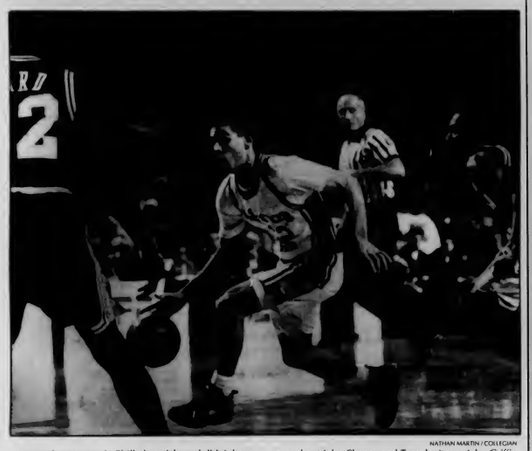
The Minutemen (19–5, 10–1 A–10) were expected to have a tough matchup in Philly next Thursday when they faced the No. 13–ranked Temple Owls at McGonigle Hall in a rematch of Sunday's thrilling 56–55 UMass victory over the Owls in Amherst.

The excitement of next Thulsday's matchup was only intensified with the postgame verbal (and nearly physical) attack on UMass coach John Calipari by Temple coach John Chaney.

But in snuck St. Joseph's (11–11, 3–9 A–10) with the upset.

It was a wild and woolly finish at the raucous, sold–out Alumni Memorial Hall. With 1:52 remaining, it looked as though St. Joseph's was on top for good when they took an 80–75 lead on forward Carlin Warley's layup.

But the Minutemen, to their cerdit, battied back. Junior guard Mike Williams drained a 3–pointer from the left wing to cut the Hawk advantage to 80–78 and then tied it with 31.2 seconds left when he stripped St. Joe's guard Rap Curry (19 points, eight assists) and scored the transition layup.



That set the scene for the Hawks' final possession as Curry pounded the ball into the floor guarded closely by UMass' Williams. Curry juked past Williams but his lunging shot in the lane was no good. The ball caromed loose and Connors picked it up and was fouled by UMass center Marcus Camby. The final buzzer sounded, but after reviewing the television tapes, the officials put :0.2 seconds on the board.

That would not matter, however, as Connors (16 points) calmly hit the first free throw and then intentionally missed the second. The rebound went to UMass guard Derek Kellogg, who had no time to do anything but attempt an impossible football throw the length of the court. The Hawks had the victory.

In the first half, the Minutemen came out like they have on numerous occasions this year: flat. When UMass tried to put on some full–court pressure, the Hawks not only broke the press, but they attacked it, getting good 3–on–1 and 3–on– 2 opportunities to either score gimme layups or draw personal fouls. Camby fell victim to the Hawk aggressiveness, picking up three quick personal fouls.

The Hawks held a 46–40 lead at the half shooting 53.8 percent fromn the floor. Calipari was not pleased with his team's play in the first half.

The second half was a see–saw battle with UMass either pounding the ball inside to forward Lou Roe (22 points, eight rebounds) and Camby (15 points, four blocks) or getting clutch 3–pointsers from freshman guard Carmelo Travieso (nine points, 3 for 3 from three–point land). The Hawk defencse, which constantly switched from man–to man to zone, let UMass bomb from outside; the Minutemen were 8 for 22 from trey land.

Massachusetts was in Philly last night and didn't have to worry about John Chaney and Temple. It was John Griffin and St. Joseph's on the court against the Minutemen.

Three-point goals. St. Joseph's 3-8 (Curry 2-3, Meyers 1-2, Domani 0-3), Massachusetts 8-22 (Travieso 3-3, Williams 3-9, Kellogg 2-5, Roe 0-2, Padilla 0-3). Fouled out: None. Rebounds: St. Joseph's 40 (Warley 10), Massachusetts 34 (Roe 8). Assists: St. Joseph's 16 (Curry 8), Massachusetts 16 (Kellogg 7).

Player of the Game

St. Joseph's Rap Curry

Curry was unquestionably the reason the Hawks upset Massachusetts. He was unstoppable from the floor and in dishing out to his teammates, especially game high scorer Carlin Warley.

Why St. Joseph's won

The Hawks shot 50 percent from the field, and played tenacious man-to-man and zone defense on UMass. A step quicker, St. Joseph's induced the Minutemen into 28 fouls in the contest. UMass obviously came out sluggish after Sunday's win over Temple.

Hockey wins on the road

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts hockey team came up big in one of the toughest places to play in New England, beating St. Anselm's 5–3 in Manchester, New Hampshire.

St Anselm's came into the game ranked No. 3 in Division II, unbeaten in their last eleven games and undefeated at home, but the Hawks were overmatched by an inspired Minuteman squad.

St Anselm's got on the board early as Sean O'Connell beat UMass goalie David Kilduff just over two minutes into the game.

The Minutemen stormed back, scoring three unanswered goals to take a 3–1 lead at the end of the first period. But the Hawks refused to give in, as they knotted the score at three with two goals in 1:44 seconds.

With less than three minutes remaining in the second period, Minuteman Tom Perry collected a Mike Evans pass and shot it past Hawk goalie John Herrick for what proved to be the game winner.

The third period belonged to UMass. Armand Latulippe scored a beauty to add some insurance as the Minutemen rolled to their 18th victory.

"Armand Latulippe scored a great goal for us to really cement the game," said Minuteman Coach Joe Mallen.

Kilduff played well amassing 16 saves, including some beauties in the final period.

"David played a very steady game for us," said Mallen. "He came up with some big saves in the third period."

The Minutemen showed no signs of rust after a nine day layoff, dominating throughout.

"We had an outstanding game performance tonight," said Malien. "We played the body better than they did and our goaltending was better tonight."

The win improves the Minutemen to 18–8, just one victory shy of tying the best–ever single season total by a Minuteman squad. The Hawks fall to 13–4–3, as they prepare for postseason.

"St Anselm's is a good team. They're very quick and mobile," said Mallen. "The have a chance to do well in the Division ii playoffs."

The Minutemen return to the Mullins Center this Saturday for a 2 p.m. matinee with Sacred Heart.

Volleyball signs recruits for next season

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

After one season back from a three–year layoff, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team has already made its presence known, signing three recruits for the 1994–95 season.

The three signees include two Californians and one local star. They are Lesley Nolan and Leigh Readey from Mission Viejo and Irvine, California, respectively, and also local product Michelle Paciorek from Sunderland. UMass Coach Bonnie Kenny said she is very pleased and excited about the quality that the three bring to UMass.

"I am ecstatic about the quality of student–athletes that have committed to the University of Massachusetts," said Coach Kenny. "Nolan and Readey bring great experience that will make an immediate impact with our program. Paciorek will be a great 'local' addition to UMass. She is a quality student and athlete with tremendous potential."

Noian is a 5–foot–11–inch middle blocker/outside hitter who played for Doris Canfield at Santa Margarita High School. In her three seasons at Santa Margarita, she was a captain and a Sea View All–League first–team selection.

Paciorek played four seasons of volleyball at Frontier Regional High School. She is a 6–foot setter/middle blocker and she led Frontier Regional to two consecutive Western Mass. Championships in 1991 and 1992. She captained the 1993 Frontier Regional team and also the 1993 Western Mass. Bay State and Junior Olympic teams. She was named to the All–Western Mass. first–team in 1992.

Readey has been a three–year varsity performer for Mark Mednick at Irvine High School. She is 6–foot–1–inch and a middle blocker/outside hitter. She was selected to the Sea View All–League second team in 1992.

Both Nolan and Readey play together with the Mission Valley Volleyball Club which won the Los Angeles Christmas Tournament and the Phoenix Fiesta Classic. Kenny said she feels that this experience will help immensely when they make the jump to the College level.

"Right now, they [Nolan and Readey] are on the best club team in the country," said Kenny. "Their elite level of playing experience on the Mission Valley Junior Olympic team will prove to be an invaluable asset in the fall."

Paciorek plays juniors with a club out of Greenfield. This club is not on a national level like Mission Valley, but it still will help Paciorek get ready for her first year of College Ball, Kenny said.

"She [Paciorek] has the potential to be just as good as them [Nolan and Readey], it's just going to take her a little longer," Kenny said.

All three are honor roll students who stress academics before athletics, according to Kenny.

"All three of them are really good kids, on their visits they blended in very well with the team," said Kenny. "They have a nice sense of priorities as far as being a student before they are an athlete."

Another new player for the Minutewomen next year will be Giza Rivera–Perez, from Puerto Rico, who is already a student there at UMass. She was a Proposition 48 student last year.

"She's [Rivera–Perez] going to be a good player too," Kenny said.

With the addition of the new players, UMass will have added depth which it did not have all last season when only eight played.

AP voters are playing God

Holding Court SCAN — Sean P. Hayden on NCAA Basketball

This week's edition of Holding Court is dedicated to this weekly update of Who's Who among the collegiate basketball powers of the land — the Associated Press Top 25 poll.

The way I see it, any sport that has a postseason tournament to officially decide just exactly who is King of The Hill does not need a weekly memo from a group of writers who can never seem to agree on anything. (Don't even get me started about the AP football poll.)

A hoop season like the one we are currently in the middle of is all the more proof that we should trash the AP poll. Here we are in mid–February and we have already had 37 different No. 1 teams (according to the AP). Just kidding, there have only been six.

Why this preoccupation with having to know exactly who the No. 1 team is? All that will take care of itself come early April. Until then, the writers should just sit back, collect some free meals and watch some decent games — you know, all the things they do best.

Why vote?

The top–ranked team in the final AP poll hardly ever wins the national championship, so just how smart can these voters be anyway? (Just don't get me started about the AP football poll.)

In fact, in 1988, Kansas, who wasn't even ranked in the AP Top 25 in the final poll, won the national championship by defeating Oklahoma, a team the AP had the wisdom to designate Top Dog at one point during the '88 campaign.

Who does the AP Top 25 benefit?

Certainly not the teams that are voted in. Coaches of highly ranked teams will tell you unequivocally that they don't care about the No. 1 ranking. The only thing it can do is hurt them by serving as a rallying cry for its next opponent. "We beat one of the 43 teams the AP had ranked No. 1 this season!"

Witness this season.

Since the University of Massachusetts defeated all– powerful and indestructible (according to the AP) North Carolina Nov. 24, only one team has held the No. 1 position in the AP poll for more than a week — Arkansas, which holds the No. 1 spot in this week's AP carousel.

Should these writers even be allowed to vote?

Most of these guys shouldn't even be allowed to drive a car. I mean, seriously, where do you get off voting Evansville a Top 25 team? And there were three of you this week.

And don't tell me these guys aren't biased towards certain teams. (And don't even get me started about the AP football poll.) Carolina was No. 1 and lost at home to unranked Georgia Tech after being ahead by more than 15 points in the first half. They fell to No. 2. Fine.

No. 2 Duke lost on the road to unranked Wake Forest and fell four spots to No. 6. Not so fine.

By the way, Tech is No. 25 this week, the Forest No. 26.

The only reason for a Top 25 poll is the voters themselves. It gives them a tool by which to play God and feel omnipotent and I think we should get rid of it, but first . . .

Let's vote on it.

Chaney issues public apology

By DINAH WISENBERG BRIN
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Temple coach John Chaney says his wife and daughter aren't speaking with him because of his outburst at Massachusetts coach John Calipari.

At a news conference yesterday, Chaney again apologized for his threat to kill Calipari and told how his family responded to his tirade. His wife, Jeanne, has been on vacation with friends since Sunday, and his daughter, Pamela Clark, who lives in the Boston area, attended the Massachusetts game.

"My wife isn't talking to me," Chaney told the Associated Press by telephone. "My daughter called me last night to say she's not talking to me anymore," the coach said. He said Mrs. Chaney — in a message relayed through their daughter — said the same thing.

Chaney wanted to make clear, though, that Mrs. Chaney plans to return home today.

"My wife has not left me," he said.

After Temple lost S6-S5 at UMass on Sunday, Chaney barged into Calipari's news conference, rushed the podium and threatened Calipari. He was restrained by Massachusetts players.

Chaney was suspended by Temple for last night's 65–S6 victory at St. Bonaventure — the first game he has missed as coach of the Owls. The Atlantic 10 Conference on Tuesday let Temple's one-game suspension stand, though commissioner Ron Bertovich said Chaney would face more severe sanctions if he loses control again.

"I apologize to coach John Calipari, the students, fans and supporters of both Tempie University and the University of Massachusetts, all young persons and all others who witnessed all or part of this incident," Chaney, his eyes red and his voice choking, said at his news conference. "I let you down. ... I fully accept the actions that the university has taken and I feel they are deserved — well deserved."

He took no questions after his brief statement.

Massachusetts officials said Chaney's originai apology Monday fell short because it didn't mention Calipari by name. They liked yesterday's offering better.

"Coach Calipari has certainly accepted the apology and has attempted to call coach Chaney this afternoon," Massachusetts spokesman Bill Strickland said.

Calipari released the following statement last night: "I recognize that he took a step forward in doing this, and i called him today to let him know I appreciated it (a message was left with his secretary)," Calipari said.

"Next week the two best teams in the Atlantic 10 will be playing. That is what the focus should be, and I expect another great college basketball game."

Janitor accused by student

Employee charged with indecent assault and battery

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts janitor has been charged with indecent assault and battery.

Edward C. Stafford Jr., 38, of 6 Chesterfield Drive, Amherst, was arrested Monday at 8:30 a.m., accused of touching a student's breast in the Melville Residence Hall in the second–floor bathroom.

Police were called immediately to the dormitory and were told of the incident. A description was then given by the assaulted woman of what the man looked like.

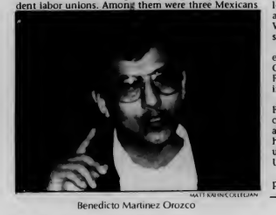
The description was matched to Stafford and police said they found him in a first–floor janitorial closet.

Stafford was arraigned in Northampton District Court Wednesday. According to court documents, he admitted to grabbing the student's breasts. Yet, in court, he pleaded innocent to the charges against him.

Stafford was ordered by the court to stay away from the woman. Chika Nnamani, executive director of Housing Services, said Stafford will be removed from working in Melville — an all female dormitory — for now.

Edward also said Stafford is not being dismissed from working at the University. Both Housing Services and the UMass Police Department are investigating the incident before any major decisions are made.

"There are a range of options we have to look at. They can be suspension to dismissal. We have to get the specifics. Housing will make a decision when the incident is proven," Nnamani said.



Housing is now investigating the whole incident as well as Stafford's job history. They are hoping to reach a decision by next week.

In response to the occurrence, on Feb. 22, Lisa Curtis, a Resident Assistant in Melville, said there will be a self– defense workshop only for those students who live in the building.

NAFTA ignores workers

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

Within days after NAFTA was approved by Congress, General Electric and Honeywell fired Mexican workers for organizing or joining independent labor unions. Among them were three Mexicans who spoke in a seminar Tuesday night at the Campus Center as a part of a ten–day tour in the United States.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Benedicto Martinez Orozco

The two workers, Fernando Castro and Ofelia Medrano Sanchez, fired from G.E. and Honeywell, respectively, and Benedicto Martinez Orozco, a top leader of an independent union, spoke about hazardous working conditions and low wages in Mexico. When workers tried to join unions to improve their situations, they were fired.

"NAFTA didn't contemplate the most basic of workers' rights, the freedom to organize," according to Orozco, head of the F.A.T., or the Mexican Workers' Front. Orozco, Castro and Sanchez spoke through an interpreter in Spanish.

The tour, which is sponsored by the United Electrical Workers (U.E.), the Teamsters and local community unions, is an effort to educate Americans about the conditions of Mexican workers. The unions have teamed up with the Mexican independent unions to campaign protests directly aimed at the U.S. corporations.

Castro said his work as a technician in a G.E. motor plant in Juarez included handling chemical waste.

Media 'misinformation' targeted by SGA

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Government Association voted 32–10 to condemn the "misinformation" of campus media at the SGA meeting last night.

The motion was brought up because of an article printed in The Minuteman last December that said homosexuality is the principle cause of AIDS–related deaths.

The article stated that, "homosexuals...are killing each other off through their deviant sexual practices," and that "condemnation of the sick and perverted lifestyle of homosexuality by every American and an adoption of a Christian lifestyle will be the only way to defeat the virus."

> "AIDS is a world health epidemic, and according to the [United Nations] World Health Organization, it is mostly a heterosexual disease."
> — SGA Attorney General Matthew Malone

Minuteman Editor in Chief Dan Flynn asserted AIDS is a gay disease and that the article was rooted in facts. The article was written by Minuteman staff member Barney Studds.

"The article was basically a presentation of the facts," Flynn said. "A 1993 study by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta showed 78 percent of the people who contracted the AIDS virus in America last year were homosexual men. AIDS is still primarily a gay disease. It's a fact. You can't debate that."

Flynn also said when the author spoke of a "Christian" lifestyle, he was referring to a "moral" way of life and not a specific religion.

Senator Mirran Raphaely questioned the validity of Flynn's statistics. She said the AIDS virus is actually contracted mostly by heterosexual women.

"Mr. Flynn didn't come with anything to prove his information, he came with word of mouth," Raphaely

Job–seeking students hit fair hoping for an interview

JESSICA TAVERNA/COLLEGIAN

Many a student visited the Career Fair in the CCA looking for a good job, hoping the years of college will pay off.

By JESSICA TAVERNA
Collegian Staff

Students inundated in a flood of suits and ties at yesterday's Co–op Job Fair were approaching tables in an attempt to be recruited by a wide array of companies and organizations.

"We're excited about recruiting through the center, because we feel that the students involved with the center have a sense of direction in terms of being prepared with resumes and questions, and preparing themselves in a professional manner," UMass alum and representative from the Chubb insurance Company Carl Grygiel said. "For such a big school, this is the most well–prepared group of undergrads that I've seen."

Students had the opportunity to speak with representatives and prospective employers and hand out their resumes. Some students received same–day interviews, but most were subject to the "waiting game" in anticipation of a phone call.

"As far as companies go, we've had record attendance this year," Assistant Director of the Mather Career Center Ginger Goldsbury said. "Seventy–nine organizations signed and 67 showed up."

Among the business corporations and governmental agencies, were an abundance of non–profit organizations concerned with social service–type issues, Goldsbury said.

"Coming here is a good way to be seen and heard, and it makes it much easier to get an interview," senior mechanical engineering major Al Rabinovich said. "Unfortunately, not many companies in my field are hiring here today. To improve, they should bring in more companies."

The Mather Career Center ran the event in hopes of opening up job opportunities for students, offering them exposure to the professional business world, promoting their services to the industry and keeping up a good repoire with the organizations involved, Goldsbury said.

Work–place drug testing protested at the Job Fair

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition peacefuliy protested work–place drug testing outside the Co–op Job Fair held in the Campus Center Auditorium yesterday.

About 10 members of the Coalition targeted certain companies and small businesses that were recruiting and passed out flyers and pamphlets produced by the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition and from the "Green Panthers," a group based in Washington D.C. along with articles from The Boston Globe on the inefficiencies of drug testing.

The protest by Cannabis Reform Coalition was based on the grounds of right to privacy and discrimination by certain companies that require drug testing. According to the literature passed out, drug testing is a violation of the Fourth Amendment right prohibiting unreasonable searches.

In a flyer passed out by the Coalition, U.S. companies spend about 1.2 billion a year on drug testing for employees and job applicants. although a federal panel found little evidence that efforts deter drug use of improve performance.

According to the Coalition, students circulated the fair with plastic cups full of liquid labeled "urine" and targeted companies such as The Boston Globe, GTE, IBM, United Parcel Service and American Military Groups as ones that engage in mandatory drug testing. The Coalition also handed out pamphlets on how to beat drug tests.

"We weren't allowed to picket or have demonstration inside the building because of Massachusetts law," said Aaron Wilson, the President of UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition. "We educated those attending the job fair on uri-

Meditation used to ease the mind

By JON MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

The basic idea of meditation and yoga is to withdraw within the mind, find purpose, and let go of bad habits and weaknesses. Finding and strengthening the positive aspects of the mind is also emphasized.

A presentation on yoga and the meditation of the mind was given by Dada Moksesh, a monk from the Ananda Marga organization, on Monday in the Student Union Ballroom.

"The main problem in today's society is that the dissociation between psychological conditioning and real truth within builds up a wall in the mind," said Moksesh.

According to Moksesh, meditation used to achieve harmony would end the need for walls, fences and weapons.

The audience was informed of effective and inexpensive medical remedies that are being withheld because of medical business interests.

"We live in a society so greedy that science is being withheld for commercial interests. Spreading of awareness would end the wasting of time, effort, and money for war."

Ananda Marga, founded in 1955, is an organization which sends out thousands of monks on missions to aid mental healing all over the globe. The organization strives to get people to let go of greed and use the mind to focus on positive goals that benefit all of humanity.

The organization's founder combined forms of yoga to involve the body and the mind in helping society.

Moksesh has spent the past 13 years teaching and aiding students in various countries. He teaches meditation and yoga and promotes social service activities.

Meditation increases intuition, and can be related to Native American vision quests, according to Moksesh.

Future sessions will be held on Mondays in the Student Union building.

Police Log

Compiled by Geri Sahn from University reports

Recent incidents recorded by the University's Department of Public Safety from Feb. 4 to Feb. 16.

FAMILY OFFENSES, DOMESTIC

On Feb. 10, police were called to resolve a dispute which took place between roommates in Dickinson dormitory.

An individual reported a confrontation with a former boyfriend, on Feb. 7, in Greenough dormitory. Police assistance was requested.

LARCENCY

In Fernald Hall, on Feb. 8, staff in the Entomology department reported a laser printer was stolen from a classroom. Value $300.

Staff reported that three wall telephones were stolen from their respective clinics at the University Health Services on Feb. 9. Value $200.

On Feb. 4, an individual from McNamara dormitory reported that his mail was opened and a gift certificate had been stolen. Value $100.

An individual from Field dormitory reported on Feb. 4 that three checks were stolen from his room. His bank verified the three checks were cashed at local business establishments.

On Feb. 14, staff reported that a Hewlett Packard "Think Jet" printer and printer cable was stolen from a room in the basement level. Value $510.

In the James dormitory, on Feb. 10, two vending machines were damaged and candy was stolen from the machines. Value $1,000.

VANDALISM

Grafiti on a bathroom stall has specific reference to an individual in the Dwight dormitory on Feb. 8.

Staff from the Campus Center reported a video game in the Coffee Shop was damaged on Feb. 14.

Brendan A. Leonard, 18, of 10 Lenox Street Worcester, Ma., was arrested for allegedly causing damage to the PVTA bus stop.

DISTURBANCE

On Feb. 15, police were called to the Campus Center when a dispute occurred between two individuals over the smoking policy.

ACCIDENT - PERSONAL INJURY

On Governors Drive Feb. 14, a vehicle operated by John Pliska of 65 Chumura Rd., Hadley, lost a front wheel due to a bearing failure. The wheel rolled across the road striking the left side of a passing vehicle. After the accident, Pliska slipped on the Ice, striking his face on the wheel and tire. His injury required stitches. There were no citations.

Correction

"Crossing Borders: African-American and Jewish American Lesbian and Gay Poetry and Prose in Performance" will be performed Feb. 23, in Campus Center Room 811. It was listed incorrectly in yesterday's "Black History Month Events Calendar."

Also in yesterday's Collegian, the page one photograph of Yossi Olmert was taken by Nathan Martin. The men's basketball photo on page eight was taken by Aram Comjean. Both photos were incorrectly credited.

nalysis in the work force."

According to Wilson, the Coalition is concerned with companies who rigorously use urinalysis even when, "scientific evidence says that testing does not work."

Wilson said mandatory procedure of most drug testing discriminates against marijuana users. According to him, most illegal "hard" drugs and legal drugs like alcohol stay in the body for only a few days after consumption while marijuana stays in the body for up to 30 days.

"Even in illegal drugs, marijuana users are singled out and discriminated against," said Wilson. "This wasn't against Mather Career Center. We didn't want to make their lives difficult."

Last spring, the Cannabis Reform Coalition passed a ballot initiative in which students voted to "legalize marijuana" in a non-binding student referendum. Wilson said there might be another "peaceful protest" at the job fair today.

said. "I am going to bring information [about AIDS] to the meeting a week from today, and anyone who cares about informing themselves and not basing themselves in bigoted notions should read that information."

SGA Attorney General Matthew Malone said AIDS is a world-wide health crisis, not a political issue. Malone is also the political chair of the LBGA.

"AIDS is a world health epidemic, and according to the [United Nations] World Health Organization, it is mostly a heterosexual disease," Malone said. "The only reason why it is a political issue is that conservatives and reactionaries like Mr. Flynn choose to make it so.

"Mr. Flynn cares more about what I do in my bedroom than I do," Malone said.

Admissions: protest du jour

Takeovers are becoming a novelty at this school. In the five semesters I've been here, they have popped up all over the place. And then there was last Friday.

The SGA took over the Admissions building. Yay. When I first heard there was going to be a takeover, I had no reaction — I didn't even bat an eyelash. Then I heard when and where it was taking place... let's just say I laughed.

Arthur Stapleton Jr.
Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Once you get into this school, do you ever enter the Admissions building again? Seriously. Then again, many people never need to go there in the first place.

It is in the middle of nowhere. Secondly, a Friday morning amidst another snow storm? Talk about poor planning. The only thing I liked was climbing the fire escape to the third floor in order to get in. it reminded me of John Maclane [Bruce Willis] in Die Hard.

Matt Pavesi, the undergraduate student speaker, is a good guy. And from my short–term conversations with SGA President David Nuñez, he is as well. But when i heard Nuñez discussing whether or not the press should be allowed in the meeting with Chancellor David K. Scott, I once again laughed. He contemplated, along with other SGA members who were present, kicking the members of the media out. Huh?

Let me get this straight — you want coverage. You need leverage. What is a takeover without the media present? I know the point was to get the chancellor to listen, but why not make it more interesting and take over his house?

Wait a minute, please don't go to the Hill and bother the man. That's not a solution. Besides, he caved in yet again and agreed to the demands when they took over the Admissions building anyway.

Then they say the takeover stayed within the University guidelines. Excuse me? You disrupted the daily business of the building and the people that work there. A friend of mine tried to get the number for Admissions late Friday afternoon through student information. The operator asked, "And why do you want that? The building's closed."

Of course, he didn't get the number, so he responded, "My sister liked UMass and wanted information, but, forget about it now."

Sorry, guys, but the Admissions building was no Nakatomi Plaza. Yippee cay–ay.

* * * * *

I guess it is my duty to ridicule the chancellor. Why not? I haven't seen the man stand up for anything so far in his tenure. Thank God he wasn't in the Mullins Center press room when Coach Chaney came in yelling and screaming to Coach Calipari. I can see it now... Chancellor Scott telling Chaney, "O.K., Coach, I understand where you are coming from. We'll take the final two points Mike Williams scored away. You guys take the win. We don't need it anyway, your highness. Hey, how'd you like to go to Bertucci's?"

* * * * *

I was in the press room, front and a little to the right, when Chaney entered and carried on. I stared with my mouth gaping as he hit Calipari with a barrage of accusations and then wouldn't let him answer. The issue for me isn't whether or not the press should be allowed in the meeting with Chancellor David K. Scott, I once again laughed. He contemplated, along with other SGA members who were present, kicking the members of the media out. Huh?

The point is this: Calipari showed more class than I could have in his position. Athletic Director Bob Marcum taiks about image and perception for this University. Love Calipari or hate Calipari, if you agree with him or disagree with him, you have to respect how he represented us.

* * * * *

This could be the last time you see this column allot space for toilets, so pay attention. Can anyone tell me why there are so many toilets out–of–order and covered with plastic bags in the Campus Center? It has been two days now and with half of the stalls in the men's room on the Concourse blocked off, it makes it pretty damn hard to... well, you know... between classes.

Here's a simple demand: fix them!

If you see someone sprawled out drunk uptown tonight, don't kick me. I'm legal, baby.

Stop cuts to UMass security

Tuition uproars, protests and takeovers are in the air. Spring is coming to UMass! Does this mean that all this wonderful snow will soon be a distant memory? Not necessarily, but it does mean the energy that UMass is famous for is flowing once again. Tuition is, of course, a serious topic but... as long as we're complaining, why not point to some other, perhaps more subtle, campus issues.

The phrase for the day is "Security — not!" If you live on campus you may have noticed that our high–security residence halls have been significantly downgraded. Word has it that only one receptionist is on duty in each hall every night of the week. Bad move.

Anyone who has frequented dorms on campus has probably noticed the lack of security personnel. Some of us feel just a wee bit uneasy about it.

Diana D'Avanzo

Not only is one security receptionist forced to deal with a weekend mob, but there will be less security supervisors roaming the campus at night. Did I mention that UMass has one of the highest crime rates in the state?

The good news is that, with all the cuts made, no receptionists have been fired, theoretically. Of course, the drastic cut in security presence tells us otherwise. Perhaps it's the removal of security coordinators that has caused the big hassle. There used to be one in every cluster. This person was responsible for making sure that their particular cluster had security every night. Anyone who has frequented dorms on campus has probably noticed the lack of security personnel. Some of us feel just a wee bit uneasy about it.

So then, the question is, why does UMass feel that their residence halls are not worth securing? One possible answer may be related to the high cost of enrollment — we are all familiar with this one. Housing must feel that, after shelling out all our summer earnings to attend this prestigious university, the typical student does not have enough money to furnish his or her assigned closet space with many costly items.

Personal belongings aside, the most worthwhile items to steal are probably those wonderful swivel chairs that a few residents have been privileged enough to receive. While the rest of us are forced to endure hard seats — the kind that will give you blisters in your rear–end — while studying for our exams and writing our papers, some students are able to adjust their chairs, recline and even (gasp) sit comfortably.

Were it not for those darn swivel chairs, security could probably be cut from the halls all together. Can you just picture the higher–ups holding their press conference? "Well, after having removed those cushioned chairs, we've decided that the 1940s wardrobes and the metal bed frames are safe from potential thieves. Of course, we were a little hesitant with the new recycling bins and all..."

But even if personal and public belongings don't cause a campus–wide response, the safety of students on campus may. How safe are the residence halls against angry boyfriends and drunken fools? Shouldn't safety be the primary concern? Why do I feel that security was not the area to make cuts in? Uptown brawls have already caused law enforcers to demand more backup — what will happen when in–house disturbances detain officers every Friday night?

There must be some way to get the administration to pay attention. If taking over the Admissions building will make President Hooker think twice, what would happen if we refused to pay the current rates for our present living conditions — or better yet, refused to live on campus, period? Student security not only provides a valuable service, but it also helps supply jobs and work–study money. This is definitely something to cause a stink about.

Violent images affect reality

There is a frightening myth that women enjoy being threatened with violence, that guns are stimulating and mysterious strangers are intriguing and exciting. Perhaps it is this bizarre myth that drives some men to exert physical force or control upon women. It is horrifying to think that such a myth exists in the minds of some people. But it was more horrifying to see such a myth played out on screen.

Joy Collins

This weekend when I saw, against my better judgement, The Getaway, I was stunned to find such a scenario. To give more context, without revealing the nonexistent plot, I will explain the scene further. The elements were a man with a gun, a woman — married, bored with her husband and apparently sexually frustrated — and, last but not least, the pathetic, boring husband.

The "bad guy" with the gun forces his way into the couple's house. He threatens the wife with the gun. She tells him that she is "willing to do whatever he wants" and she "hopes they can be friends." He then proceeds to ask her what she has on under her dress. "Nothing" she replies and he looks, using the gun to raise her skirt. He continues to order her around and fondle her, with gun in hand, and she giggles and obeys. They throw food at each other. They have sex.

People in the movie theater found parts of this funny, as was apparently the intention of the filmmaker. All I found was a sick feeling in my stomach. It made me sick that this movie producer was ignorant and irresponsible enough to draw such vivid ties between sex and violence, and had the gaul to integrate it with an implied comic twist.

It made me sick that we, as viewers, were perpetuating this irresponsibility by financially supporting such endeavors, and that some of us laugh at images that have caused so much pain.

It is mortifying to see such carelessness at a time when, according to the U.S. Bureau of Justice, every eighteen seconds a woman is beaten in the U.S. and every three and a half minutes a woman is the victim of rape or attempted rape.

But hey, sex and violence sell, right? We see that proven everyday. The power dynamic that makes it possible is deeply rooted in capitalism, racism and patriarchy. It is the same dynamic that makes it more financially possible for a woman to earn a living above the poverty level dancing at a strip club than working two jobs with her clothes on.

It is the same dynamic that claims that African American people on average score lower on I.Q. tests not because the tests are Euro–centric or based on racists principles, but because they are less intellectually capable. It is the same dynamic that encourages the production and support of harmful, violent images for the pure lust of money.

But what we forget is that we are the people who can stop it. We are the consumers who can organize, speak out and, as a result, influence what it is that sells. We can hold the whole deck if we put our cards together and really make some changes about how we respond to violent images.

I do not want to preach or to come off as a censorship supporter. But I do want to encourage people to think critically about the images that are force fed through the screen. I believe that they are more harmful than they seem. Often disguised as comic relief, these images, harmful and otherwise, find their way into our perception of reality. Don't be fooled.

Letters to the Editor

Student senators respond to criticism

To the editor:

At the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting on Feb. 2, a resolution concerning Lead or Leave was entertained. The motion was discussed, debated and voted on. It failed. This past Friday, Feb. 11, approximately 120 frustrated and concerned students took over the Admission building.

Contrary to the belief expressed by Andrew Davidson ["The SGA's disguised agenda," Collegian, Feb. 15], the two events described above are mutually exclusive. However, since Mr. Davidson wants to discuss the issue, it would be to his benefit to know the facts and reality of the situation.

Let's talk about the Lead or Leave motion first. It should be explained that when a motion appears on the Senate floor, it is voted on and either passed or failed by the entire body.

When you spoke with the Speaker Matt Pavesi, what he told you about the fate of the motion was his personal view and was said just between you and him. Matt told you what he thought personally, not what the Senate as a whole felt on the issue.

In addition, we are truly sorry that Dave Nuñez felt he had to put forth the effort he did in order to help Lead or Leave. When someone is willing to take the ball and run for you, like Dave did for you that night, you should still show gratitude, even if the effort fails. As for your eulogy, we are fairly certain Dave already has a prior commitment for that day.

Concerning the other event you somehow tried to associate with the failure of Lead or Leave, it is called student empowerment. If you would consider opening your eyes and taking a look around, Mr. Davidson, you would see that hardly a day passes when at least somebody in the Student Government Association office is on the phone for hours doing business with members of the State House in Boston. But, of course, we have no contacts with politicians and the actions of last Friday took place only because of "rally– hungry egos."

In closing, Mr. Davidson, we are certainly glad you expect more from your student government because we are always trying to give it to you and the rest of the student population we represent.

RSU president rebuts columnist

To the editor:

Andrew Davidson, newly–appointed Student Government Association senator and member of the Washington–based Lead or Leave organization, should be less subjective in his remarks referring to the decision by the SGA not to join his organization ["The SGA's disguised agenda," Collegian, Feb. 15]. Davidson's failure to convince the Student Senate to join Lead or Leave is not the 'fault' of David Nuñez or any disguised agenda. It is simply a reflection of Davidson's effectiveness in presenting his case in a convincing manner.

In addition, your remarks about myself and the leaflet I passed out are absolutely far–fetched. I handed out a leaflet (you had nothing to show) that was a reprint from EXTRA!, a well–respected journal in the communications/media field.

The article merely showed how successful Lead or Leave was in gaining the support of mainstream media and politicians, while democratically run and diverse student organizations like USSA (with a membership of 3.5 million students) were unsuccessful.

You wouldn't disagree with a testament to Lead or Leave's own success, would you? Contrary to what you said I thought, I do support joining national organizations; Lead or Leave is not, however, one of them because of their attacks on older Americans who receive pensions and health coverage.

And, by the way, attacking me as a "professional student" is insulting. I have been a soldier, I had to leave school in 1990 because I had no money, and I have a family of my own that most other students don't.

Maybe if I had money and supportive parents I could have finished earlier. But still this is only my fourth year at UMass as a student. I am still only 24 years old, and I surely have more serious flaws than my persistence in earning a degree.

Beyond HoHos and Doritos; there's more to eat in the refrigerator

Alternative Eats

By BILL BRADLEY
Collegian Correspondent

If you were to ask the average person at UMass if they were vegetarian, you might find yourself surprised. As with many college towns, there is a prevalence of people who have at least tried not to eat meat for a period of time. For some, this trip down vegetable lane is just a passing fad, but for others it is a way of life.

People's reasons for choosing vegetarianism are quite varied. Seventh–Day Adventists choose a vegetarian diet because of religous beliefs. Some have concerns about the environment and the hungry people of the earth. The North American Vegetarian Society points out that "1.3 billion people could be fed with the grain and soybeans eaten by U.S. livestock."

Other vegetarians are concerned with cruelty to animals and believe that animals, like humans should be held as sacred beings.

One of the big issues which is making even die–hard meat eaters think twice about the 24 oz. prime rib special at Cows R Us is the question of health.

The American Dietetic Association reports that, "Mortality from coronary artery disease is lower in vegetarians than in nonvegetarians. Vegetarians also have lower rates of hypertension and non–insulin dependent diabetes mellitus than do non–vegetarians. Seventh–Day Adventist vegetarians have lower risks of mortality from colon cancer than the general population."

So if vegetarianism is so good for you, why isn't everyone trying it? The truth is, many people are. Even though a 1991 Gallup survey reported that 5% of respondents were vegetarians, there is increasing evidence that many people are switching over to vegetarianism or at least cutting back on meat usage.

In the Northampton, Amherst area there is a growing number of health food stores and restaurants which, if not entirely vegetarian, at least have some vegetarian specialties on their menu. A recent American Demographic survey reported that meatless menus are on the rise.

Of course, there are pitfalls to everything and vegetarianism has its share. RN Review reports that there are risks of deficiencies of some nutrients from a vegetarian diet. These include B12 deficiency, protein deficiency, and iron deficiency. Most deficiency problems can be solved with proper additions to the diet. It is mostly a matter of learning what foods or occasionally supplements you need to receive your full requirement of nutrients.

The American Diabetic Association recently gave their position on vegetarian diets. "It is the position of the American Dietetic Association that vegetarian diets are healthful and nutritionally adequate when approopriately planned."

If you are thinking of switching to a vegetarian diet, many books suggest that you do it slowly. Changing any part of your diet too quickly can tax your system. If you currently have any health problems you should probably check with a Doctor or a Registered Dietitian before trying any diet.

I would suggest buying a book or two on Vegetarianism including a vegetarian cookbook. Try cooking a vegetarian meal or else eat at one of the restaurants discussed in this issue. You will probably find the food tastier than you thought, and you might also find yourself feeling healthier.

Last semester a new alternative food service began offering homesyle meals for students and faculty. This dining option is located on North Pleasant St., only one block from the Newman Center. The service is run in a building most people would recognize but not expect to find a comfortable, smoke–free atmosphere that serves homemade soups, entrees and pasterles. This building is the Hillel House.

The food service is a kosher food program linked with HRTA. It intends to fill in the gaps of the Campus kosher dining commons by serving meals on Sundays and Thurday afternoons.

Lisa Stager, a senior HRTA major, runs the kitchen. Initially the Board of Hillel dreamt up the idea. When Hillel moved into a house at the corner of N. Pleasant and Phillips St., they contacted HRTA to access the chances of a program.

Eric Nusbaum, the faculty HRTA advisor and Stager came up with the foundations of the program last summer and last semester began operation.

The fare is basically American, except that it is kosher. Vegetarian dishes are always served, which Stager says non–vegetarians often like also. Stager says that she tries to "stick with familiar meals," but experiments with different dishes, such as Israeli meals.

According to Stager, Friday night meals are most popular, usually consisting of a chicken dish. Sunday night specialty buffets also seem to be popular.

The kitchen has added a baker to its staff. This will enable the Kosher Food Service to have its own baked goods. Now almost all the food served is homemade.

The student–run staff is still expanding. Stager is looking for prep cooks and checkers, as well as a student marketing intern. She says, this food service is a "different that average food facility that provides a unique educational experience."

Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter says that interest in this new food service "has risen steadily over the semester."

"We need to get the word out...we need to let people know an alternative is being served," said Stager.

Stager described the atmosphere of the dining area as a "University atmosphere, a student building like any other on campus [which is] open to everyone. We're providing students with American fare prepared in a kosher way."

Rabbi Perlmutter defined kosher food as food that is permitted by Jewish law. He explained that some people keep kosher because they feel religiously commanded to or because they want to "keep a sense of tradition."

Stager says that sororities and fraternities have become very interested in the Kosher Food Services, especially if they don't have meal plans. She pointed out that the Hillel House is surrounded by sororities and fraternities, which makes it an accessible option.

She says that a core group seems to eat at there often, but faculty and staff members appear to be coming to eat there.

"It's not a closed society,"says Stager,"We're not seen as open as places like the Newman Center. This [food service] is a way to invite people in. We not only are trying to provide a kosher kitchen, but we're involving ourselves with the University."

Perlmutter commented that "people who have come here say they have felt very welcomed and at home."

Friday night dinners and Sunday meals are now subsidized for a time, because, Rabbi Perlmutter said that people who sponsored last semester's dinners "felt so good about what it had to offer for students, but thought that cost may be a problem."

Harold Grinspoon and Diane Trorderman provide subsidizing for the meals, making Friday night dinners only $2 and Sunday brunch and dinner only $3.

The Hillel Kosher Food Services has received such widespread acclaim that Stager and her staff have begun catering functions such as a career center program reception, a Chanukah/Kwanzaa party and, over winter break a Bar Mitzvah. Stager said that she hopes more catering opportunities will arise.

Currently, meals served are Thursday lunch and Sunday brunch from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., Friday dinner at 5:30 p.m. (must purchase ticket in advance) and Sunday dinner from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m..

For menu options, alternative prices, or more information students are encouraged to call Hillel at 549–1710.

Stager says that if people know what is being offered, they would take advantage. "Its a great community, we have terrific food and its just like home, as opposed to a big institutional operation."

Non–profit cafeteria serves affordable food

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

Earth Foods Cafeteria.

By ASHLEY E. VONDRASEK
Collegian Correspondent

Earthfoods, located between the People's Market and the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union, is one of several places on campus where you can get prepared food.

According to John Beck, an employee of Earthfoods, they serve pure vegan (vegetarian) and over–lacto (eggs and dairy products) food. Three of the most popular items on their menu are organic brown rice, salad and entrees with cheese in them.

Their prices range from 10 cents for a 6 oz. cup of spring water to $2.50 for an entree, though most entrees usually cost about $2.00.

They serve approximately 500 students each day. Earthfoods hopes to increase this number with a recently purchased register and warming cart. The additional register helps the lines move faster. The warming cart will hold hot food items behind the line, allowing large amounts of already hot food to be served promptly.

Earthfoods is non–profit and the University subsidizes it in that they do not pay for rent, utilities and some equipment repairs. They pay for food, supplies, wages, equipment and some equipment repairs with their profits from selling the food.

It is not only a place where you can eat, but a "meeting place/community space" as Beck put it. People meet their friends and socialize in the Commonwealth Room, where the food is served. Also, there is not a specific type of person who eats in Earthfoods.

There is not a definitive kind of person who works there, either, although only undergraduates with insurance are allowed to work at Earthfoods.

At the beginning of this semester there was not a need to hire anyone new. However, at the start of each semester they usually hire new employees. Beck anticipates that next semester five to six new people will be hired.

Beck feels a vegetarian better understands what it means and takes to be one, and therefore would like to see more vegetarians work there.

Applications are available at the start of each semester in the For Student Business (FSB) located on the second floor of the Student Union above the Munchy Store.

If you think Earthfoods is for only vegetarians and "crunchy" people I suggest you see for yourself what Earthfoods is all about. You are in for a pleasant surprise.

Campus market is a healthy people pleaser

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Correspondent

Upon entering the Student Union and then gravitating past the Post Office, a gradual increase in the sound of music is due to The People's Market. The emanation seems to attract attention and draw crowds.

This constant music is not only indicative of the steady flow of customers, but also of the strongly committed staff, who keep the shelves stocked with a wholesome selection of snacks and drinks. The selection of food and beverages ranges from different kinds of bagels and cheeses to trail mixes and flavored coffee to chilled apple cider.

The People's Market is a co–op, completely run and maintained by students. There is consensus decision making among the 27 members who constitute the staff. Each member is required to work nine hours in the store, in addition to compulsory attendance at the 2–3 hour weekly staff meetings.

"We each are 1/27 of the whole business," stated Arielle Goldberg, a junior political science major, currently in her second semester of employment. "It's a major time commitment, but we're also doing something good for the student community."

There are no supervisors overlooking shoulders, no boss cracking a motivational whip; members pull their own weight in labor. Although there is no hierarchal structure, the staff meetings are run by a member who organizes and facilitates. The venture's infrastructure dictates that each employee is required to serve on at least one of the Market's 14 committees.

The Steering Committee is responsible for major decision making, such as capital purchases. If new registers or scales are needed, this committee agrees on the particular model, and then sends out bids to the relative companies.

Those in charge of making sure all of the products are in are on the Buying Committee. They monitor the inventory and maintain close contact with the vendors. The buyers also set prices and provide the proper product mix for the appropriate market customers.

The third of the bigger committees is accountable for the general ledger. The Bookkeeping Committee tracks and pays all invoices. They set budgets, and pick up the most efficient vendors, with-

For some people, vegetarianism is a way of living or purifying the body according to religious beliefs. For others it is a way of protesting to industrial development. Some, however, have a genuine concern over the wisdom, ethics, economy and safety of using animal products as a source of food.

Katja Hahn d'Errico is in charge of training, guiding and supervising some of the student managed businesses at UMass. Earthfoods is one such business; a vegetarian restaurant that upholds the idea that vegetarianism is a very broad "spectrum."

In terms of the foods permitted into a diet pattern, different forms of vegetarianism exist. "True vegetarians" or vegans, eat no animal products including milk and eggs. Fruitarians eat a more limited diet consisting of fruit, honey and nuts. Ovolactovegetarians eat foods of plant origin as well as eggs and milk. Pollovegetarians permit poultry into their diet, and pescovegetarians permit fish.

In her book Introductory Nutrition, Helen A. Guthrie, Ph.D., D.Sc., R.D., a professor and head of the nutrition department at Penn State University argues whether vegetarian diets are nutritionally adequate or inadequate depending on the type and the individual who follows it.

She explains that being a vegetarian at a young age is inadequate in providing enough nutrients and you might have higher health problems. Vegetarian diets in adulthood, on the other hand, make it easier to achieve weight control, to contain sufficient fiber and lower blood cholesterol levels. In addition vegetarians have a lower incidence of many diseases.

"We eat according to our culture and the way we grew up. Food plays a major role in all of this, food we have socialized with; that is the food we know. So as we grow up we branch out trying to find our own kind of food," says d'Errico.

There are different places in Amherst where it is possible for someone to try different healthy foods. One of these places is a juice bar called The Raw Carrot. The owner of the bar, Heather Fearn says that they first started out as a juice bar offering different mixes of juices, smoothies, frozen drinks, wheatgrass and more, but now they have expanded to serve vegetarian food.

They have sandwiches, rice and beans, soups, fresh salad, fresh fruit, nuts and the daily specials and you could even create your own dish.

"We try to keep it healthy and fresh by using whatever is in the season," says Fearn by adding that all their dressings are home–made, they have filtered water and soy cheese.

There is a pleasant atmosphere in the bar and they also have a guitar that anyone can play and get a free drink!

The bar is open Monday – Friday 8 a.m.–7 p.m. and Sat & Sun 12 a.m. – 6 p.m. The Raw Carrot is located at 9 East Pleasant St. Call 549–4240 for more info.

Some personally favorite cures for nasty winter colds & flu

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

Chocolate chip cookies are a favorite home remedy for the flu.

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Mid-February greets us not only with cold winds, feet of snow and icy roads but with equally distressing conditions on the health scene. If you are one of the lucky few who have not yet suffered the common cold or flu, count your blessings, go outside and make snow angels.

If you, like so many of us coughing, sniffling, sneezing students are feeling the blows of a winter bug or illness, don't feel alone. As I sit here and type, my nose (which has achieved a pinkish tone that turns red outdoors) is running, my eyes water, my throat hurts and every time I open my mouth to say something this awful noise that resembles a frog's croak comes out.

Having struggled with this miserable cold for days, I have found a few things that have helped to somewhat improve my symptoms. The following are a few of my own favorite cures and home remedies.

A fan of modern medicine I am not, in light of the fact that I usually end up with a good buzz from most cough syrups and cold medicines. My friends who have the philosophy that the more medicine one takes, the sooner they will recover know what I am talking about. Tripling the dosage of any medicine will probably give you the spins and make you feel worse than you did before you took the medicine. I don't recommend it.

If taking medicine is simply unavoidable, I have found that Advil Cold and Sinus is pretty effective in clearing the sinuses and easing general aches and pains. One caplet every four to six hours usually does the trick, and they are convenient and portable — perfect for people on campus all day.

For those of you who are actually bed-ridden or confined to a dorm room or house, Tylenol Cold and Flu, a "soothing hot lemon drink" does wonders for most cold-related ailments. Mixing a packet of this stuff with 6 oz of hot water will create a steaming concoction that will ease body aches, congestion, coughing, fever and, where most usually fail, sore throats. I have to admit that if you're expecting this medicine/drink to taste lemony-good, you're in for a surprise. It's not that the taste is completely terrible, but I wouldn't make popsicles from the stuff.

Remember that vile, red liquid that could probably take the paint off cars that mom or dad used to shove down your throat to "help" you stop coughing? Well mom, go ahead, tell me that you told me so, because I admit that Robitussin cough syrup really works. Taking two teaspoons of Robitussin CF (I still don't know what the CF stands for, though making things up is a good way to pass the time when you are sick at home) every four hours. The label does caution that taking more than this amount can cause dizziness, nervousness and sleepiness. Didn't you take the medicine in the first place to alleviate such symptoms? Robitussin helps to clear nasal and chest congestion and loosen coughs; after the first ten minutes of increased hacking, coughing does subside.

In lieu of these chemical solutions, I suggest a few alternatives. First of all, a lot of rest is always a good idea. Most professors will understand if you call them before class and explain that you are sick and cannot attend. The idea is that if you don't get an adequate amount of R&R you will get rundown, and recovery will take longer than it should.

Vitamin C, via fruits and juices is great for one's health. Drinking lots of liquids (preferably water) will also help to flush viruses out of your system.

A good pair of slippers (I rely on a ragged pair of slipper socks that comforts me when I'm sick) and a blanket to tote around the house with you are essential to keep warm and comfortable, and a favorite teddy bear does wonders for the spirit.

Finally, and against all medical advice that I have personally received, I strongly support the notion that chocolate chip cookies are ideal for improving one's frame of mind and overall well-being in the midst of illness.

Also, don't forget to bundle up when you head outdoors, eat healthily (a cookie here and there is okay), sleep well and take care of yourself. With these tips, hopefully you will be feeling better soon.

The ironies pile up quicker than the laughs in these skewed snapshots of Hollywood life, but writer-director James L. Brooks (Broadcast News) doesn't seem to be striving for rib-tickling yucks. Give the movie the chance it deserves, or at least wait for the restored version, hopefully coming soon to a video store near you. B (Hampshire Mall)

Alice advises against pain

Dear Alice,
My girlfriend and I have been having sex for about three months. Our sex life is really good, but since I have sort of a large penis, she often complains and makes me slow down during intercourse.

I've tried using extra amounts of foreplay and to be really slow and careful during penetration, but nothing seems to work. And while she has no complaints about the size as long as I go easy, I'm the one who suffers from lack of intensity. What should I do?

Mr. Holmes

Go Ask Alice

Dear Mr. Holmes,
I, myself, have had this very same problem. Every time my ex-boyfriend and I had sex, I'd be in pain for the next three days. It really is quite painful!

Our solution was to try new positions. Whenever I was on top, things worked out much better because I could control the amount of penetration. I also would contract my vaginal muscles which, I would say, increased the lack of intensity for both of us. We also tried using various types of lubrication, but the new positions seem to work out better, and experimenting was fun for both of us.

So, good luck. Just keep in mind that for her, it can be a very painful experience. Work together to find things other than penetration that excites you both. Your results may be both enjoyable and climactic, so to speak.

Alice is an undergraduate student at the University of Massachusetts.

Day-Lewis shines in charged Father

In the Name of the Father is ostensibly a simple polltical thriller that follows a typical plot: innocent people arrested and wrongfully imprisoned, a nefarious government plot,, a tireless search for the truth by an impassioned lawyer, etc., all with easy good/evil coding. What makes this Father, (adapted from the true story) different — indeed, remarkably unique — is Jim Sheridan's (My Left Foot) crisp, thoughtful direction and a truly stunning central performance by Daniel Day-Lewis. With Father, Sheridan and Day-Lewis may just have made the first art-house crowd pleaser.

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

Day-Lewis plays Gerry Conlon, a young man living the wild life in seventies IRA-torn Belfast. Considered a failure by his hard-working but frail father Guiseppe (Oscar-nominated Pete Postlethwaite), he is sent to England to cool off after unwittingly inciting a riot. Instead, he is unwittingly implicated — along with friends and his father — in an IRA bombing on a local pub. The accused group was known in real-life as the Guildford Four.

Under a British act that allows police to detain terrorist suspects for seven days before a crime must be charged, Gerry and his friends are tortured into confessing, sentenced to life in prison and hunkering with his father in the same cell, his only hope is a meek attorney (Emma Thompson) who meets up with an uncooperative court and an indifferent police.

Gerry must not only reconcile the storm within himself — essentially grow up and become a man — but also mend fences with a father he cannot respect, and explain why he has spent his life proving his unworthiness to his father. The film does not make the mistake of making their reunion a tidy one. Gerry must face the influential wiles of the IRA leader who really engineered the bombing (the man is now in prison as well on an unrelated charge), as well as his reasonable unwillingness to validate his shattered life.

Since it is a true story, there's no sense arguing with the coincidences and contrivances. Sheridan isn't out to detail the corrupt inner-workings of the British legal system, or the entire Ireland/England political maelstrom. In a way, he's peeking through the cracks of the entire conflict, and illuminating a relationship as torn as the Belfast terrain.

Father gains considerable dramatic momentum as Thompson slowly gains evidence that could lead to Gerry's release. And while the courtroom showdown has been done before (and with much more fanfare), the film hits you undeniably on a visceral and cathartic level, if not an wholly intellectual one. No big deal, though, since the sequences are entirely satisfying.

With his searing, amazingly magnetic performance, Day- Lewis assumes the much-deserved label of the best actor now working in the English language, plain and simple. Now, this isn't typical film critic hyperbole, like "Move over Chaplin! Jim Carey of Ace Ventura is a comedic genius!" In fact, "performance" seems almost like too much of a showy word, Day-Lewis makes it more like a rite of passage.

Day-Lewis' remarkable resume is a dynamic catalog of fully realized individuals, from his charming gay punk in My Beautiful Launderette to the paraplegic writer in My Left Foot to the Czech Casanova of The Unbearable Lightness of Being to the sweeping frontier man in The Last of the Mohicans, Day-Lewis continues to evolve, challenging himself as no other actor has done (DeNiro's great, I know, but for entirely different reasons). Hanks may win on Oscar night for being so brave as to play a gay man, but there's no doubt Day-Lewis deserves the statuette.

In supporting roles, Pete Postlewaite is honestly affecting, so the only issue seems to be Emma Thompson, who gives less a supporting performance than an extended cameo. Sheridan could've beefed up her part, but when you think about it, it would've detract from the central theme. In between Bono's intense opening title tune to Sinead O'Conner's haunting closing eulogy, "You Made Me the Thief of Your Heart," lies a quietly charged and engrossing tale of one father and one son, and the closing of the chasm between them. A- (Mountain Farms).

An emotional Daniel Day-Lewis.

I'll Do Anything — This wonderfully weird and mostly clever, but erratic comedy/drama was originally planned as a modern-day musical, but those influential preview audiences nixed the idea after a special screening (the same types of audiences who gave us the inane ending to Sliver as well as the retooled lows of Last Action Hero — gee, thanks).

What remains is a freefall of seemingly different movies: a father/daughter sentimental comedy, a piercing Hollywood satire (as pointed as anything in The Player), an adult relationship and romantic comedy and more. The film's chief flaw, mainly its erratic nature, is no doubt because of the missing musical sequences, as the emotional kickers to the scenes are noticeably absent.

Aided by an expert cast, headed by the never-better Nick Nolte (his speech on actors is especially good), includes Julie Kavner's test screener who — because of a chemical reaction — always tells the truth and Albert Brooks' neurotic and unsure studio head.

The WORD is talent as new season begins

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

Some homegrown plays will be given the breath of life this week as New WORLD Theatre presents WORD. A spotlight of works by UMass students of color, WORD was a great success for NWT when it was first presented in February, 1993. The latest installment in what might become an annual event will feature staged readings from three new plays.

Chattin' With the Mother, by Gregory Dean Smith, is a solo performance piece which tells the story of Juba Man — an African American representative of the human race who is placed on trial in the Global Court of Mother Nature.

A Matter of Strength, by Penny Cameron, is a searing memory play about an elderly black woman, who recalls being raped in the early years of the century.

Finolly, For the People, by Chris "Kahon:wes" Deere, recounts the Canadian government assault against the Konesatake–Kahnawoke Mohawk nation territories in 1990. Deere's play will be presented through mixed media, using both live actors and video screens.

This trio of plays will be staged by graduate director Michael Tritto and NWT Artistic Director Roberto Uno — in whose theatre class two of the plays originated. The combination of scenes from these works will run approximately 90 minutes, and will be followed by a talkback session in which the audience can speak with the authors, directors, and stars.

Performances of WORD will be held February 16 and 17 at 8:00 p.m. in Hampden Theatre. Admission is free.

A healthy trip to the outdoors

By MIKE TARAS
Collegian Correspondent

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

A trip to the great outdoors is good for the heart and soul.

Winter is here in all its glory with cold fronts bombarding us from the north. There have been many record–setting temperatures in the past weeks, and it is doubtlessly taking its toll on the swarms of people that inhabit this greatly fluctuating climactic region. However, winter is an essential part of New England and part of everyday life whether we appreciate it or not.

I have observed and found odd the amount of people who despise the conditions around us. It seems that much of this dislike and depression is self–inflicted by those who confine themselves to the indoors. Being indoors can add to the problem, with attributes such as stale, dusty air and lack of sunshine.

We do not, for the most part, possess the physiological or migratory capabilities which would make winter pains disappear. Though I know many would prefer to sleep the winter away like the bear (I've tried, believe me) or hibernate like the groundhog, this cannot be.

And though modern technology has achieved the means for human migration, unlike the hawks and songbirds, we must pay a lot of money for this pleasure.

I recently took a day trip to the Quabbin Reservoir, and like all the other trips I take to the woods, it was mostly for the sake of my peace of mind.

The Quabbin is a reservoir which supplies Boston with its drinking water. It is located not far east of Amherst, and a map should make it easy to find. The thing that I like best about the Quabbin land (approximately 40,000 acres available for recreational use) is the relatively unspoiled forests, waters, wildlife and tranquility.

The last time I was at the Quabbin, things were a little different. I had been watching a deer feeding on the shores of a grassy peninsula, a cool breeze blew the sun–filled air, and a Pileated Woodpecker could be heard in the background.

Suddenly the deer became spooked, and bounded to the water in a fury. I jumped to my feet and tried to determine what was going on when I noticed the coyote. He was standing chest–high in the waving sedges and detected this witness to his blunder. I raised my binoculars and stared into his intense eyes until he decided I had seen enough, turned and faded into the forest.

There are no coyote on this winter day, though I can still see those eyes. The cool breeze has been replaced by frigid winds, and the water by ice. But the beauty; it's still there. The recent winter storms have left snow and ice covering ever limb of every tree. Pine boughs and birches are left bowing to the ground, creating a land of winter wander.

And I do wonder, as every step sends a snowshoe crunching through the crusty snow (one of the few sounds to be heard now in this place of purity), where everyone is. I wonder if this beauty is all mine to see.

Is it only my belief that the trouble of putting up with a little cold weather is nullified by the rewards offered? I don't mind the solitude; I actually prefer it. It just seems so strange to me that there is so much out here, and it is so separate from out lives. I walk on. chickadees and nuthatches intent on keeping my company.

As I walk, each brisk wind sends sheets of snow to the ground in a fury. I jumped to my feet and tried to determine what was going on when I noticed the coyote. He was standing chest–high in the waving sedges and detected this witness to his blunder. I raised my binoculars and stared into his intense eyes until he decided I had seen enough, turned and faded into the forest.

upon a mouse the night before. There was also the death of a Blue Jay, leaving the gift of intense blue feathers on the backdrop of ashen snow. It is so clear that life does not cease in the winter.

The proof of nature's splendor is all around, and winter can be one of the best times to learn about animals, and oneself. Armed with some curiosity and a little bit of time, many natural wonders are revealed, and many more questions implanted in the mind.

Laid forth in the snow are answers to questions that may never be asked. Likewise, there is beauty which may never be seen, and hardly appreciated.

When I noticed my shadow getting long I decided to head back to the car. The sun was setting behind me, giving a deep orange glow to the horizon. Before me the bright moon was high in the still cerulean sky which faded into the glowing wooded hills. I stopped many times to look across the vast expanse of ice and forest, filled with an inexpressible awe.

I knew that my own tracks would have to lead out of this place, while the others remain. I leave with consolation, however, for the chickadees know as well as I that I will return. They always greet me at the edge of the woods, probably wondering why I ever leave.

The Far Side

By Gary Larson

For the most part, the meeting was quite successful. Only a slight tension filled the air, stemming from the unforeseen faux pas of everyone wearing the same dress.

Your Horoscope

By Jesse Dini

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Tackle a special assignment with zeal. Interim mental support with a newcomer could lead to romance. Younger family members need your support and guidance.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): You have plenty of self– confidence now. Turn your attention to your physical well–being. Learning to repair things around the house can save you a bundle.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): You know how to talk soothingly and can calm people who are upset. VIPs will be impressed. Set a new domestic goal and work steadily toward it; curb a tendency to procrastinate.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Be skeptical when offered advice on ways to spend your money. Someone could have selfish motives for urging a certain course of action. A longtime relationship gets better and better.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Others are inclined to let you take the initiative. Bring your dreams down into play and you will see big financial success! An investment or new budget puts a smile on your face.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept 22): Clever ideas and solutions spring to mind. Launch a get project without further hesitate. Get your bills paid up; there may be a hitch in obtaining financing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Once you and your associates get down to work you will make rapid progress. An agreement is reached after everyone's cards are on the table. Put your spending habits under the magnifying glass!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A friend or business ally is enthusiastic about a project you have in mind. Your emotional quient and get busy! An older person will help you get back on track.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Financial accounts could cause a tempest in a teapot. Be cautious and put a lid on the situation. Underestimating an opponent's resolve would be a mistake.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Your views and goals are well received by those in authority. A new idea has great potential. Good manners will accelerate your climb up the ladder of success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Someone is eager to hear what you have been doing lately. If you limit yourself in a creative mood, you should follow your artistic visions. Have a wonderful birthday.

PISCES (Feb 19–March 20): An unexpected trip out of town brings welcome relief. Protect yourself with adequate health insurance. A personal project needs more time to grill; forget it for now.

Minutewomen try to repay old debts at West Virginia

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

Thanks to Mother Nature, who has wreaked havoc on its schedule, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will be well rested for its game against West Virginia tonight in Morgantown.

The Minutewomen haven't played in a week heading into this one and, thanks to last Saturday's postponement of the Rutgers game, will have to play five games in the span of 10 days to end their regular season.

Massachusetts was scheduled to play St. Joseph's last Wednesday (Feb. 9), but that contest had to be delayed one night due to inclement weather, which also forced the rescheduling of Rutgers.

The Minutewomen enter tonight's contest with a 4–4 record in Atlantic 10 play (10–8 overall), good for fifth place in the conference, while the Mountaineers are in eighth place in the A–10 at 2–7 with an overall 6–13 record.

On paper, this one looks like a lock for the Minutewomen, but as they found out earlier this season against WVU, they play the game on a hard wooden surface, not paper.

The Mountaineers came to the William D. Mullins Center Jan. 22, toting an 0–3 A–10 record, but came away with a hard–fought 62–52 overtime victory, handing the Minutewomen their first conference loss of the season.

Hard fought being the key word as Mountaineer forward Amanda Hayes engaged in some scuffles with assorted Massachusetts players both during and after the game. Hayes was tossed from a contest at the Curry Hicks Cage last year for intentionally elbowing Minutewoman forward Kim Kristofik.

Massachusetts rallied in the last minute to tie the score at 50 and send the game to an extra frame, but was outscored 12–2.

The sophomore tandem of center Melissa Gurile and forward Octavia Thomas led the Minutewomen as Gurile had 10 points and five boards, but was limited to only 18 minutes of action due to foul trouble. Thomas scored a team–high 18 and pulled down 14 boards.

Freshman forward Crystal Carroll tallied seven and had 10 boards.

Minutewoman Notes: The Mountaineers lead the all–time series with Massachusetts, 18–5 ... From Morgantown, the Minutewomen travel to Pittsburgh for a Saturday afternoon contest with Duquesne ... In the latest NCAA Division I women's basketball statistics, Massachusetts ranks 12th in the nation in free throw shooting at 73.2 percent.

Thomas needs only 26 points to become only the third player in Minutewomen history to score 700 points in her first two seasons (Sue Peters '77–'80 & Barb Hebel '83–'86) ... Gurile ranks second in the A–10 in free throw percentage at 82.8 percent ... Thomas is second in the league in scoring average (17.8) and is tied for second in rebounding (10.1) ... Senior captain Maleeka Valentine ranks ninth on the all–time assist list at 183 and needs only 10 more to overtake Mary Halleran for the eighth spot ... Oddly enough, the Minutewomen have had more success on the road (3–1) than at home (1–3) so far in this A–10 season.

Men's gym preps for tri–meet at Army

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team looks to continue its winning ways this Saturday when the Minutemen travel to West Point to compete in a tri–meet against Army and Temple.

The Minutemen are currently ranked 19th in the nation in team totals with an average of 263.57 points per meet, and in their last competition against the University of Vermont, they broke the school record for team total scoring 269.6 points.

UMass was scheduled to compete against Temple on Feb. 12, but the meet was canceled due to poor weather conditions. This led to the scheduling of the tri–meet as Army was already on the UMass schedule for this weekend. It also brings the top three finishers from the UMass Open together to compete.

At the UMass Open Dec. 4, Temple took first place, UMass second, and Army registered third place. With UMass seemingly playing better with every meet, this tough contest could not have come at a better time.

Though UMass was scheduled to confront A–10 rival Temple last week after its record–breaking performance against UVM, the team has not lost its momentum according to Coach Roy Johnson.

"We had an inter–squad [competition] on Saturday to keep the momentum going and that helped," said Johnson. "We saw some good performances then."

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

The men's gymnastics team, fresh off its record–breaking performance against Vermont, travels to West Point to compete in a tri–meet with the Cadets and Temple University.

Now with an extra week's practice under their belts the Minutemen could improve their national standings and their prowess as an A–10 force.

"I think we can have one of our best performances of the year," said Johnson. "We have a little way to go to get our routines 100 percent consistent, but we're moving in that direction."

Johnson also pointed out a number of gymnasts who have been performing well of late, including Peter Degenhardt who has been looking "real good on floor exercise and parallel bars in the past week," as well as senior Jason Braud who is "much more healthy" and improving his scores.

Braud was an NCAA qualifier last year and is currently 19th in the nation on floor exercise with a 9.57 average. In addition, freshman Ruslan Shupak is currently 9th in the nation on still rings with a 9.62, and 16th in the vault with a 9.32 average.

The Minutemen return to home action on March 1 when they meet Southern Connecticut in the Boyden Gymnasium.

Hornets stung; Pip better than the rest

We are halfway through an exciting NBA season where anybody can beat anybody else at anytime. The only thing routine about this season is that the unexpected will happen.

Scottie Pippen sure has proven to everyone that he is indeed the most complete player in the game right now. He was the only player in the all–star game to show up and play. Pippen can do it all, rebound, score, and pass. He is the best, no doubt about it.

Houston figures to slip; how can Robert Horry play hard for a team that traded him away, only to be forced to take him back?

That hurts Hakeem Olajuwon in the race for MVP. Pippen wins the trophy unless Chicago falls apart.

In the battle of the Big Apple Tuesday night, New Jersey defeated New York for the third time in a row. Chuck Daly and the Nets continue to baffle Pat Riley and the Knicks. Daly is the better coach, and he proves it head–to–head. Daly, not Riley, was the coach of the Dream Team.

Riley won championships with Laker teams with two immortal Hall of Famers, Daly won championships with a much less talented Detroit teams. If Riley is the best coach in the NBA, then prove it and win it all with a good but not great Knicks team.

Minnesota's Isaiah Rider won the slam dunk title during all–star weekend. Hats off to Art, my Hardwood partner for the prediction. I like Rider too; I wish I could get that deal that he had at UNLV, where people write your term papers.

The Clippers have one more week to trade off Danny Manning or lose their star player to free agency next year. Watch out for cunning GM Pat Williams of Orlando to come in and steal him with a subpar package.

Here's five guys falling from the face of the earth:

1. Harold Miner has dropped from the starting lineup to the end of the bench for Miami. Doesn't hustle, can't guard anyone, possibly trade bait. He used to be called "Baby Jordan", but now he's just plain baby.

2. Terry Dehere never plays for the Clippers. The former Seton Hall star is most likely the only member of that sorry team that cares to win. This rookie needs more playing time, but he is blocked by a fading Ron Harper.

3. Harvey Grant was traded to Portland before the season, expecting to gain attention as a big gun on a great team. Well, Portland is decent, but Grant can't throw the ball in the ocean. It's not shocking to look back and see he was traded for Kevin Duckworth.

4. Rumeal Robinson played for NCAA champion Michigan as a senior. Drafted by Atlanta, lost his starting job and was traded for Mookie Blaylock. Not too bad, except next he was traded for Johnny Newman. Now he backs up Muggsy Bogues and Tony Bennett.

5. Sean Elliott was an all–star last year but is a non–factor in Detroit where Isiah Thomas doesn't like him. You are as good as buried in Detroit when Thomas doesn't like you.

Getting back to coaches, it's amazing a few of these guys are still around. Kevin Loughery in Miami has never won anything. he is a cancer to a young team. Bobby Weiss with those Clippers has no control, a tough spot but it's time to clean house in LA.

You have to wonder about Larry Johnson; will he ever be the same player? Charlotte is in a bind, what if he plays and gets paid those $84 million, but can't perform at that same level? The team of the future appears in jeopardy.

With LJ hurtling, the East becomes a lot less interesting. If Orlando gets Manning, they'll be set to run through the playoffs. They are young, but with the East in bad shape, Shaq and company could bring it home.

The West comes down to Phoenix and Seattle; Houston and San Antonio lack the guard play and will falter. The awesome depth of the Sonics against KJ and Barkley, those are the two best teams in the NBA, the title will come from the West this year.

Notes from the Hardwood

Chaney leaves a lot to be desired

I am ready to scribe my thoughts on the sports world. Take heed.

• Chaney vs. Calipari. An atrocious, disgusting, and despicable spectacle, and yet horrendously interesting. The press conference match–up between Chaney and Calipari was a preposterous incident, and one that, knowing Chaney's past, does not surprise me.

I recall reading an article on Chaney in a basketball preview magazine, and he commented on how he may have acted crazy at times in the past, yet he doesn't want his kids to. How can an educated man like Chaney not practice what he preaches, which basically consumes all of the time that he is not at courtside?

How can an educated man like Chaney not practice what he preaches, which basically consumes all of the time that he is not at courtside?

Andrew Bryce

"I'll kill you. When I see you next, I'm going to kick your ass." Threatening another coach's life after a college basketball loss.

"That's why I was telling my kid to knock your fucking kid in the mouth. Standing there, pushing him in the game." Telling one of his players to punch an opposing player on the other team in a college basketball game.

Chaney's road back to respect will be a long one — one that may have no destination.

• I did not watch the NBA All–Star game this year. I survived.

• You want proof that the Celtics are a long way from the Bird days. Dee Brown leads the team in scoring.

• The first word that many use to describe Mike Williams would be enigmatic. I'd like to add a few more words — gutsy, very talented and one player truly meant for clutch time. Williams is a player. When he plays, you either think he plays without emotion, or he just remains calm, cool and collected. I'd like to think the latter.

• The Minutewoman basketball team has taken huge strides in the last two years. They have had their weaknesses, mainly their second half play. With experience comes even more improvement and the Minutewomen are young. The second half woes will soon turn into 10–point wins. In due time.

• I heard that Shaq looked more like a hack than a mack after forgetting to pack the attack for the All Star game. I just couldn't resist the cracks, even though I like Shaq.

• The UMass–Temple game was the best I have seen in my one and a half years here. And the Mullins Center is beginning to sound more and more like the Cage once did.

• The Patriots would be crazy not to protect Maurice Hurst.

• The News–22 telecast of the UMass–St. Joe's game gave me the eerie feeling that I was watching a high school game. Something should be done to shape up those toolbox broadcasts.

• Baskerville Holmes — That poor boy, a victim of his own name. Hey, it was catchy. And fun.

• Thumbs up, hats off, a standing ovation, and kudos to Coach Cal for his composure during the press conference last weekend. As I watched him stay calm, all I could think of was Bobby Knight in the same position. I could only imagine.

• The best coverage of the Winter Olympics in Norway has been on Late Show with David Letterman, featuring Dave's Mom. I'll take her over Greg Gumbel any day.

• The basketball shots in the movie Blue Chips are phenomenal.

• I was thinking. Rocky Balboa became the heavyweight champion of the world in an upset almost 15 years ago. Do you know how many fights he lost before he beat Apollo Creed?

• Snoop Dogg wears a Springfield Indians hockey jersey in his latest video. I can picture Snoop in the penalty box.

• I am just waiting for the Red Sox to make another bonehead move.

Say What?

"The conduct engaged in by Coach Chaney after Sunday's game at the University of Massachusetts was outrageous, inexcusable and, indeed criminal in nature."

First Jansen, now Weinbrecht fails to take home medal

LILLEHAMMER, Norway (AP) — In moguls–speak, Donna Weinbrecht planned to "shred" the course.

That was before she got hit by the "bad vision thing," succumbed to an "out–of–body experience" and — worst of all — pulled a "skibble."

Translation: She had an off day.

Weinbrecht, the defending champion and gold medal favorite, slipped to seventh place Wednesday in the finals of the Olympic women's moguls event.

The 28–year–old West Milford, N.J., freestyle skier wasn't even the top American finisher. That honor went to Liz McIntyre, who took the silver medal behind Norway's Stine Lise Hattestad. "I trained so well this week and I was really pumped up," Weinbrecht said. "I don't know what happened when it came time to count. I just got numb and I didn't have the right focus." Her time of 30.79 seconds was only 12th out of 16 competitors. Her score of 5.50 points on the jumps was 15th.

No. 13 Temple 85, St. Bonaventure 56

OLEAN, N.Y. (AP) — Eddie Jones scored 24 points and No. 13 Temple, with coach John Chaney sitting out a school–imposed suspension, beat St. Bonaventure 65–56 last night.

Chaney, who was suspended for one game after threatening Massachusetts coach John Calipari following Temple's 56–55 loss Sunday, didn't make the trip. Assistant coaches Jim Maloney and Dean Demopoulus took his place.

Chaney, who earlier yesterday apologized for confronting Calipari and threatening to kill him, is expected back behind the bench when Temple plays No. 5 Louisville on Sunday in Orlando, Fla.

Temple (18–4, 11–3 Atlantic 10) beat the Bonnies (9–12, 3–8) for the 23rd straight time and for the 28th time in 29 meetings. David Vanterpool led St. Bonaventure with 14 points.

St. Bonaventure cut a 30–23 halftime deficit to 32–30 on Garland Mance's 3–pointer with 16:39 left, but Temple pulled away in the next 4 1/2 minutes.

Jones keyed the surge by scoring six straight points over 1:23 in which the lead climbed to 43–36. His 3–pointer with 4:00 to play gave Temple a 57–45 lead.

The game was close until Temple, with the country's third–ranked field goal defense, clamped down on the Bonnies.

Calipari looks to move on

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR
Collegian Staff

After three days of concentrating on Temple Coach John Chaney's accusations and barrage of threats against him, Massachusetts men's basketball coach John Calipari said he is ready to put the incident behind him and worry about playing ball.

Calipari spoke to the media yesterday afternoon in the same room in the basement of the William D. Mullins Center where the confrontation between he and Chaney took place just four days earlier. He said he asked for the press conference to put an end to the controversy with the Owl coach so he can do what he is payed to do — coach basketball.

"The reason I wanted to speak to the media today was to put this whole issue to rest. When I'm through speaking today, that will be the last comment about this whole issue to come from my mouth," said Calipari. "So if you ask a question, you are also wasting your breath."

Chaney apologized to Calipari first in a statement on Wednesday, saying, "I apologize to Coach John Calipari, the students, fans and supporters of both Temple University and the University of Massachusetts, all young persons and all others who witnessed all or part of this incident."

Calipari said he received a phone call from Chaney about an hour before he took the podium at the press conference yesterday and they spoke for 15 minutes.

"He [Chaney] was very gracious, he made it a point to tell me that this was an issue about him and not about me," said Calipari. "My comment was, 'We just want to play ball.'

"He was also concerned that my team understands that he does not want them to feel threatened in any way by going to Temple and playing a basketball game."

Massachusetts plays Temple at McGonigle Hall in Philadelphia next Thursday and there was concern from Massachusetts' officials for the safety of the Minutemen, according to Athletic Director Bob Marcum, who addressed the media before Calipari.

Marcum said that persons from both schools have been in close contact all week and he is satisfied with Temple's game–day security and the treatment Calipari and the players will receive at McGonigle Hall.

"I'm convinced that precautions have been taken. I'm convinced that the environment will be as secure as possible. To have 100 percent guarantee... I don't know how you can guarantee something like that," said Marcum.

Calipari agreed with Marcum when asked about the safety of his team and himself, "Society is wacked a little bit right now, but I just don't see that being an issue; plus, I've got a staff around me who are pretty tough individuals who can take a shot for me."

A conference call was held late yesterday afternoon between Massachusetts' Chancellor David K. Scott and Temple President Peter Liacouras to iron out the final details, according to Marcum.

Farrakhan followed by controversy

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

What three things do Louis Farrakhan, Khalid Abdul Muhammad, and Yusef Muhammad have in common lately?

Controversy, Controversy, Controversy.

Yesterday, officials from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Anti–Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith met in New York to discuss their relationship in the wake of a controversy stemming from anti–Semitic remarks made by Khalid Abdul Muhammad, the top aide to Nation of Islam leader Rev. Louis Farrakhan.

The talks came from a controversial speech made by Muhammad on Nov. 29, 1993 at Keane College in Union, New Jersey in which the Associated Press reported that he called Jewish people the "bloodsuckers of the black community." Muhammad also called the Pope a "no good... cracker."

He also said that he "would never make light of your pain and suffering," when he referred to the six million Jewish people killed during the Holocaust. "We lost 250 million people on slave ships. We have not only undergone a Holocaust, but we paid a hell of a cost."

Farrakhan denounced Muhammad in a press conference in Washington D.C. last week for his statements and removed him from his job as national assistant but refused to denounce Muhammad's "truths" on the Jewish role in the antebellum slave trade.

Muhammad denied a rift between himself and Farrakhan and compared the relationship to that between Malcolm X and Elijah Muhammad. The Associated Press reported Farrakhan as saying at State University of New York–Buffalo, "there is no division here. There is no split here; sorry to disappoint you guys."

The controversy surrounding Muhammad led to a cancellation of his scheduled Feb. 8 speech at Emory University, but the University of Florida kept the invitation open and drew approximately 800 students. The speeches recently scheduled were in honor of Black History Month.

Khalid Abdul Muhammad spoke at Kent State University in Ohio on Feb.14, drawing nearly 3,000 people in a 1,000– person capacity ballroom. The Daily Kent Stater reported a delay of one hour and 15 minutes because of metal detectors. The speech drew a signifi cant amount of protestors and a "full security force" was ready for any problems that might occur.

Rev. Yusef Muhammad was scheduled to speak at Brandeis University last week but cancelled due to illness in a wake of student protests.

"It was the decision of the students to invite him," said Michal Rosenberg, the Vice President of Public Affairs at Brandeis University. "A university exists to be a free exchange of ideas."

Louis Farrakhan, the leader of the Nation of Islam spoke at the University of Massachusetts in 1988 and brought with him a throng of controversy.

Farrakhan says that his comments have been distorted by the media and that he has been quoted out of context. Farrakhan will be speaking on March 10.

Panel discusses Afro–Am politics

CHRIS RAGUSA / COLLEGIAN

African–American party politics was discussed last night on campus.

By JON MORRIS
Collegian Correspondent

Last night in the Campus Center, the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority presented a panel discussion on African Americans and political parties.

The panelists included John Bracey of the University of Massachusetts department of Afro–American studies, George Parks, co–chairperson of the Amherst Republican Committee, and William Strickland of the department of Afro–American studies. Strickland is also the author of Malcolm X: Make It Plain.

The panelists discussed different events and people involved in the history of politics and ideas for Black involvement in politics.

Parks stressed the need for young people to get involved in politics. "If you don't do politics, politics will do you," said Parks. She urged young people to use their minds, voices and votes to help in the process of political change. According to Parks, the Republican Party is attempting to make itself more attractive to the Black constituency.

Students attend S.U.D. festivities

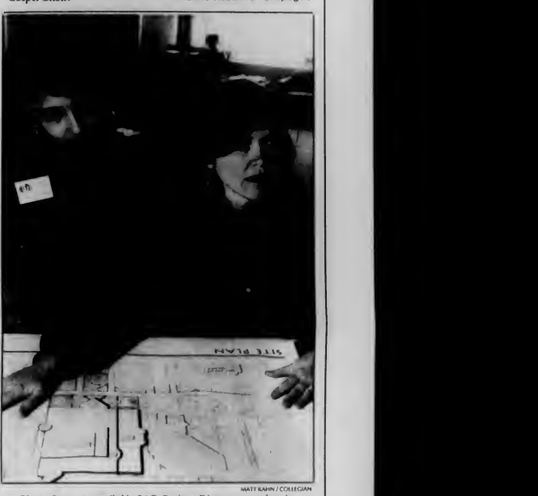
Students pushing through the Student Union yesterday toward the tunnel to the Campus Center, were stopped short by falling t–shirts, which were being thrown down into the building's lobby from the third floor every half hour, as part of the annual Student Union Day celebration.



The festivities of Student Union Day included musical performances by Louis Gonzalez, ragtime pianist; Alwynne Mentos, steel drums; Douglas Walker, pianist; and the University of Massachusetts Gospel Choir.

Lynne Thompson, an interior design student who chose to do her master's thesis on the Student Union building, was amazed to see a contest to "Design the Student Union of the Future."

Thompson, who has been working on future designs for the building for more than six months, won the $50 first–place prize and the opportunity to have her designs displayed in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday.

As an employee of the University Health Services, Thompson included health facilities in her lower level plans. She stressed the importance of

Bosnian Serbs withdraw

Response to ultimatum should prevent air strikes

By TONY SMITH
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina — Convoys of Bosnian Serb artillery withdrew from the hills around Sarajevo on Thursday in compliance with a NATO ultimatum to pull back or be bombed. "We do think the war in Sarajevo is finally over," Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said.

The pullout reported by U.N. monitors followed a pledge by Karadzic to meet NATO's Sunday deadline. He made the concession under pressure from Russia.

Karadzic spoke with reporters after meeting with Vitaly Churkin, Russia's special envoy, in Pale, the Bosnian Serb stronghold southeast of Sarajevo.

Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, a U.N. spokesman in the shell–shattered Bosnian capital, would not specify what sort of equipment was being withdrawn, but said "we're talking heavy weapons."

"Literally they're moving out in convoys, not in individual vehicles," he said. "Clearly there's a major withdrawal going on."

He said U.N. monitors saw convoys of equipment moving off the hills, and U.N. commanders received information that withdrawals meeting NATO conditions would be completed within 36 hours. It was the first significant Serb withdrawal of heavy guns since NATO issued its ultimatum Feb. 9.

NATO has said all heavy guns within a 13–mile radius of Sarajevo must be removed or placed under U.N. control by Sunday or face NATO bombardment. Serbs have relentlessly shelled the city from their positions in the surrounding hills for nearly two years.

U.N. and NATO officials earlier reported foot–dragging by the Serbs. Aikman called the quickening pace of Serb withdrawals "a very heartening sign."

VIVA to co–sponsor conference

By DAVE COPELAND
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts group, Volunteers Involved in Vital Action (VIVA), will co–sponsor a community service conference in conjunction with the Chancellor's Office on Feb. 23 in the Campus Center.

The conference, which will feature a keynote address by City Year In Boston executive Gregory Ricks, will be broken into two parts. The afternoon sessions will open with remarks by Chancellor David K. Scott and four working groups which will focus on issues in community service work. The evening program will include a Community Service Award Dinner where Scott will present awards to 12 outstanding volunteers from the campus community.

In regards to community service, Lori McKinney, the director of the VIVA program, said, "The idea behind the conference is to come together as a campus and say this is where we are, and this is where we should be."

VIVA was formed two years ago to coordinate volunteer efforts at UMass. The VIVA office coordinates a weekly meeting among different groups on campus that are actively involved with community service. The VIVA office in Machmer E–25 also provides listings of volunteer opportunities to students interested in doing community service work.

"The office was created with the intent of making community service a visible and big part of the campus," said McKinney. "To think of 20,000 students with no formal program to do community service is not right."

In addition to the Conference next week, VIVA is sponsoring several other volunteer efforts this month. Last week they sponsored a Volunteer Fair in the Campus Center that allowed students to explore volunteer efforts with 40 different agencies. Currently, they are sponsoring "Fill A Bus" in front of the Student Union, where they hope to fill an entire school bus with donations to local shelters.

"Students can donate anything: games, toys, food, clothes. It all goes to shelters," said McKinney.

On Feb. 26, VIVA will sponsor a trip to four Springfield homeless shelters where student volunteers will participate in a variety of projects to fix up the shelters. The work projects will be followed by a reception at the Salvation Army.

Students interested in VIVA can contact McKinney at 545– 3368 or visit the VIVA office in Machmer E25.

Princeton cartoon stirs debate

By LINDA A. JOHNSON
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — Debate on racism and free speech is raging at Princeton University, since the student newspaper ran a cartoon mocking a prominent professor of religion and Afro–American studies.

The cartoon's target, departing director of Afro–American studies Cornel R. West, didn't find it malicious, but other faculty and students attending a campus forum said they were angry and hurt.

Princeton ombudsman Wilbur Hicks, who helped organize Wednesday night's forum, said none of the nearly 100 people attending the forum questioned The Daily Princetonian's right to print junior Wentworth Miller's cartoon. But Hicks said many were upset the paper's editors apparently gave little thought to the meaning of and likely response to the cartoon.

"Did it raise the degree of racial tension (on campus)? Probably not as much as it raised the level of concern about insensitivity to things like this," Hicks said.

The Feb. 9 cartoon depicts a white, female Harvard junior headed to her first Afro–American studies class next fall, taught by "newly–purchased Dr. Cornel West." West is then depicted telling the class, "Today's lecture is entitled, 'Rhythm — Why None of You Have It and What You Can Do to Get It."

West, author of the best–selling "Race Matters" and numerous other books and articles on race, religion, politics and philosophy, will leave Princeton this fall to teach Afro–American studies and philosophy of religion at Harvard University, where he earned his bachelor's degree.

A letter in Wednesday's Princetonian signed by 40 students and faculty, including Nobel Prize winner Toni Morrison, criticized the cartoon as demeaning.

Princetonian editor Buster Kantrow said the paper stands by its decision to run the cartoon but should have made clear it was not the opinion of the editors.

"We shy away from restricting speech except within very broad bounds and we didn't feel that the cartoon exceeded those bounds," he said.

Miller, an English major from Pittsburgh, said Thursday he was sorry for inadvertently stepping on toes and didn't mean to demean Afro–American studies or West. He said one of the best courses he's taken was West's Introduction to Afro–American Studies in spring 1992.

mainly on the idea of the need for a political party run by Blacks to accurately represent Black concerns. He said that people of other ethnicities would be welcome to join the party, but the focus would be on the agenda of Black issues.

According to Bracey, this party is necessary because a party run by Whites does not accurately represent the Black community and also cannot focus acutely enough on the issues and problems in that community.

"We need to dispel the notion of a two-party system," said Bracey while discussing the history of independent parties in American politics.

Strickland discussed many of the obstacles that minorities and supporters of change face. "We had high hopes, but we didn't know what we were up against," he said. He also spoke of ways that Blacks and other minorities could effectively use their political power and their votes to bring about change.

All of the panelists fielded questions from the audience, and they had several ideas in common with each other. The panelists also stressed the need for involvement by this generation and including the viewpoints of people of all races in political decisions.

Taking stock in AT&T Challenge

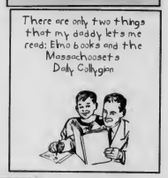
By JAMES FINLAW
Collegian Correspondent

The AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge is a nationwide educational stock trading competition which allows students to gain real-world experience in the fields of investing and finance, without risking real money.

Players start with a fictional $500,000 account and use a toll-free 800 number to track more than 9,000 stocks on the AMEX, NYSE and NASDAQ exchanges. Students execute their buy and sell orders through a staff of brokers who provide real-time quotes and individual portfolio information.

The competition offers two divisions, one for students and one for professors. For an entry fee of $39.95, participants receive a comprehensive game package with rules and instructions, an official stock listing guide and a transaction ledger to assist them in keeping track of their portfolios.

Participants also receive a monthly personal account statement and competition newsletter, providing them with information on their individual portfolios and the event in general.



While building stock portfolios, participants also become eligible to win $20,000 in cash and prizes. The leaders of the competition will be published weekly in USA Today. Collegiate Investment Challenge campus representative Alan Weinfeld says that "this type of recognition is a great resume booster, and great publicity for UMass."

Last semester, the UMass student team placed 12th in the nation, and ninth the previous year. Senior finance major Mike Ronconi, who participated in the competition last semester, called it a "pretty good experience," one that provided him with "a good overview of the economy."

Students and professors interested in participating in the Collegiate Investment Challenge should call (800) 545-1975, Ext. 12 or call the on campus representative, Alan Weinfeld, at 546-3580.

News from other "U's"

Compiled by Dan Wetzel

I say potato

Universities love having cultural centers and the University of Minnesota is no different. The 39,000-student campus in Minneapolis has cultural centers for blacks, Asian-Americans, Indians, Hispanics, Gays and Lesbians and disabled students.

So what's one more, right?

Conservative students at the "U," as the University is known in the land of a thousand lakes, are fighting to establish their own center, the J. Danforth Quayle Traditional Family Values Cultural Center (or the JDQTFVCC for short).

The center would provide, according to the center's proposed constitution, "a forum for the traditional American family values espoused by our former Vice President." Those values being, "fidelity, chastity, sobriety, self- restraint, self-discipline, self-reliance and responsibility."

Chastity? Sobriety? You can bet the JDQTFVCC will throw the absolute worst Christmas party on campus.

"Basically what we are trying to do is build a network so the conservative elements on campus know that we're here," said Orlando Ochoada, who is president of the movement.

Ochoada is having trouble getting funded though, as a student government subcommittee has opposed spending student dollars.

What a Mutt

Someone is ripping the pictures and the centerfold out of certain magazines in a public library in Salem, Oregon.

Is a pubescent teenage boy getting at Playboy or the Sports Illustrated swimsuit edition? Hardly.

According to the Oregon Daily Emerald, the student newspaper at the University of Oregon, the pictures are of dogs and cats from the magazines, Cat Fancy and Dog Fancy.

Library workers are unsure why the magazines are being ripped apart and they've noticed no suspicious canines roaming through the periodical section. However, at the suggestion of McGruff the Crime Dog, the two magazines will now be kept behind the counter.

The library has for a year received Playboy only on microfilm, because each issue was invariably stolen.

"I guess you could say that we've gotten to the point that we are really buying it only for the articles," said one library worker.

Chancellor Bertovich?

If any university around the country is looking for a new chancellor, they may need to look no further than the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Part of the job description of being a chancellor is having absolutely no backbone when it comes to handling controversial situations, and A-10 Commissioner Ron Bertovich fits in nicely.

Bertovich, long known as one of the weakest league commissioners in college sports, has shown his courage is just as weak as his administrative skills.

For the actions of Temple basketball coach John Chaney, which the local district attorney's office called, "outrageous, inexcusable and indeed criminal in nature," Bertovich decided to not punish Chaney.

Unbelievable.

Right after the ugly confrontation, most members of the media, from both Temple and UMass, joked that if any person was spineless enough to let Chaney off the hook, Bertovich was that person. People laughed, never thinking that he would actually do it.

No wonder Bill Cosby likes the A-10, its commissioner has a backbone made of Jello.

UMass staff certified for work safety

By C. S. WARREN
Collegian Correspondent

The staff of University of Massachusetts Central Receiving was certified yesterday for dealing with hazardous materials.

As of May 15, 1992, all employees who deal with hazardous materials were required by the Federal Department of Transportation to undergo special training. At UMass, hazardous materials range from large quantities of bleach to special chemicals for the science departments on campus.

Linda Koscinski, supervisor of Central Receiving, said the main purpose of the training was to familiarize the workers with the labeling of packages to increase safety and ease cleanup if a chemical spill or other accident should occur.

Workers were trained in identifying and categorizing gases, explosives, and poisons by the labeling and numbering on the packages.

The labels tell what cleanup procedures will be necessary in case of an accident.

Koscinski said she was glad her employees are being recognized for their efforts, which consisted of eight sessions, each taking two hours of what would have been work time.

"Our drivers have had to sacrifice their delivery time to attend these training sessions, and things have had to be late, and we've been criticized," she said.

Sandy Anderson, director of administrative services, who presented the certificates, told the employees, "This was the right thing to do," and the training was "for your safety and the safety of everybody else on campus."

Anderson also said Central Receiving was the only group of employees on campus with this training, since they have responsibilities unique on campus.

Central Receiving handles packages coming into the university containing everything from hazardous chemicals to office supplies and sports equipment.

New program to help rape survivors

The Counselor/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center is sponsoring a 10-week support group for rape survivors. The group will begin meeting on Mar. 10 and will meet on Thursdays from 7 - 9 p.m.

Cat Chapin will be facilitating the group. Chapin is a licensed independent social worker and is on staff at the Franklin County Mental Health Association. She is also in private practice as a therapist specializing in women's issues.

The group will discuss such matters as anger, isolation, grief, blame, intimacy and distrust. The program is free, open to the community and confidential.

New financial aid hotline available

Senator Shannon P. O'Brien has recently announced that the Massachusetts Higher Education Information Center now has a toll free hotline for persons needing information and advice on applying for financial aid.

The center will be open Monday through Saturday. They will have trained counselors ready to answer any questions or problems. They will also be there to mail financial aid brochures to students who call in.

Education award given to professor

The 1993 career achievement award was given to University of Massachusetts professor of education Ronald K. Hambleton by the National Council on Measurement in Education.

The award recognized Hambleton's work in psychometric theory, his practice and his training of professionals in psychological and educational measurement.

He has been teaching at UMass since 1969 and also holds a position in the department of psychology. Hambleton has two books scheduled for release later this year titled "International Perspectives on Academic Achievement" and "Handbook on Item Response Theory."

Faculty take part in conferences

Several people from the department of mathematics and statistics at the University of Massachusetts have lectured and participated in conferences during the month of January.

Assistant Professor Robert Kusner gave a colloquium at the University of Texas at Austin on "Attractive and Repulsive Energies for Embedded Surfaces."

Professor Mary K. Bennett lectured on "Test Spaces and Orthoalgebras" at Baylor University in Waco, TX.

Professor Robert Gardner spoke at colloquia at Brigham Young University and the University of Utah.

Signs emerged that in the face of lukewarm Russian support of Serb defiance over the last few days, the pullouts began even before the Pale meeting Thursday. Aikman said he suspected the withdrawals have "been going on for over the past 24 hours."

President Clinton told reporters in Washington earlier Thursday, "I hope the air strikes will not be necessary, and they will not occur if the Serbs will comply."

The Russians have been the most powerful ally of the Serbs, their fellow Slavs and Orthodox Christians. Karadzic's promise, coming after the meeting with the Russian envoy, appeared to reflect Serb acceptance that Moscow had reluctantly lined up behind NATO to prevent Western involvement in the war.

Bosnian Serb generals railed against the NATO ultimatum in a reflection of the frustration of having to pull back and lose battlefield advantage. They have defied Karadzic before, and it was unclear if they would honor promises made by their political leadership.

"We are openly telling everyone in case of air strikes, all foreigners who find themselves on our territory will become hostages," Gen. Manojlo Milovanovic, Bosnian Serb army chief of staff, said in an interview published Friday.

"bringing some of those needs to the students."

Other changes included elevators to improve handicap access, more automatic teller machines, a pharmacy in the Mini-Store, an atrium facing the pond side of the building and a Zen meditation gravel area.

Gloria Santa Anna, a graduate intern at the Student Activities Office (SAO), was in charge of planning Student Union Day. She said she was particularly excited by Thompson's designs for the future which were displayed in the Cape Cod Lounge next to a display of photos from 1957, the year the Student Union was built.

Margaret Arsenault, an advisor at SAO, said the Student Union was built in the 1950s at a time when the University was attended by only about six thousand students.

Craft Center employee Brian Fuller demonstrated a skill he learned there — silversmithing. Other demonstrations included silk painting, pottery and stained glass making.

Calipari does UMass proud

The issue: Temple coach John Chaney's outburst has focused national attention on the conduct of college basketball coaches.

Our opinion: University of Massachusetts men's basketball coach John Calipari has handled this difficult situation extremely well.

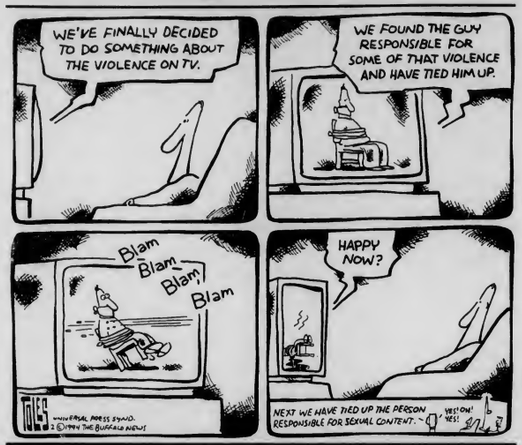
"I'm glad we can put this behind us, move on, and I can go back to coaching my basketball team." — John Calipari, speaking about the controversy caused by Temple coach John Chaney's conduct last Sunday.

Much has been written over the past week about the conduct of Temple University men's basketball coach John Chaney in the Mullins Center last Sunday, but not enough has been said about University of Massachusetts coach John Calipari.

During and since Chaney's unprovoked outburst after the Minutemen's 56–55 victory over the Temple Owls, Calipari has remained composed and has done his best to put the incident behind him and the UMass basketball program.

When Chaney made violent threats and accusations during a post–game press conference immediately following the game last Sunday, Calipari kept his cool and refused to get into a shouting match.

When the District Attorney's office in Northampton issued a statement which said, "The conduct engaged in by Coach John Chaney after Sunday's game at the University of Massachusetts was outrageous, inexcusable and indeed criminal in nature," Calipari informed them that he would not press charges in the interests of putting the matter to rest.



When Atlantic 10 Conference commissioner Ron Bertovich refused to add further disciplinary measures to the slap on the wrist of a one–game suspension imposed by Temple president Peter Liacouras, Calipari said he respected the decision of the league.

When a belated but heartfelt apology was finally made by Chaney on Wednesday, Calipari accepted it graciously and said he considered the issue closed.

Throughout what must have been a very trying situation for Calipari, he has exhibited the type of sportsmanship which is often lacking in college athletics today.

The rematch between the Minutemen and the Owls will take place next Thursday night in Philadelphia. The final score in that game, however, is not important. As long as John Calipari is the coach, the University of Massachusetts has already won.

GSS member opposes takeover

To the editor:

As a student leader, and in the capacity of a Graduate Student Senator, I wish to formally apologize to the employees of the Admissions Center for the incident last Friday.

While I am personally aware of the outrageous cost of this institution, and while I agree that far too many deserving students are being denied the opportunity of an education because of the cost, this Senator can not and will not support, condone or encourage actions which I consider to be little more than terrorist attacks.

Although I support the free speech rights of all persons, including those with whom I disagree, the views recently expressed by Shyamala Ivatury ["Graduates support building takeover," Collegian, Feb. 15] are in sharp contrast with my own. I must also state that the GSS has never had an opportunity to discuss this incident, let alone adopt a formal position relative to it.

I would further note that the greatest tragedy of this entire affair is that student leaders probably would have received support from the Admissions staff had they not sought to terrorize them.

Protestors explain their actions

To the editor:

In response to all the Admissions employees' comments about the protestors in the Collegian ["Admissions staff responds to protestors," Feb. 15], why do you keep thinking the event last Friday was a personal attack at Admissions and yourselves? I didn't know you before this happened and I was not interested in going through your mail, personal property or even "handling" your family pictures. I was there to save my future.

Of course those of you who are living comfortably under the blanket of your Admissions jobs wouldn't understand the actions of people who do not have that security. We don't even know if we are going to be able to continue our education here. What meant a day's disruption for you — because that's all it was, not a terrorist attack — meant a year's difference to me.

It seems that the biggest issue for Admissions employees was not that students had to take desperate measures to be heard by Chancellor Scott, but that we actually had the nerve to go into their building and drink their coffee.

Just like you, the students were equally fearful of what the results would be. Unlike you, we were warned of the harsh consequences such as shutting of the heat, having no food and facing arrest. We were even instructed not to steal or destroy anything for the simple reason that such actions would give the authorities permission to throw tear gas at us. Trust me, it was not in any way the party you describe it to be.

Don't cry over spilt milk. With the exceptions of people who did use the phones and computers, and those who did drink the coffee and maybe ate some of that left–over cheese from a past office party, all the Admissions employees really lost was a half–day of work.

I was actually there, and I can vouch for the fact that you are not entirely the victims you portray yourselves to be. A certain Ms. Cash, Director of Admissions, forgot to mention in her letter that while we were supposedly harassing her colleagues, she was doing a little harassing of her own.

There were more than a handful of witnesses when Cash started threatening a student who wanted to go into an office to use the phone. Later on in the day Cash, the supposed victim, was happily eating pizza that had been paid for by the Graduate Student Senate for the protestors, not her.

And by the way, we were cleaning offices until 4 o'clock in the morning so you could come to work the next day without having to worry about it — that's how much we didn't care.

Patient complains about UHS video

To the editor:

A funny thing happened while I was waiting for "urgent care" at University Health Services. Actually, two funny things.

Funny thing No. 1: Approximately 10 or 15 people were sitting in the waiting area, most were reading. An attendant came into the room and put a tape into the VCR. I was trying to get some work done and the tape was an annoyance. I perceived that I was not alone in this opinion, so I asked if anyone actually wanted to watch the tape. No one did, so I turned it off.

A few minutes later, the attendant returned and put the tape back in. I informed her that none of us wanted to watch it and asked if she could please leave it off. She refused.

"But none of us want to watch it," I pled.

The attendant replied only that she "was told" to put it in. Just following orders, I guess. I did not pursue the matter any further, although I wish I had.

Funny thing No. 2: The tape we were forced to watch began with three separate commercials — almost infomercials — for the Chrysler Corporation. After a good five minutes of propaganda, the "real" show began: the quest for Olympic gold, focusing of course on the hard work, honesty and glory of U.S. Olympic teams (with a jab or two at those cheating, evil Russians). More propaganda.

Since when is Health Services in the business of instilling the virtues of capitalism, competition and nationalism among already sick or injured students?

Student defends WMUA policy

To the editor:

I have deepest sympathies for Mr. Martin Brown's feelings after being fired by WMUA ["UMass needs student radio," Collegian, Feb. 14]. Being canned from anything is a big blow to one's self–esteem. Mr. Brown is correct, all is not fair at WMUA. However, personnel policy is not my beef.

If WMUA dedicated itself solely to what the "students" to whom Mr. Brown refers want to hear, we'd be playing at all hours artists such as U2, Nirvana, INXS, the Cranberries, REM and Snoop Dogg. Whatever one thinks of this so– called college rock, it is omnipresent at all times on other spots on the FM dial.

As WMUA is funded by the University and the annual telethon, it is not beholden to the commercial interests which control stations which accept paid advertising. That's the difference. We can play music that can be heard nowhere but on non–commercial stations.

WMUA is at its best when it provides exposure for artists who dedicate their lives to jazz, blues, folk and avant–garde musics. As WMUA is a University station, it is also obligated to use its 1000 watts to edify. We program several hours a day of music from cultures around the world.

I'm sorry Mr. Brown feels so much contempt for polka. What he probably doesn't realize is the dedication the Eastern European community has to WMUA; a dedication evidenced by the sizeable contribution they made to our telethon last year.

Lillehammer remembers '84

The 1994 Olympic Games in Lillehammer have begun, marking a renewed period of world–wide athletic excellence. From the power of speed skating to the grace of ice dancing, the Olympic Games represent a gathering of nations in friendly competition. Whole nations gleefully support their Olympians, and the judge's stop watches determine the victors, not the force of armies.

Anyone witnessing the latest opening ceremonies can attest to this spirit of friendship and appreciation. The host Norwegians didn't heckle the Swedes, or criticize the Russians, or laugh at the single athlete from Senegal. Instead, they cheered loudly and warmly, making the ice and snow feel as cozy as a chair by the fireplace.

> Perhaps we have drifted too far from the original spirit of each Olympiad. At some point, the emphasis changed from winning a medal to winning a contract with Disney.
> A.J. Stewart

Sadly, the loudest cheers came for Juan Antonio Samaranch, head of the International Olympic Committee. The applause came after Samaranch powerfully implored Muslims and Serbs in Bosnia to "Drop your guns. Please, drop your guns."

Only ten years earlier, Sarajevo hosted these same Olympic Games. They, too, once knew the magic of world unity, the wonder of foreign cultures, and the satisfaction of a hard–fought victory. Now they know death, hatred and a stalemate — with neither side having anything left to win. In the past two years, 22,000 people have died in Sarajevo alone.

The great majority of the deaths in the former Yugoslavia have been innocent civilians whose only crime has been walking to the store or trying to go to work. Many of these people once embraced the world with cheers. This winter must seem much colder to them by comparison. These once gracious hosts have now developed a frozen spirit, and even the United Nations might not be able to thaw it.

Bosnia–Herzegovina is being remembered at these Lillehammer games, with references to the plight of Sarajevo made throughout the opening ceremonies. Many people are wearing white–ribboned "Olympic Truce" buttons depicting the rings of Olympic unity and a dove. The organizers wearing these buttons are showing that they understand the true power of these Games.

It is not to find out who can ski jump the furthest or slalom adeptly. It is about the entire world coming together to applaud its athletes, to discover the culture of the host country and other participants, and to be a part of something enduring — symbolized by the Olympic torch.

When nations boycotted the Moscow and Los Angeles Games, as great as some of the performances were, many considered them disappointing. Political problems kept many in the world from enjoying a simple game. Eerily, Sarajevo once delighted in these competitions. I wonder if anyone is playing in Bosnia.

Samaranch displayed his priorities by using his weight as head of the IOC to call for the cease–fire during the Games. He also left Lillehammer and all its wonder for a two–day visit to the shelled city of Sarajevo. He could have surrounded himself with the cheers and gratitude of those enthralled with the Olympics. Instead, he chose to experience the horror first–hand, with the hope that the next time Bosnian Serbs and Muslims fight, it will be in an ice rink or on a mountain side. Samaranch is displaying the promise of the Games to the world; as 1996 hosts in Atlanta, will we have his priorities? I'm not sure.

Perhaps we have drifted too far from Athens and the original spirit of each Olympiad. At some point, the emphasis changed from winning a medal to winning a contract with Disney.

I would like to point out that these are not the Nancy Kerrigan Games, nor is it the Tonya Harding Festival. These Olympics are not about failure, the spill of Dan Jansen or the crash of Duncan Kennedy. They gave years to their respective sports and must be considered successes for trying their best and coming up short. The Olympics give us a chance to watch performances that rise to another level of perfection. The 1980 Olympic Hockey Team, Alberta Tomba, Kristi Yamaguchi. They are the true champions of our time.

In the darkness of a Sarajevo night, there is a small, lingering fire. It is the memory of a flame that once burned there, inspiring millions to achieve something more than they could have imagined before. That light faces a systematic enemy, one who threatens to steal away a people's most sacred possession: hope. We watch Lillehammer, but we cannot forget Sarajevo. Their children deserve a chance to play.

Marley hits the hall; Buckley appears

COURTESY ASSOCIATED BOOKING CO.

The Wailers helped groove master Bob Marley make it to the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame.

This past month, Bob Marley was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and quite deservedly so. All personal attachments that I have to particular songs aside, I have rarely found anyone who actually dislikes his music, including my musak–loving mother. He and The Wailers produced a world–wide groove that everyone can slide into and enjoy...

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY

A few weeks ago, public television broadcasted a live performance of former Fleetwood Mac songwriter–guitarist Lindsey Buckingham, in which he proved to be an incredible pop–rock troubadour. Whether or not you like the Mac, when he and his other two guitarists ripped into an extended encore of "Go Your Own Way," it was pure guitar heaven, and it was hard not to be enthralled. Groups like The Gin Blossoms, The Judybats and Counting Crows would do well to take note.

North Carolina's The Veldt have released a new album called Afrodisiac which contains some of the most unique new music I have heard in a while. The combination of angelic, dreamy guitars (they are big fans of the Cocteau Twins) and a soulful groove is very alluring. While the lead singer's voice seems occasionally out of place, the music alone makes the album worth a listen.

Does anybody remember the Manchester scene? You know, that thing where bands like The Happy Mondays, Inspiral Carpets, Primal Scream and The Charlatans made sixties–like guitar rock and played it over a thick hip– hop beat? That whole musical style wore out its welcome before you could even yawn, and thankfully so. It wouldn't have been long until every goofball with an ear for catchy riffs would have bought a drum machine and had a hit.

The latest critically acclaimed techno album by Aphex Twin, features a song with a lovely piano intro, a smooth beat, and a sample of what sounds a lot like..um, well, flatulence. It is a gross sample of ugly white noise that could elicit giggles from the most mature listener...

In its never ending quest to discover "the next big thing", the music industry has turned it's money hungry eyes towards singer/songwriter Jeff Buckley. Son of old folky Tim Buckley who pioneered folk in the '60s, and already a staple on the coffee house circuit, it would seem this young bohemian would be destined for stardom. That is why it is unfortunate that his debut e.p. Live At Sine is a virtual twenty minute snooze–a–thon. Plagued by a voice that recalls

Embodied love pays a local visit

Cowboy Junkies to play at Amherst

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

The lead singer of the Cowboy Junkies, Margo Timmins is like the vocal equivalent of reclining in a comfy chair and being thwapped with soft pillows.

Monty Python metaphors aside, Timmins' sweet low– keyed vocal approach is seriously beautiful.

Credit can also be attributed to talented brother Michael Timmins, the Junkies' main songwriter, lyricist and guitarist.

The Timmins two are responsible for some frankly provocative and critically hailed musicianship.

On Pale Sun, Crescent Moon, the welcomed followup to The Trinity Sessions, the Junkies (rounded out by drummer and brother Steve Timmins and bassist Alan Auton) sketch a multi–faceted portrait of the timeless elements of love — passion, affection and anxiety. Few bands have so completely embodied love.

This type of passion is what has so endeared the Junkies to the public.

Fortunateiy for the public, the Timmins take their act on the road every so often.

And fortunately this latest trip includes Amherst College's Valentine Hall this Sunday. Unfortunately though, it's soldout so cali your favorite Amherst Jeff and offer bribes.

Nevertheless, for those fortunate enough to snag a ticket, the wispy harmonics of the Cowboy Junkies are sure to sooth.

Sorry kids, this one's soldout, maybe the walls of Amherst College's Valentine Hall are thin. For the record, showtime is 8 p.m.

Campus organization holds AIDS benefit

By RODERICK BELTRAN
Collegian Corespondent

On Sunday the Greenough House Council, in conjunction with S.A.K.E (Souls Aligned with Kinetic Energy) will be sponsoring an AIDS benefit concert. S.A.K.E has been associated with many good causes over the last couple of years. Last year the group organized a can drive, the proceeds of which was used to support several local women's shelters.

A talk on the phone with Greenough House Council and event representative Jon Feld shed some light on what can be expected for all those who attend on Sunday at 8 p.m. The door charge is $3 which will go to various AIDS related causes, like AIDS support groups, clinics and counseling chapters in the surrounding area.

Three bands have already been confirmed for the event while others are still scheduled to be announced the day of the event. The three bands are Hell No, Appie Seed and Garden Variety. Musically the bands are described as ranging from the progressive, alternative, punk and hard– core genres.

According to Feld this is but one of many cause related events that can be expected from the Greenough House Council. Besides more rock shows, a classical ensemble and jazz show are in the works and already coming up is a poetry reading tentatively scheduled at the end of February.

UMass faculty to shoot for scholarships

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

Anyone who thinks that the Men's Basketball team's rematch with St. Joseph's will be the fiercest competition at the Mullins Center next Tuesday, is mistaken.

At half time, faculty members from six different UMass colleges and schools will square-off in the "Great Academic Shootout," a foul-shooting contest to compete for $4,500 dollars in scholarship money for students in their respective schools.

"I wonder what it's going to feel like for them to have to go out there and sink a foul shot in front of several thousand people," said event-organizer Eileen Stewart, Assistant Dean of Students.

"I'm not sure if this will be more of a nightmare or fantasy for the faculty, but they are good sports for taking part, and it's for a good cause."

Each faculty member will shoot five free throws, with a three-shot shootout in the event of a tie. If contestants are still tied, they will shoot an additional three shots from the three-point line to determine the winner.

The victorious faculty member will receive a $1,000 scholarship for a student in his school, with $900 for second-place, $800 for third, $700 for fourth, $600 for fifth and $500 for sixth-place.

According to Stewart, the "odds on favorite" will be English professor John Edgar Wideman, who is representing the College of Humanities and Fine Arts in the contest.

Wideman, who was captain of the University of Pennsylvania basketball team in the early 1960s and a member of the Philadelphia Big Five Basketball Hall of Fame, is guardedly optimistic about his chances.

"I haven't missed a foul shot in 15 years, but of course I haven't taken too many either," he said.

Assistant Professor of Accounting and information Systems, Dennis Hanno, representing the School of Management, refuses to count out any of the contestants.

"When you're only shooting 5 shots, anything can happen," said Hanno.

"I can't imagine more fun than being yelled at by 9,000 people."

Chancellor David Scott contributed $1,000 to the scholarship fund, Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin contributed $500, with $500 coming from the dean of each of the participating schools and colleges as well.

Hanno feels that the success of the UMass basketball program can be credited to academic departments.

"The basketball program has brought a lot of enthusiasm to UMa s; the school's reputation has grown nationally because of the program. It's good to spread this enthusiasm into the academic area. Linking academics and athletics will benefit both areas," said Hanno.

The dean of each of the participating schools and colleges will select a student from their area to receive a scholarship, with the names of the students to be announced at the end of the contest.

Psychology professor Keith Rayner will compete for the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, with Education Professor George Urch representing the School of Education.

Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration Associate professor Rodney Warnick will compete for the College of Food and Natural Resources, and Mathematics and Statistics Assistant professor Nate Whitaker is representing the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

Women soldiers stifled

"Glass ceiling" said to exist within U.S. military

By KARA MATSON
Collegian Correspondent

A civil liberties activist and lawyer told an audience at Mount Holyoke College on Tuesday that although the numbers of women in the U.S. Armed Forces are increasing, a "glass ceiling" still exists.

"The United States military is admitting women in larger numbers and will continue to do so," said Stephanie Levin in a lecture entitled "Warriors and Citizens: Feminist Perspectives on Military Service. Women are still excluded from ground combat forces, leaving less job accessibility for women in the Army than in the Navy or Air Force, with 67, 90 and 99 percent accessibility, respectively.

"Women who are active in the military have been challenging the glass ceiling on women's positions," said Levin, whose mother was in the U.S. military during World War I.

One recent development for women in the military is Shannon Faulkner's admittance into The Citadel, a military academy that, up until now, was all-male. Levin considers Faulkner's fighting to attend The Citadel a paradox. "Faulkner's fight is extremely radical, but on the other hand, women have been excluded from military schools for too long," said Levin. "What is happening at The Citadel is wonderful."

Another woman who tried to gain admittance to the Virginia Military Institute four years ago was denied. She sued, but lost her case on the grounds that military schools breed "a special kind of leadership and character" by the existence of a hierarchy between classes and a barrack system that allows no privacy. There is opposition to creating a women's military school at Mary Baldwin College.

"The concept of the soldier as a leader is pervasive in our society," said Levin, "But the gender wall which once divided the soldier, the warrior, and the citizen has been breached." Veterans, most of whom are men, have been given preference to jobs. Also, being a war hero has been beneficial in running for political office.

The Clinton administration is working to open more positions for women in the military. According to Levin, women now make up 11 percent of the U.S. armed forces, and the Clinton administration is attempting to open up between 15–20,000 positions to women.

"Regardless of the position you take on this issue, more and more young women are going to be interested in these positions. It is happening," said Levin.

"Although it will be slow, there will be backlash, and it will be a long time before we find equality in numbers for women In the military," said Levin, "The movement is definitely in that direction."

(gulp) Robert Plant, and fragile lyrics that walk that fine line between artistic and pretentious, Buckley quickly reestablishes the notion that the world Indeed does not need another folk singer.

In other "hype" news, it seems you can't open a magazine these days without seeing something on The Spinanes. The Northwest duo released their debut album Manos on the Sub Pop earlier this year to critical acclaim, and with good reason. Singer Rebecca Gates' shimmering harmonies mixed with jagged guitar hooks and bombastic drumming make for one of the most refreshing indie–pop albums in quite some time. I can hear the major labels calling now.

You may have noticed that during the commercial for the upcoming movie Reality Bites, the classic '80s hit "My Sharona" by one–hit wonders The Knack is playing in the background. Hmmm, with a growing interest in eighties nostalgia beginning to stir, don't be surprised to see the pop gem resurface at a top forty station near you. Hey, it worked for The Proclaimers.

Well, the line–up for Lollapalooza '94 is just about final. This year the traveling sideshow of alternative music and idea's will include Nirvana, Smashing Pumpkins, The Breeders, and The Beastie Boys. Negotiations are still in the works to try to lure England's finest export The Stone Roses.

Films found below border are treasures

By JORGE MATOS
Collegian Correspondent

On a beautiful Caribbean morning I decided to browse through some of my hometown's bookstores in Old San Juan, Puerto Rico. While turning the pages of a French magazine I came across an article that kept me thinking for the rest of the day.

The article was a review of some of the best Latin American films of 1993. It coincided with what my friends told me as soon as I got home for my winter vacation – of all the great films I had missed in the different film festivals held in Puerto Rico.

For example, 1991's Ariel winner Like Water For Chocolate hit the U.S.A. a couple of years later like a storm, but nothing was heard of another great Mexican film, Cronos of 1993. That same year Mexican director Arturo Rimstein's Principio Y Fin took the grand prize at the San Sebastian Film Festival in Spain. In the meantime, Argentina gave us Tango Feroz, while Colombia offered La Estrategia Del Caraco (or The Snail's Strategy) was hailed as one of the best films of the year everywhere. Another Colombian film worth mentioning, Nieve Tropical (Tropical Snow) presents the problems undergone by those Colombians who risk everything while smuggling drugs into the States.

Cuba not only surprised the world with one if it's best films, but that country's creative power, regardless of its current "special period" and In spite of Mr. Torricelli's intentions, remains untouched. Fresa Y Chocolate (Strawberry and Chocolate), a film denouncing the intolerance of the Castro regime depicts a different Cuba from the one portrayed by our media. This film has gathered an abundant collection of international film prizes, including the Havana Film Festival's grand prize.

This winter I got the chance to see De La Cerda's Cancion Mansa Para Un Pueblo Bravo, one of those ageless movies. However, I missed the works of two other great Venezuelan directors, Sicario by Jose Novoa and Mecanicas Celestes by Fina Torres.

Peruvian Francisco Lombardi gave us Sin Compasion (No Mercy) regardless of the derogation of an old law that protected that country's film industry. In contrast, Chile, with a film industry of 28 private studios and a commitment from the national government, gave the world ten of its best films ever.

The Brazilian Congress, rocked by political scandals and "house cleaning" passed a law protecting and liberating financial resources for its national film industry, which is one of the best in the world. This made possible the absence of films from the Dominican Republic in the different film festivals which was felt by movie fans everywhere.

Puerto Rico, along with Peru is another country lacking governmental protection for its film industry. During this past Christmas season it gave us La Guagua Aerea (The Aerial Bus). This film is about a group of Puerto Ricans who migrate to New York City at Christmastime in 1960. It is a satirical comedy depicting the vicissitudes and cultural clashes Puerto Ricans faced as a result of our diaspora. Though not the best film of the year, it was entertaining.

It is too bad that most of these films are shown in few U.S. cities while only solid successes such as Like Water For Chocolate and El Mariachi reach the Valley.

It should also be noted that Puerto Rican actress Rosie Perez is competing this year for an academy award. Perez was nominated for her supporting role in Fearless. The last time a Puerto Rican won in this category was when Rita Moreno earned the award for role in the infamous West Side Story.

Belle Epoque, a Spanish film, is also competing for an Oscar in the best foreign film category. Only two Latin– American actors have won awards from the Academy of Arts and Sciences in Hollywood, formerly mentioned Rita Moreno and Jose Ferrer. This seems to be a shame, in light of the Latin–American and Hispanic influence and presence in this country and in the American film industry.

Feds sanction race-based aid

By CAROLE FELDMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A scholarship restricted to black students is helping Kathy Cousins pursue her dream of obtaining a doctorate and a college teaching position.

Seeking to provide other minority students with similar opportunities, the Education Department said Thursday that colleges and universities may use race-based scholarships to remedy past discrimination or diversify student bodies.

"We want the doors to post-secondary education to remain open for minority students," Education Secretary Richard Riley said. David Warren, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said the revised policy "restores the vital stream of financial aid dollars" to minority students.

"These kinds of programs have been around for a long time," said Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education. "They are symbolically very important."

Cousins, a second-year doctoral student in mathematics education at the University of South Florida, received her aid through one of 25 fellowships provided each year by the Florida Education Fund, created in 1984 to produce black Ph.Ds.

"I did not have a job and I needed the money to come in," Cousins said. "It provided me with the opportunity to pursue my degree."

The future of race-based scholarships had been In limbo since 1990, when the Bush administration first proposed that they be banned. That order never took effect.

Opponents contend that race-based scholarships violate federal civil rights law and discriminate against white students by shrinking the amount of aid available to them.

topic. Should college athletes get a sum of money each month? They do spend a lot of time practicing and studying, and the NCAA prohibits scholarship athletes from working so it is impossible for a player to make some needed cash. The players for the college basketball teams also bring in a substantial amount of money for the school. Filling up 10,000 seat arenas, selling team merchandise; outstanding college programs generate millions. But pay an amateur athlete a significant amount? Wouldn't that nullify the definition of amateur?

"When I was in school, we got $30 a month," said Hardaway. "We couldn't work. I think it should be a little more."

"I think (college players) should recieve $200 a month," said O'Neal. "You can't go to the movies, you can't take a girl out. $200 would help."

Will this whole recruiting entanglement ever be untangled? Will there always be debauchery in Division I sports while the rules are still in effect?

Sad to say a sport revolves around monetary value. Or most sports, for that matter. Right down to the core of athletics — from watching the sport to following the sport to playing the sport. It is all for the dough.

Blue Chips is released today, nationwide, in theatres across the country.

PERSONALS

Beautiful Girl When last semester ended I wasn't sure if I'd ever see you again or if you'd ever even discover that you were the beautiful girl I was speaking to. Intersession came and I promised myself that I'd wipe the slate clean and try to forget about you but I haven't had much luck doing that because it's much easier to purge a memory that lives in your head than it is for one that lives in your heart. Those are the worst kind of memories because they anchor themselves there until eventually they become a part of your soul. And that's what your memory has become to me. I know that the personals have grown sort of anemic lately but I hope and pray that somehow somewhere you will be reading this and smiling. That would make me very happy Norman

Midnight meeting in Mullins

Tonight's contest:

Manhattan Jaspers record: 15-8 Coach Fran Fraschilla

Massachusetts Minutemen record: 18-5 Coach John Calipari

Gametime: Tonight at midnight in the Mullins Center
Television: ESPN
Radio: WHMP, 99.3 FM
WMUA, 91.1 FM.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

It seems John Calipari's Massachusetts basketball team can do just about anything this week and that action will grab national attention. Two years ago, any spot on television would've had the Minutemen drooling.

But after this week of being one of the top stories in all media, from the controversy between Temple's John Chaney and Calipari to the upset loss at St. Joseph's, you would think the last thing any Minuteman wants is a camera in his face.

Sorry, guys, ESPN's lights will be on inside the William D. Mullins Center tonight yet again; well, tomorrow morning, 12 a.m. to be exact, as the Manhattan Jaspers come to town, looking to jump on No. 10 Massachusetts when they may be most vulnerable.

With all the distractions earlier this week, Calipari admitted his team wasn't focused on Atlantic 10 cellar- dweller St. Joseph's on Tuesday. It showed and the Minutemen received their first conference loss on the season to the lowly Hawks, who scored 81 points on a defense that only allows 61.2 points per game.

However, Calipari insists that his team will be ready after he put the Chaney incident behind him yesterday in a press conference at the Mullins Center (see page 1).

One of the major things Calipari said before the season about the match-up with the Jaspers is they gave Virginia a better fight last year in the NCAA Tournament than the Minutemen did; Massachusetts was knocked out of the Big Dance by the Cavaliers in the second round, Manhattan in the first.

This isn't 1993, however.

Manhattan lost its star, Keith Bullock, to graduation, but they still have Fran Fraschilla, the Jaspers' coach and long- time friend of Calipari.

The two met back in Calipari's freshman year of college when they both worked in North Carolina at Dean Smith's Basketball Camp. They roomed together and according to Calipari, had a lot of fun together and have stayed in touch since then. Fraschilla is in his second season leading the Jaspers.

"I've always respected his basketball mind, his aggressiveness, his attention to detail, his work capacity. He is a very, very good basketball coach," said Calipari.

Manhattan plays very similar to Massachusetts — tenacious, tight hard-nosed defense, something that Calipari knows all about.

"They're a lot like us. They play a lot like us," said Calipari. "They're very aggressive, they play man-to-man. They don't give you an inch and they just play hard.

"Manhattan's challenge right now is to see if they can play as hard as us."

Recruiting a Blue Chip

How far will coaches go to build a winning program?

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — It takes more than a scholarship these days.

A house. A car. A tractor. An 18 year-old kid with a talent to play a sport has power. Power beyond an amount of money to pay the bills for school, but a sum of money that provides the player/student with benefits. Greed then follows the power and the money. They want more than the previous offer. More than the other player has been offered.

And many of them get what they want.

The movie Blue Chips, starring Nick Nolte and Shaquille O'Neal, exhibited a variety of views in relation to recruiting violations. From the players on Texas Western (Shaq as Neon Bodeaux, Anfernee Hardaway as Butch McRae, and Matt Nover as Ricky Roe) to a powerful alumni booster (J.T. Walsh as Happy) right down to the Western coach (Nolte as Pete Bell), the necessary angles of this controvesial issue are portrayed in vivid detail.

The kind of wrongdoing you sense is going on, the kind you hear about after an investigation. The cheating that is happening. Rules are being broken by all in association — the kid gets in trouble for accepting money, the booster gets endangered because of the sum of the money given, and the coach is busted. It is a chance that all parties must take. Notice all of this corruption pertains mainly to two things — money and winning. Sad to say, in that order.

In Blue Chips, Pete Bell coaches former national champion Western University. Falling out of the national ranking in recent years, Bell and the school's athletic director (played by Bob Cousy) begin to search for some blue chippers to revive the languishing program.

Bell, a well-respected recruiter, does a fine job in becoming familiar with each of the three prospects. He likes them, they like him; he notes the opportunities of Western, they are anxious to attend and play for the Dolphins. Bell sold him the school, and they bought it. Neon, Butch and Ricky now must be bought themselves.

Bell wants to win and has to decide if he will bend the rules to do so. In order for him to get the players he wants, he has to. In order for him to win, he needs them. This is a situation that has been re-enacted at schools across the country. Year after year, coaches must make the decision if they should disregard their morals to avoid failure and agree to disperse money to recruits.

"The need to win is extraordinary these days," said director William Friedkin. "It has evolved to an extraordinary extent."

The money situation brings up another discussion

Home game for hockey

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts versus Sacred Heart hockey game was scheduled, it looked like a good matchup between two new hockey programs. The two teams have taken different paths.

The 1993-94 Massachusetts hockey team has enjoyed great success in its return season, dominating most Division II and III opponents and playing competitive in Division I games. Buoyed by the recruiting power of the William D. Mullins Center, Coach Joe Mallen has built a first-rate hockey program that will make the jump to Hockey East next year.

With a win Saturday, the 1993-94 Minutemen have a chance to tie the 1971-72 squad for the most wins (19) by a UMass hockey team in a season.

Mallen is excited by his first-year team's success.

"We've gone beyond my best expectations," said Mallen. "Going beyond 17 wins would be a great accomplishment for our players."

Without the benefit of scholarships and a new stadium, things have been dismal in the early going for Sacred Heart.

Coach Peter Downing's squad goes into Saturday's game with a 4-12 record in the ECAC South.

"It's been a struggle," said Downing. "We only have 13 skaters, including three who didn't play in high school. It has been a real learning process so far."

After losing 4-3 to Villanova, a team the Minutemen trounced 13-1, Downing said he knows he faces an extremely tough game, and is not optimistic about his team's chances on Saturday.

"There's not much you can say to your team," Downing said. "We know that we could be possibly facing 20 or more goals."

Mallen insists that despite Sacred Heart's lack of success his team will not take the Pioneers lightly.

"We've tried to teach our team to play every team the same," said Mallen. "We're staying focused and not looking ahead."

One Timers: The game tomorrow night can be heard on WMUA, 91.1 FM, starting at 7 p.m.

Women's gym on the road again at NU

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The fast-improving University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team takes to the road once again, traveling to Northeastern Saturday night.

The No. 24 Minutewomen moved up a notch in the national poll after last weekend's strong showing at Arizona. UMass now faces a Northeastern squad which it defeated by six points in the New England Cup back in January.

"Northeastern has had some injuries, we did beat them once before. I'm fairly confident that we can win the competition, but you never know with a road meet," Coach David Kuzara said.

Kuzara will give a breather to some of his all-arounders this weekend, inserting Ruth Reeves and Angela Jent while resting some of his young freshmen.

"They have been training really well, they deserve a shot at the all-around," Kuzara said. "It's frustrating not to do all of your events. It'll be a nice change of pace for some gymnasts to only do two or three event."

"I'm not too worried about the meet, as long as we can hit our sets, the scores will take care of themselves. I'm not concerned about winning or losing this meet," Kuzara said.

The Minutewomen are changing some of their routines to help get the team to the next level. Kuzara feels the team can compete in the top 10, and adding difficulty to their routines will prepare them for that level.

UMass leads the Atlantic 10 overall in points, but Kuzara considers the A-10 to wide open with six teams posing threats at the A-10 championships.

"We are doing the things to raise our scores, adding routines that can be a big factor in the A-10's and regionals," Kuzara said.

Freshmen Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz, fresh off a UMass record 9.85 on the bars, are adapting to the rigors of the big college gymnastics meets, according to Ku ara.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutewoman gymnastics team travels to Northeastern for a meet tomorrow night.

The Minutewoman return for two consecutive home meets with Springfield College and the University of New Hampshire. UMass is looking forward to taking on UNH, who are ranked 20th in the country.

"We are working hard, right now we are preparing for the stretch run and trying to do the things to make us real dangerous in March," Kuzara said.

Last Chance for women's track

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

With the cancellation of last weekend's A-10 Championships, the University of Massachusetts women's track team has only one more chance to qualify for the New England Championships.

Tonight, the Minutewomen will participate in the Last Chance invitational at Brown University, along with Dartmouth, New York University, University of Rhode Island, Massachusetts-Lowell and Brown.

Coach Julie LaFreniere said that cancellation of the A-10 Championships affected some of her athletes.

"By losing last weekend's meet, with the A-10's, it's really hurt some of our individuals," said LaFreniere. "Because for some of the kids they had two shots at qualifying, now its down to one. If they don't do it tomorrow night, they aren't going to the New England Championships and their season is over."

Freshman Jesse Rutherford is about five inches away in the triple jump and freshman Stephanie Townson is very close in the 20 pound weight. Another freshman Molly Dunlap, who runs in the 5,000-meter, has one chance to qualify. The 5,000-meter race is not run very often and Dunlap was to run it last weekend in the A-10s. Since it is only run once in a while, it is tough to qualify.

"She only had a chance to run the 5,000-meter one time," said LaFreniere. "She didn't qualify, but she's not that far off and she's looking a lot better."

Tonight there is no 5,000-meter scheduled so for Dunlap to have a chance at qualifying she might have to run against one of her own teammates.

The Minutewomen's 4x4 relay has already qualified for the New Englands but according to LaFreniere, it was not that good of a time.

"We qualified [in the relay for the New Englands], but we didn't qualify with a very fast time and that means we will be put in a slow heat."

Kristin Diggs, a junior transfer from the University of California, will get her first chance to qualify tonight because she has missed virtually the whole season with injuries.

NATO force avoided as Serbs cooperate

By PAUL ALEXANDER
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — With the threat of NATO air strikes averted, peacekeepers Monday moved in to control the remaining Serb guns around Sarajevo while diplomats turned up the heat for a political settlement.

Immediate air strikes against remaining Serb artillery positions were unnecessary, NATO and United Nations officials said. But NATO warplanes flew over Sarajevo to monitor Serb compliance.

Although some Serb guns remained in place after the Monday 1 a.m. deadline, the Serbs were credited with trying to comply with an ultimatum that could have put NATO into combat for the first time ever.

Any more shelling in Sarajevo would meet with "immediate military response," warned Gen. Jean Cot, commander of U.N. forces in former Yugoslavia.

Monday's catchword — from Russians, Americans and Europeans — was momentum. Use this halt in the siege of Sarajevo as a model for a wider settlement in Bosnia, where 200,000 people are dead or missing in 22 months of war.

"The challenge," said President Clinton at a White House news conference, "... is to build on this week's progress and create a lasting and workable peace for all the people of Bosnia." Clinton said the United States would renew its efforts to help "reinvigorate the peace process," and that Russia would be a partner.

"We must not let this favorable moment pass," Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev said during a visit in Hungary in which he stressed the need for cooperation between Moscow and the West on Bosnia.

Russia, traditionaily pro-Serb, meanwhile sent 400 troops to join U.N. peacekeepers in Sarajevo, a move that apparently ensured the Serbs' cooperation.

The Bosnian Serbs, who started the war nearly two years ago in a bid to create a "Greater Serbia" with neighboring Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, said Russia's stronger role was welcomed.

Leaders of Bosnia's Muslim-led government expressed optimism that the war could be ended.

Bosnian Premier Haris Silajdzic, who met Secretary of State Warren Christopher in Washington on Monday, said nothing is the same after the NATO ultimatum.

"We have a long way to go, but we believe that this is the first step towards the peace because it restores the balance of power in Bosnia," he said.

"Celebrate this victory and don't be afraid any more," Bosnia's Muslim President Alija Izetbegovic said on national TV. The removal of Serb guns is "first in a line of good things that will happen in Sarajevo," he said.

Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic, deeply pessimistic Sunday about the lack of air strikes, changed his tune and said NATO's power and U.N. troops could be used in other hot spots such as the embattled city of Mostar.

The optimism suggested that the Americans, who have said they will help the Bosnians get the peace settlement they seek, were weighing in diplomaticaliy to do just that.

In Paris, President Francois Mitterrand said France will call for a meeting of the U.N. Security Council this week to seek placing Sarajevo under U.N. administration and allowing for free passage of people and supplies.

Afghan gunmen shot down

Army kills kidnappers, frees schoolboys & teacher

By KATHY GANNON
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Army commandos stormed the Afghan Embassy late Monday, freeing five schoolboys and a teacher and killing three masked Afghan gunmen who had held them hostage for nearly 40 hours.

The kidnappers "had every intention of shooting us, but they ... were killed before they could move," one of the boys told state-run TV.

The kidnappers, carrying pistols and grenades, had demanded $5 million for themselves and 2,000 truckloads of food for Kabul, the Afghan capital, where heavy fighting between rival islamic factions has led to severe food shortages.

The kidnappers said they belonged to no faction, but wanted to draw world attention to the suffering of Kabul's people.

The raid on the embassy, a white, two-story house in a posh residential section of Islamabad, began with a loud explosion aimed at stunning or distracting the kidnappers. About 10 commandos then rushed in and fired furiously for about 15 seconds, killing the three young kidnappers.

No one else was hurt, said interior Secretary Jamshed Burkhi. "It was a miraculous escape. It was God who saved us," said Shafiq ur-Rehman, the 70-year-old teacher who was rescued. The incident began Sunday when the gunmen hijacked a busload of boys and teachers from Peshawar, 120 miles away, and drove them to Islamabad.

They freed six teachers and 55 schoolboys Sunday and eight more students earlier Monday.

The kidnappers became Increasingly exhausted and jittery as the standoff wore on, said Afghan Ambassador Mohammed Roshan Khan. One demanded sleeping pills, which he took while his accomplices stood guard.

Another gunmen demand was that Pakistan reopen its border to Afghan refugees. Pakistan, home to 1.5 million Afghan refugees, closed the border last month after battles erupted in Kabul on Jan. 1.

The Pakistanis refused to pay any money, but indicated they would negotiate on other issues. The interior minister offered the gunmen safe passage home if they freed the hostages.

Government officials, police and military officers traipsed in and out of the embassy Monday, but negotiations deadlocked. Zahid Saeed of Pakistan's foreign service, one of the negotiators, confided at one point, "They are terrorists. These demands are irrational and they are only after money."

Pakistani officials involved in the negotiations said the boys, aged 10 to 15, were kept in one large room, and for most of the time, the atmosphere was relaxed.

The boys could move around, and watched TV as well as videos brought in for them. Meals were also taken into the embassy regularly.

Since factional fighting started in Kabul last month, more than 10,000 people have been wounded and almost 1,000 killed. The United Nations and aid agencies say food shortages could lead to starvation within weeks.

But no major food deliveries are expected in Kabul any time soon because the main road to the city has been blocked by one of the factions.

Celery, song welcome St. David

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Welsh-Americans all over the country will be going to banquets, singing songs and sporting leeks to celebrate St. David's Day on March 1. St. David is the patron saint of Wales.

Dr. Islyn Thomas, a member of the National Welsh- American Foundation, said there are 2.9 million people in the United States who claim some Welsh ancestry. Among them are Hillary Rodham Clinton, Bob Hope and Richard Nixon.

Thomas said St. David (520 A.D. – March 1, 589) was a spiritual leader of the Welsh. He also said according to the ancient records at St. David's Cathedral in Wales, St. David also founded several monasteries, performed various miracles and healed the sick.

Thomas said St. David was one of the most influential monks of the sixth century because he "left a lasting impression on the Celtic church."

Thomas said while many people wear green on March 17 to celebrate St. Patrick's Day, few people realize St. Patrick was born a Welshman.

"St. Patrick was born in Wales around 430 A.D., and he was captured by Irish pirates when he was 16 years old," he said. "He was then made a slave and he tended sheep for six years before he escaped and went back to Wales."

Thomas said every big city has a St. David's Society, which is a social group for Welsh Americans. On March 1, these societies will be sponsoring lectures about famous Welsh-Americans, serving traditional Welsh foods and playing Welsh music.

"The Welsh do a lot of singing," Thomas said. "There is a saying that if you get two Welsh people together you have a choir."

On St. David's day, Welsh people wear leeks, or a piece of celery, to honor St. David. He said this tradition got started when Wales was battling England in 1200 in an effort to gain their independence from England. St. David told the Welsh troops to wear a leek in their helmets in order to differentiate themselves from their enemies.

He said even today, the Prince of Wales wears a leek to honor St. David.

UPC teaches students that show must go on

Did you hear who is coming to the spring concert? No? Well, the University Productions and Concerts crew doesn't know yet either.

Did you know the UPC puts on the whole production of the spring concert? No? Well, most students don't.

UPC is a registered student organization at the University of Massachusetts campus. The student-run organization is the largest student concert production on the east coast.

This organization has an executive staff of 12 UMass students. It also has a general committee of students from UMass and the other colleges in the area who assist in areas such as security, production, promotion and equipment.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Mindy Peden and Jennifer Jubinville of the Union Program Council.

The group was founded in 1977 under its original name, Union Program Council. Jennifer Jubinville, the production manager of UPC, said they changed the name because they felt it didn't reflect the group well.

"We really didn't know what Union Program Council meant. It doesn't reflect what we do. We implemented a structure change within the staff, and now we are all equal in what we do," Jubinville said.

In the purpose statement of the UPC, the group's main goal is to "initiate, develop and coordinate culturally diverse concerts by and for the UMass campus and community." It also aims to educate and train students about, "the workings of the music industry and concert production."

Mindy Peden, promotions director, said they try to make a conscious effort in getting culturally diverse and multicultural bands to perform at the University.

"We try to get many local bands to perform. We also try to get music other than alternative bands, such as blues and folk music. We are trying to be here for every student," Peden said.

Past performances UPC has brought to the University are Buffalo Tom, Sonic Youth, Indigo Girls, Onyx, Belly and Radiohead.

Their venues include the Fine Arts Center, Student Union Ballroom, Bluewall Cafe, Bowker Auditorium and the Campus lawn for the spring concert.

The UPC at UMass is unique because students are in charge of buying the talent themselves.

"Most colleges have a professional person who buys their talent for them. We have two students, Brad Talkovich and Jose Davila, who are in charge of talking to the agents," Jubinville said.

UPC is a line item group, which means they get a certain amount of money each year from undergraduate activity fees. This year they received $5.50 from each student, giving them approximately $44,000 to spend on productions.

"We lose money basically, and we do that on purpose. We don't want to overcharge on ticket prices," Peden said.

The average amount of workers for each show is 70 students. The work is completely volunteer, yet those who do volunteer receive a free viewing of the con-

One of the major concerns for students who are graduating in the spring is where their parents are going to stay. The Friends of the Jones Library System have come up with a solution that helps out both students and area libraries.

The Friends of the Jones Library are holding a fundraiser called "Beds for Books." They are taking advantage of the fact that all five area colleges are having their graduation ceremonies on the same weekend, May 20 and 21, to offer housing accommodations to visitors for a donation to the Book Fund.

"Because of the need of housing for the families of graduating students, residents of the area have volunteered their rooms," said Katie George, president of the Friends of the Jones Library organization.

The Friends of the Jones Library are asking home owners to donate rooms in their houses for the weekend for the families of students who are graduating. All proceeds will go to the Book Fund.

"The rooms are $35 per person per night and all money is going to the book fund," George said. "It's not a bad way to make a donation."

Although many people have already donated rooms, members of the community still being sought after to provide the use of a bedroom and to provide a simple continental breakfast in their home during the busy weekend.

"There have been about 30 rooms donated already mostly in Amherst," George said. "It makes it very convenient for visiting families."

cert and a t- shirt.

Most of the concerts do not sell out. Jubinville said the reason they don't sell out is because of the time frame they have in promoting the concerts.

"It is very hard to be a student and put on a show. The University's structure also makes it difficult. We also don't make that much profit on the concerts because alcohol can't be sold," Jubinville said.

UPC begins planning for the spring concert in the middle of the second semester. Overall, the production costs around $100,000.

Andrew Gelina, business manager, said many people don't realize the hard work involved with putting on a concert. An example he gave was the negotiating of contracts.

"Groups request many things, especially alcohol, that we have to work out in the budget," Gelina said.

Requests in the contracts range from school sweatshirts to green M&Ms in their dressing room. Peden said Dinosaur Jr. asked for Flinstones Chewable Vitamins.

Gelina said UPC has a competitive, yet good relationship with Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. However, UPC's relationship with the William D. Mullins Center has not been smooth.

Jubinville said the Mullins Center has a management which is outside of the University. In order for UPC to have a concert they would have to pay for things such as staff, ushers, security and production crew.

Jubinville also said Mullins Center would not allow UPC workers to work on the production.

"UPC is an educational training ground. We put on the shows," Gelina said.

"We are proud not to work in Mullins," Jubinville said.

Between the shows put on throughout the semester and the spring concert, UPC has built itself a well respected reputation. Brad Paikevich said many UPC workers receive jobs when they graduate.

"We are extremely organized and our concerts run smoothly. Many bands are surprised at that because we are students," Jubinville said.

ANC boycott negotiated

By DONNA BRYSON
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Conservative blacks and whites on Monday spurned the ANC's latest proposal for enticing them into the political process and dropping a boycott that threatens to disrupt elections in April.

The rejection from the Freedom Alliance came the same day that black and white leaders met to adopt the overture by the African National Congress to the conservatives as amendments to a draft constitution.

The negotiators also gave all parties — including Alliance members — that missed a Feb. 12 deadline for registering for the election until March 4 to do so.

With approval from the constitutional negotiators, the way is clear for President F.W. de Klerk to recall Parliament to formally incorporate the concessions into the constitution. De Klerk was expected to do this by early March, which could allow more time for negotiations with the Freedom Alliance.

Walter Felgate, a negotiator for the Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party, a key member of the Alliance, refused to say what the conservatives' next step would be.

"We can't indulge in speculation about hypothetical situations which have not yet evolved," he said.

Inkatha and other Alliance members have called for a boycott of the April 26-28 national election, which the ANC is expected to win. There are fears the boycott could lead to an escalation in violence as militants try to disrupt the first election in which South Africa's black majority will be allowed to vote.

Rowan Cronje, chairman of the Freedom Alliance, said Monday that proposed provincial powers were too limited and subject to being overridden by the central government. There also was no guarantee whites would be granted a separate homeland, as some extremists groups demand.

Last week, the ANC accepted an Alliance demand for a double-ballot system in April's election. This would let voters to choose national and regional legislatures separately, giving regionally based parties such as those in the Alliance a better chance of establishing power bases in their home areas.

The ANC also offered to amend the constitution by relaxing its outright rejection of a whites-only homeland after the election. However, it refused to go so far as to guarantee the homeland, the main demand of the Alliance's white parties. In addition, the ANC did not mention the possibility of an autonomous Zulu homeland, Inkatha's major demand.

ANC leader Nelson Mandela said the concessions were aimed at preventing civil war. But the violence that feeds such fears has increased since the ANC offered the concessions.

Police reported 42 deaths in the northeastern Natal province over the weekend, many of them linked to political rivalries. Natal has been the scene of fierce clashes between supporters of the ANC and Inkatha.

SGA President defends takeover

To the editor:

Am I the only person who is having trouble paying this bill? Am I the only one who thinks that tuition and fees are too high? If I am not the only one, please speak up. You do not have to take this anymore.

Any attempt to break the status quo will always bring criticism and complaint. We have heard from Admissions employees. They have said that we were disruptive, intrusive and they would have stood with us if we had not gone about it in that manner.

However, the irony is that they closed and locked their doors. They shut out the very same students they had admitted to this university. They did not come out and sit with us or talk with us. What they did was ignore us. To them, it was business as usual. Admissions employees have secure jobs and they will be here next year. For a lot of students at UMass, there is no guarantee that there will be a next year.

The Admissions staff can be compared to a crooked salesperson: they sold us an overpriced education and then they slammed the door in our faces when we came back to complain. (But there was a back door, and we used it.)

To Arlene Cash: Why did you tell us and reporters that you were "very comfortable" with the way students conducted themselves in the Admissions Center? Why did you tell the students you supported them and the means by which we chose to fight for zero percent tuition and fee increases? Who pressured you to change your mind?

To the media: Various publications, including the Collegian, were very critical of our actions. They felt they had a right to be there and to know everything. We, the students of UMass, owe the media nothing. They use us to sell papers, and we use them to pressure the administration. It was not about getting our picture in the paper or feeding our egos. It now is, always has been, and will always be about lowering the cost of tuition and fees and keeping our public university accessible to the public.

To those that did support us: We owe you a large thank you. These people include the Graduate Student Senate, the Board of Governors, various fraternities and sororities, Registered Student Organizations, various unions, professors, staff and, yes, some administrators. But most of all we would like to thank those students who did get out (in the middle of a blizzard) to provide moral support. Also, we are very grateful to the businesses that donated food and necessities.

In closing, if any one office understands the importance of keeping this university accessible to the sons and daughters of the Commonwealth, it should be the Admissions Center. Affordable tuition and fees makes their job a lot easier. We do sympathize with the staff members who were rattled by last week's protest, but change is never comfortable.

U.S. has no place in Bosnia

Last March, I wrote a column in which I argued that United States' intervention in the former states of Yugoslavia was a bad idea. Last week, angered by a mortar bombing in Sarajevo that killed 68 civilians, the United States and its NATO allies came within a hair's breadth of beginning aerial bombing of Serbian positions. And even now, nearly a year later, it would still have been a bad idea.

Of course when we see bleeding children lying in the streets with their limbs two feet away from their bodies, we want to step in and help. No one should have to die before their time, especially in such a senseless assault. But what it comes down to in the end is something that we in America do not like to admit: we could not do anything about it.

Don't believe that the tension in Bosnia will end now that the Serbs have executed this minor withdrawal. The United States will be called upon again to introduce bombing, and in the future, we may. But we should not.

But what it comes down to in the end is something that we in America do not like to admit: we could not do anything about it.

Peter J. Orvetti

Both Serbs and Muslims have made very clear their intention to fight until their last soldier — and civilian — is left alive; they will fight to the end of one of their peoples. The sad but simple fact is, in the end, the Serbs will triumph, whether in a month or in a decade. America entering the war would just serve to extend it, and the length of the casualty lists.

There are other reasons why United States action will always be ill-advised. For one thing, the American public's support of bombing is not informed. Prior to the mortar bombing of a Sarajevo grocery line, public opinion here was three to one against U.S. intervention. Immediately after, incensed by the horrific images of the attack, public opinion jumped to half for, half against, air strikes. We cannot set policy based upon raw gut reactions. We as a nation need some time to think before we act.

Another more political reason is the threat of a new world war. Inside of Russia, the world's second-strongest nation, foreign policy sentiment has been growing more and more nationalistic as conservatives challenge the weakened president, Boris Yeltsin. Many Russian leaders now openly side with Serbia, and have warned NATO that this regional war could easily grow into a much larger one.

And have we asked, why us, and why in Bosnia? You can be assured that nations like Britain and France, who would certainly be involved in any NATO action, are not discussing leadership of any mission. No, they are talking about the United States leading a strike. There are dozens of nations with the capacity to strike Serbian targets — but they all expect the United States to do it. Our world position does not necessarily make us the planet's chief of police. It is a fight about which America knows very little, and it is not our job to fight it.

There are many conflicts worldwide that are as bloody, if not bloodier, than Bosnia throughout Africa and Asia. But we do not hear about these on the news, and we do not care. This is not to trivialize the plight of Bosnia, but we should not allow media reports to lead to war. We entered Somalia, just one of many starving states, because of the network news — we won't be able to get out of Bosnia as easily when that action, too, proves to be a terrible miscalculation.

But once again, and most importantly, we just couldn't do any good. In the media, Bosnia is portrayed as a nation that is just waiting to be saved by the good graces of the world powers. This is just not true. Outside action could only make things worse.

We should lift the arms embargo on Bosnia immediately, so that the Bosnian people may fight back for themselves. But even so, we should put away our American pride and stay as far away from this impossible situation as we can. And that means staying home.

Opinion

Ross Perot is at it again

Neil Carpenter

In Congress this week, the idea of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution got hotly debated as Ross Perot emerged back on the political scene. The balanced budget amendment would legally stop the government from passing any budgets which were in the red. This sounds like a simple and easy solution to the deficit. However, like the rest of the ideas that Perot pushed in the campaign, the simpler it sounds in theory, the worse it is in reality.

Perot's logic usually goes something like this: if you don't like something, make it illegal and call out the National Guard. For example, his solution to the drug problem was to randomly search people's houses looking for drugs. Ross Perot's solution could have worked for a while, but what he overlooked was that his proposal would have violated the Constitution in numerous ways and increased crime in the long term by hurting the community-police relationship.

The balanced budget amendment is another case of one of Perot's simple solutions in the end causing more problems than it solves. Yes, a balanced budget amendment could put a stop to the federal red ink. Lawmakers would simply have no choice but to cut spending or raise taxes. Sound nice?

However, if lawmakers had to cut spending dramatically or raise taxes right now, the negative consequences are clear. It would be a return to 19th century fiscal conservatism, but also a return of the 1990 recession. The government plays a large role in simulating the economy nowadays as George Bush discovered as he raised taxes and stalled the beginnings of the recovery. Cutting too much spending would also have the same effect as dramatically raising taxes, since both draw money out of the economy.

Most likely, the money to balance the budget would be found by cutting spending. Cutting spending doesn't sound bad at first, and many of those in favor of the balanced budget amendment would be overjoyed to see a smaller federal government.

However, where can you cut anymore? Gotta find the 180 billion dollars somewhere. You could cut Social Security in half and have elderly people eat dog food. On the other hand, you could eliminate federal anti-poverty assistance of all kinds and greatly expand the number of homeless and hungry people in the country. Those aren't pleasant choices — even for a Republican.

The only way to end the budget deficit with some compassion and some smarts is to make sure the United States grows its way out of the budget deficit. The budget deficit is simply the difference between spending and revenues. So, if the economy strengthens, revenues go up and the deficit goes down. Thus, the current streamlining of government health care services by Clinton must be combined with efforts to strengthen the economy enough so people can pay the taxes which will, in the end, balance the budget.

Ironically, the only way for our economy to be strong in the long run is for the government to spend some money in the short run. Investing in education and nutrition for kids, making sure the transportation system works and reinvesting in parts of the country long ignored is the only true path to long term growth. The Germans and the Japanese aren't spending their energies looking where to cut, but where they can invest to grow. This isn't a Perot-like snappy line, but it is long term thinking.

Letters to the Editor

Crabtree residents deserve renovations

To the editor:

In 1953, the dorm building Crabtree was constructed for the purposes of housing students in the Northeast residential area here at UMass. It is now the year 1994, over 40 years later, and while the rest of the dorms on campus have changed, Crabtree has not.

The furniture in Crabtree may have been adequate for the students of the '50s, but not for the students of the '90s. Many residents find that the desks in Crabtree are too small. Students in the '50s didn't have personal computers, but a large percentage of the residents living here now do. Try writing on a desk that has barely enough room to fit the computer, its keyboard and a mouse.

The residents of Crabtree, in conjunction with the Crabtree House Council, have made their needs very clear to Housing Services. Records received from Housing state that Crabtree has never been renovated, nor has it received new furniture, while all of the other dorms on campus have received these services. Yet Housing has not done anything to correct this problem.

The residents of Crabtree just want what they deserve — adequate living conditions to help them through their very important college years. All the other residents on campus have gotten just that — when will it be our turn?

Mullins hockey fans annoyed by organist

To the editor:

My friends and I think that the Mullins Center has made a bad choice. They have taken away the recorded music normally played at the hockey games and replaced it with an organist. Now, we have nothing against the organist personally, but the organ music has got to go.

The musical interludes during the games against Holy Cross and Merrimack were dismal and depressing. The faces in the crowd during the onslaughts of morbid music resembled those of the living dead. It is our plea that the people responsible for this problem remedy it by bringing back the recorded music before the attendance dies down so low that the only people there are those in the Ground Round shoot-out.

Women's hoop fan miffed by coverage

To the editor:

I must admit it. I love to be frustrated. That's why I'm a UMass women's basketball fan. I get my frustration fix every time I read, or more often look in vain, for the write- up of the women's games in the newspapers.

Oh yes, I go to all the home games in the Cage and at the Mullins Center, and even some of the away games. I watch, I scream, I clap and whistle. I feel the pain of a loss and stomp and yell at the thrill of victory. I marvel at the pure talent of Octavia Thomas and Melissa Gurile and Crystal Carroll, and I shake my head when they fall apart.

It's a good thing I go to these games, because if I didn't I would have no clue how they played, no inkling of the momentum of the game. If I'm lucky I can read the final score and, if there's room, maybe a game summary. But there's always something missing: the spirit of the game.

Reporters from our local newspapers do a fine job of bringing the spirit of the men's basketball games to the fans, but they fall flat on their faces when it comes to the women's games. Beth Kuzmeski's three-quarters of the court pass to a flying Thomas with :02 on the clock against Rhode Island to force overtime was thrilling. My friends and I went to that game in Kingston, R.I. in person. Good thing. We may have never known how they pulled it out.

The women play because they love the game. They don't have lucrative NBA careers or product endorsement contracts. They aren't going to get rich playing basketball.

After the St. Joe's game at the Cage Feb. 9, I saw something that brought home why they play so hard and with such heart. A little girl, maybe eight or nine years-old, wearing an Amherst Community Basketball t-shirt, her eyes wide in admiration got her prized autograph from Melissa Gurile. As she ran back to her father, I heard her say, "Someday I'm gonna play like her."

That is the spirit of the game. Yes, I'm frustrated, but not with the team. They can always be counted on to play hard. It's the press coverage that frustrates me. Come on you guys, the players deserve better, and so do the fans.

The Minutewomen have four more home games this season. Come see what you've been missing. I'll be there.

Cowboy Junkies' score on first date at AC

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

Cowboy Junkies
Valentine Hall, Amherst College
Feb. 20 1994

The first date of the Cowboy Junkies' Pale Sun, Crescent Moon tour coincided with an unseasonably warm New England evening. It was a fitting start for a stage show which highlighted Margo Timmins' beguiling and temperate singing.

Pale Sun draws heavily on the underlying themes of love — both positive and negative, and the Junkies played a good number of their tunes interspersed with selections from their previous albums. The Junkies' sound is uniquely sedating, using liberal doses of blues chords mixed with acoustic purity and an occasional country twang. For a first date, it was a successful one.

"Crescent Moon" opened the set, it also serves as the opener on Pale Sun, Crescent Moon, and showed Timmins' ability to instantly captivate with a voice seldom varying in range but able to alter intensity when needed. This tune as well as "Seven Years," "Ring on the Sill" and a couple of older tracks exhibited this strength on call.

It is regrettable that the crowd in steamy Valentine Hall established a subtle conspiracy. Started with the opening act, acoustic-rock duo Billy Pilgrim (who played a solid and harmonized but generally stock set), it was decided that Amherst College concert protocol requires that all be seated on the floor. Those who chose to remain standing were quickly subdued by yells from the rear and repeated tugs on their shirts.

Perhaps it wasn't taken into account that it's no easier to see a show seated than it is standing. Upper torsos can also vary in

One night in the life of a television fan

Selecting which television shows to watch on a particular evening can be a stressful task. There are 33 channels listed in the viewing guide of USA Today, and some of you may have even more channels to choose from. (Of course, if you live on campus, you might as well stop reading right now).

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

To make the chore of choosing your shows easier, I have compiled a guide for viewing, based on the listings for a typical Monday night. If you're smart, you'll clip 'n save this for next week.

8 p.m. – 9 p.m.: "The Partridge Family" and "Mork and Mindy," Nickelodeon. This kids' network has done wonders for some older shows with its "Nick at Night" showings, especially that silly singing family headed by David Cassidy. Forget the Bradys; if you're looking for a real taste of the '70s, look no further than the Partridges.

After you're done singing up a storm, stay tuned for the Robin Williams classic "Mork and Mindy," also starring Pam Dawber. What started as a guest appearance on "Happy Days" turned into a well-received and funny series for Williams' zany alien Mork from the planet Ork. The best part of the show: Mork's report to his superior, Orson, at the end of each episode during which he describes his experiences on earth. Now we know where Mr. Belvedere got that diary idea.

9 p.m. – 9:30 p.m.: There is absolutely nothing on in this slot, so flip over to CNN for half an hour and check out "Larry King Live." I do not like height, make a note of it. But hey, strength in numbers.

A calculatedly sedate crowd took nothing away from the Junkies, whose six-piece ensemble locked tightly with the exception of a few guitar stumbles in the bluesier numbers.

Standouts included lead guitarist Ken Myhr, who was never reluctant to pick up the pace with a faster tempoed electric solo or riff. Bassist Alan Anton employed a variety of basslines, quirky and basic despite being overamplified for most of the set. Jeff Bird added tasteful mandolin, percussion and on the more cowboy-tinged tunes such as "Black-eyed Man" and "Hunted," embellished the sound with bluesy harmonica refrains.

Chief songwriter, Margo's brother Michael Timmins sat humbly in the background adding acoustic guitar strumming.

Two selections from the Junkies first album, Whites Off Earth Now reduced the band to the four original members, Margo, Michael, brother Peter Timmins on drums and Anton. "Shining Moon" and "Forgive Me" were held loosely together by Margo in a deeper blues tone.

Margo's demeanor was clearly the focal point as she flowed airily in a loose brown dress as if she seemingly had nothing else to do other than sing at a concert. Engaging the crowd with little stories and touring episodes all in a controlled tone like her singing, she was captivating.

Unfortunately, "The Anniversary Song," the jangly and upbeat single off Pale Sun, Crescent Moon, went over much of the audience's heads as they were unable to stand and move to a tune which encourages movement. Too bad that in all their self-righteousness, the utterly captive Amherst crowd missed out on one of a concert's greatest pleasures, the opportunity to groove.

The set was capped nicely by a three-song encore including the Velvet Underground's "Sweet Jane," the Junkies most successful tune to date. The Cowboy Junkies translated well into the high ceilings of Valentine Hall and played an impassioned embarkment on what should be a very successful tour.

Seventies stud David Cassidy.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Larry at all. He thinks he knows an awful lot about things he is pretty ignorant about. I also love the fact that he encourages people to call in and then cuts their questions short all the time. For all his annoying traits, however, Larry does get some pretty decent guests. I mean, who else could have pulled off Perot vs. Gore? (Besides David Letterman, MTV, Connie Chung, Ted Koppel...)

If you want a real laugh, skip the show and read Larry's column in USA Today every Monday. He always has brilliant nuggets of wisdom to share, such as "Alonzo Mourning will be the next big NBA star," or "Jerry Seinfeld's new book is one funny read." Jeez, thanks for the tips, jerk.

9:30 p.m. – 10:30 p.m.: Once again, flip over to Nick at Night. This slot features "The Bob Newhart Show," the first in a line of hilarious Newhart comedies. If there is one man in television comedy who is vastly underappreciated, it is Newhart. The man is simply as funny and as talented as they come. Here's your chance to see the master at work before the days of George Utley and Larry, his brother Darryl, and his other brother Darryl. If you're completely lost, that show was called "Newhart." The show on Nickelodeon is called "The Bob Newhart Show." Now go back to sleep.

At 10 p.m., another '70s classic, "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" hits the air. I had never really seen this show until last summer when I started watching it on Nick. The cast is fabulous, featuring Gavin (Captain Stubing of "The Love Boat") MacLoud, Ed Asner, Valerie Harper and my favorite, Ted Knight as tlaky anchorman Ted.

One great episode I had the chance to watch found Ted in charge of the newsroom after Lou Grant (Asner) had to go away on business. Needless to say, chaos ensued and it was tons-o-fun for the whole family. If you've never seen this show, check it out. You'll be glad to know that "Y.M.C.A." is not the only bit of culture from the '70s worth saving.

10:30 p.m. – 11:30 p.m.: Switch over to MTV for a double-shot of those teenaged misfits, "Beavis and Butthead." I was reluctant to join the bandwagon on this one, but these guys are so funny, disgusting, annoying and succinctly critical that I couldn't stay away. The skits are good, but the real meat of the show is the running commentary on music videos. It's a kick just to see some of the crap that creator Mike Judge pulls out of the early-'80s archives to crack on.

Critics in every field could take a few lessons from B & B concerning the brevity and honesty of their remarks. When Beavis screams "YESS!," and Butthead counters with, "These guys kick ASS!," no further elaboration is necessary. A few classic skits: The boys' trip to the sperm bank; the camping trip with the science teacher; the visit from the exchange student; the after-school weight-lifting session with the steroid-crazed gym teacher.

Say what you will about this show, but don't say it isn't funny, and don't say it's stupid. It's a hilarious show which comments on the current world of music and the images of the MTV age. Like it or not, Beavis and Butthead have something to say.

11:30 p.m. – 12:00 p.m.: It's finally time for "Sportscenter," the authoritative source for all the sports news of the day. Unfortunately, the Dan Patrick–Keith Olbermann tag–team has been broken up since Keith moved over to ESPN 2, but the "big show" is still tops in its class. Highlights, interviews, commentary, more highlights, scores, updates, injuries, wacky plays— they're all right here.

If you missed the game, the race, or the fight, tune in to "Sportscenter" and you'll feel like you haven't missed a beat. I only wish the nightly news had such intriguing and funny anchors. Hey, who says news can't be fun?

12:00 a.m. – 12:30 a.m.: I kind of screwed up, because you'll now notice that you've missed the first half hour of "The Late Show with David Letterman." I'm sorry about that, but I'm kind of doing this as I go along. Anyway, at least you'll be able to catch a glimpse of the funniest man on television at work. And if you want to be creative, you can always watch the entire letterman hour and watch "Sportscenter" at 2:30 instead. You'll be tired in the morning, but at least you'll sleep well with visions of Warriors–Rockets highlights dancing in your head.

AUSCHWITZ
A DOCUMENTARY
NOT A HOLLYWOOD MOVIE!

Jewish documentary film maker David Cole has produced a shocking, absolutely unique video on Auschwitz. The will see and hear things as it was filmed by the Nazis themselves at its liquidation by Adolf Eichmann's Last!

"A powerful video..."
(Yehuda Bauer, Director of Holocaust Studies at Hebrew University)

See the physical layout of the camp put in perspective for the first time on film. Learn how 1.5 million Jews were gassed and cremated. Hear how gentile guards gained the trust of witness a fascinating interview with Dr. Franciszek Piper, curator of the Auschwitz Museum, during which he reveals facts about the role of Conrad Cola never before diluted to us film!

An Extraordinary Offer

This rare, unusual offer is being run in selected college newspapers only. The 60 minute video, "David Cole Interviews Dr. Franciszek Piper," sells for $50 in the U.S. and Europe. For a limited time you can obtain a copy of this 2-hr documentary for $14.95 + p+h.

Why are we making this singular special offer? To promote understanding about the Auschwitz story that almost certainly you will not learn in school. Or anywhere else for that matter! This is a revisionist historical documentary! The price is right. Order now!

The Far Side By Gary Larson

"Well, yes, that is the downside, Fluffy. ...When we kill her, the pampering will end."

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Handling routine tasks in an imaginative way could lead to career advancement. Opportunities for financial gain are greater than in the past.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Refuse to make a commitment until you have had at least another night's sleep over it. The shining coating on a proposal may be spurious. Greet shy gossip with your usual skepticism.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Do not place too much trust in what you hear today. Stories have a way of getting twisted around through repetition. Manage your business interests carefully. Speak out forcefully on a community issue.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Acquiring new skills will give you an edge over the competition. Others look to you for leadership. Sow some seeds for future projects. An older person offers you excellent advice. Follow it!

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Inflationary forces abound! A long-range financial strategy will help you make the most of your income. Curb a tendency to splurge on entertainment or costly social outings. Invite friends to your home.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A misunderstanding or disappointing deal could cost you money or a friend — possibly both. Distance yourself until you can cope with your feelings. A family member offers support.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Matters that call for action on you part should not be put off for another day. Take up the most difficult job first. Conduct your own research without belittling anyone else's efforts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Catch up on odds and ends at work. Important details require your attention. Nothing will slow you down once you circumvent a roadblock. Avoid locking horns with stubborn people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Think twice before making an important decision. A well-timed move will be a feather in your cap. Joining forces with others makes tremendous sense. Get everything in writing, however.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Professional and personal goals are apt to clash today. Put your energies into an exciting career or financial opportunity. Forging ahead with a business proposition will win you new allies.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): The financial picture is generally encouraging, thanks to your thrifty ways. A restless mood could give birth to new ambitions. You can pull off a scmilc deal if you move swiftly.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Do some fancy financial footwork in your spare time. Putting the lid on spending will help you accumulate money for investments. Refuse to let irresponsible people dump their problems in your lap.

goalie made 52 saves, including some acrobatic beauties.

UMass goalie Rich Moriarty turned back nine shots on his way to his sixth win of the season.

"He was tremendous," said Mallen. "He faced 65 shots. He really kept them in the game."

The 13 goals equals the Minutemen's best offensive output of the season. It was the fifth time this season that UMass has scored in double digits. The game was considerably physical, but remarkably clean as only four penalties were called.

Mallen and the Minutemen can both achieve milestones tonight when they play their final road game of the season as they take on North Adams State. Mallen is looking for his 100th career victory as a head coach, and the team will strive to win their 20th game of the season to become the first ever UMass team to do so.

PERSONALS

Beautiful Girl When last semester ended I wasn't sure if I'd ever see you again or if you'd ever even discover that you were the beautiful girl I was speaking to insaresseson came and I promised myself that I'd wipe the slate clean and try to forget about you but I haven't had much luck doing that because it's much easier to purge a memory that lives in your head than it is for one that lives in your heart. Those are the worst kind of memories because they anchor themselves there until eventually they become a part of your soul. And that's what your memory has become to me. I know that the personals have grown sort of anemic lately but I hope and pray that somehow, somewhere you will be reading this and smiling. That would make me very happy. Norman

UMass shines Bright against WVU

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

Give me an A. Give me a 10. Give me the A–10 again.

That was probably the subject of the speech that Massachusetts Coach John Calipari gave to his squad before its battle with West Virginia at the William D. Mullins Center late Sunday afternoon. Just maybe not in those exact words.

And with a 74–67 win against a stubborn WVU team, the Minutemen moved one step closer to giving Calipari exactly what he wants. UMass (21–5, 11–1 Atlantic 10), which dropped its first conference game in a shocking 81–80 loss at St. Joseph's last Tuesday, knew coming in that it would have to have a concentrated effort to beat the always–tough Mountaineers (15–8, 7–6 A–10).

"It was a great win for us," Calipari said. "It was a win we needed to have."

Early on in the second half it looked as though the Minutemen might run away with the game when they built a nine point lead at 44–35 just over five minutes into the stanza. The UMass defense was swarming during this period; a steal at one end led to a Dontá Bright (19 points, seven rebounds) jam and then a Jeff Meyer block led to a ten foot baseline jumper by guard Edgar Padilla.

After a much needed time out, however, the Mountaineers regrouped and ripped off 10 straight points, including eight by senior guard Marsalis Basey (25 points, 4–5 three pointers, six assists), to take a 45–44 lead with 11:30 to play.

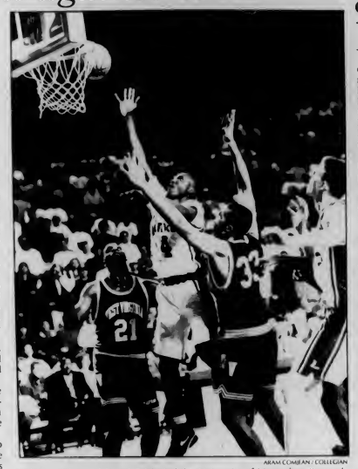
The Minutemen then took over, going on a 10–2 run which gave UMass a seven point lead at 54–47. The run was capped off by junior guard Mike Williams' fast break layup.

The Mountaineers got back to within four, 56–52, on a pair of free throws by senior forward Pervires Greene (22 points, six rebounds, two steals). The crowd at the sold out Mullins Center, where the Minutemen remain undefeated, could not feel totally comfortable until the Minutemen went on another 10–2 run to take a commanding 66–54 lead with 1:37 to play.

WVU Coach Gale Catlett, who constantly tried to disrupt the UMass offense by switching defenses, credited the Minutemen with their gritty play down the stretch.

"They (UMass) really knocked down shots that I didn't expect them too, actually," Catlett said. "I was disappointed that we didn't make a better run at it down the end."

In the first half, the Minutemen, who played without freshman center Marcus Camby (sinus problems), raced off to a 7–2 lead when Bright tipped in a Lou Roe (12 points, seven rebounds) miss. For Bright, yesterday's outstanding performance was also a very simple one.



"I was just taking the open shot, Coach Cal yells at me when I don't take the open shot, and that's all I was doing," Bright said.

A two–handed jam by Greene brought the Mountaineers to within one at 11–10, but UMass then scored three straight hoops to take a 17–10 lead.

The Mountaineers continued to battle back, however, led by the wiry 6–foot–8 Greene, who was scoring at will in the first half. Greene went ballistic, scoring seven of West Virginia's last 10 hoops in the first half.

With the shot clock winding down in the half's final minute, UMass forward Dana Dingle (12 points) knocked down a trey from the left wing that would give the Minutemen a 36–32 lead at the break.

It was because of Camby's absence that Calipari used reserves Rigoberto Nuñez (19 minutes) and Jeff Meyer (15 minutes) for extended periods. Calipari said afterwards that he was more than pleased with the performance of both Nuñez and Meyer.

Revenge is on the minds of awakened Minutemen

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

When the final buzzer sounded one week ago, St. Joseph's fans rushed the court to celebrate the Hawks' 81–80 victory over Massachusetts while John Calipari's Minutemen sat in stunned disbelief, preparing for a somber trip home to Amherst after receiving their first loss in the Atlantic 10.

After Calipari held a press conference last Thursday afternoon, putting to rest the incident with Temple Coach John Chaney, the Massachusetts coach realized his squad needed a wake–up call to face four games in seven days.

The first chance for the Minutemen came last Friday night at midnight against Manhattan. Judging by their performance, the Minutemen were half–asleep, turning the ball over 26 times in the 68–54 victory over the undermanned Jaspers.

Massachusetts freshman Edgar Padilla, who had thrown three balls over the head of backcourt mate Mike Williams late in the first half, came out strong in the second half. Padilla led the Minutemen offensively, scoring a career–high 17 points, including three treys. The 6–foot–1–inch guard from Springfield was benched by Calipari after he committed the turnovers. Calipari's benching worked as Padilla didn't give one pass away to the Jaspers in the second half.

The Minuteman defense baffled the Jaspers from the field, forcing Manhattan into shooting 30 percent (19 of 63). Massachusetts didn't light it up, either, hitting on 20 of 55 field goals for 36 percent.

Dontá Bright, a sophomore from Baltimore, Md., was one of several Minutemen who played for the first time at midnight and said he hoped it would be his last.

"I don't ever want to play at midnight again if I don't have to," said Bright, who played 22 minutes, scored 13 points (5 of 5 from the free throw line) and snared five rebounds.

Massachusetts went from an early morning contest against the Jaspers to a late Sunday afternoon A–10 tilt with West Virginia, the last team to beat the Minutemen on–campus 29 games ago. Chalk up No. 30, as Bright dazzled the Mullins Center crowd by slicing and dicing his way to 19 points and seven rebounds in the 74–67 win over the Mountaineers.

Offensively, the shooting touch of the Minutemen returned from its hibernation; Massachusetts hit on 52.9 percent from the field for the game, the highest ever in the Mullins Center's history. Bright led the way, going 7 of 10 from anywhere and everywhere on the floor. His arsenal included a three–pointer from the top of the key, baseline jumpers and a break–away one–handed jam on which he took off from outside the key.

Because its junior trio of Mike Williams (11 points), co– captains Lou Roe (12 points, seven rebounds) and Derek Kellogg (eight points, five assists) were having off days, Massachusetts turned to Bright and fellow sophomore Dana Dingle (12 points, four assists, five rebounds) for consistency on both ends.

Last week's Philly trip that began Massachusetts' awakening comes full circle tonight in the Mullins Center when the Minutemen host St. Joe's at 7:30 p.m., seeking revenge.

"They kind of celebrated, took down the nets when they beat us, so we're looking forward to it," said Dingle.

Minutewomen turnover game to URI

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, set back by foul trouble, fell to the University of Rhode Island Rams, 62–53, last night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Freshman Crystal Carroll picked up her fourth foul with 18:33 to go in the second half, while sophomore Melissa Gurile and freshman Beth Kuzmeski also played some minutes with four fouls.

The Minutewomen (11–10, 5–6 in Atlantic 10) jumped out to an 11–4 lead, thanks to Gurile's six points during the run. UMass maintained the lead, reaching as high as 19–13 before the WRams banged two straight three–pointers. After a Kuzmeski baseline jumper, URI took over the lead enroute to a 28–25 halftime score.

UMass opened up the second half in the same style as they did the first, going on a 10–6 run. Kuzmeski hit two straight three–pointers during the span, making the score 35–34.

After a basket by Dayna Smith, the WRams scored 14 of the next 20 points, including three three–pointers by Tasha King, to make it 49–41.

The Minutewomen cut the WRam lead to within four after a made jumper by Gurile, before trying to play catch–up the rest of the game. The WRams led the Minutewomen by as many as 13, and kept the lead in double–figures for the final score.

Kuzmeski led the Minutewomen with 20 points, including 4–6 from the three–point stripe. Gurile and Thomas both finished with double–doubles, as Gurile (17 points, 10 rebounds) and Thomas (12 and 10) tried to compensate for the absence of Carroll, who played just 20 minutes due to foul trouble.

Turnovers were a problem once again for the Minutewomen, committing 17 in the first half and 28 for the game. Many instances during last night's game, the Minutewomen spent up the whole 30 seconds of the possession, and failed to convert.

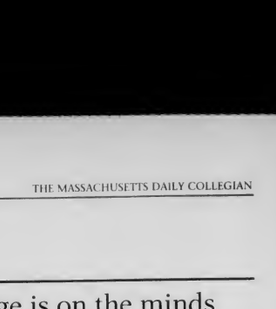
"If you don't get shots off, you don't get chances to score," said Massachusetts Coach Joanie O'Brien. "We didn't penetrate. We also missed a lot of open baskets."

The Minutewomen look to get back to .500 ball in conference play, as they travel to George Washington on Saturday, Feb. 26. O'Brien noted that she has seen two different Minutewomen basketball teams.

"We're on a roller coaster," said O'Brien. "I don't know which team is going to show up. Some kids don't know if they want to be good. We have the talent, we just need some more desire."

Minutewomen notes: The Minutewomen traveled to Morgantown, W.Va. last Thursday, and came away with 68– 62 victory over the Mountaineers.

Four players finished in double figures for UMass. Thomas led the Minutewomen attack with 19 points and 12 rebounds, while Gurile scored 18 points, and Carroll chipped in with 11 points and 10 boards.



Junior reserve Cass Anderson scored a career–high 14 points on 4–8 from the field and 4–4 from the line.

...The Minutewomen then set off to Pittsburgh, Penn., to take on Duquesne, only to fall 64–61.

Carroll led the Minutewomen in the loss, scoring 17 points and pulling down 8 rebounds. Thomas and Gurile both scored 13 points.

...Carroll was named A–10 co–Rookie of the Week of Feb. 20, the second time she has received this honor. In the two games played, Carroll averaged 14 points and eight rebounds.

...Thomas topped the 700–point plateau in the Duquesne game, becoming only the third player in Minutewoman history to do so in her first two years.

Hockey ties record in SH pounding

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

A nail–biter, it was not.

On the strength of seven third period goals, the University of Massachusetts hockey team pounded Sacred Heart, 13–2, on Saturday.

The victory improved the Minutemen's record to 19–8, tying them with the 1971–72 squad for most victories in a season by a UMass hockey team.

"I never expected we would win 19 games," said Minuteman Coach Joe Mallen. "It's a great accomplishment for our players. There are so many positives to point to."

The undermanned Pioneers (13 players) looked like they might make it interesting, as they stayed in the game, only trailing the Minutemen 1–0 after the first period, and limiting UMass to only 11 shots.

Tom Perry scored the only goal of the first period, taking a centering pass from Warren Norris and pushing it past Sacred Heart goalie Art DeGaetanto.

Aside from the one goal, the Minutemen were dissatisfied with their first period performance.

"We took them for granted in the first period," said Perry. "We came out over–confident. We took them for granted."

After each team scored once early in the second period, the Minuteman offense caught fire as UMass scored four goals in eight minutes, giving the Minutemen a 6–1 lead at the end of the second period.

UMass shelled DeGaetano in the final period, peppering the Pioneer netminder with 23 shots. The line of Rob Bonneau–Blair Manning–Blair Wagar line, which had been silent for the first two periods, combined for three third period tallies, including two in a period of 10 seconds.

With the game firmly in hand, Mallen gave his defensemen a chance at glory. The six blue–liners each took a few shifts at forward, while the centers and wingers dropped backed to fill their spots. The move resulted in football standout Brian Corcoran's first collegiate goal.

Sixteen of the 18 Minutemen that dressed for the game had at least one point in the game. Warren Norris and Perry each had three goals and three assists in the contest, while Bonneau added to his scoring lead, with two goals and an assist to give him 45 points on the season.

The Minutemen got a moral boost as Captain Jaynen Rissling, who had been sidelined with a knee injury since Jan. 12, returned to the line–up. Rissling showed no signs of rust, taking a regular shift on defense.

"It felt good," said Rissling. "It felt great to be back."

Lost in the final score was an excellent performance by DeGaetano. Despite allowing 13 goals, the Pioneer

Farrakhan declares a Jewish conspiracy

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan has been sitting in the spotlight of controversy lately, and will be making a few stops before he arrives at the University of Massachusetts to speak on March 10.

The Rev. Louis Farrakhan reached a national audience this week with a cover story in Time magazine. In the article Farrakhan said, "Am I really anti–Semitic? Do I really want extermination of Jewish people? Of course, the answer is no."

He was interviewed Feb. 19 on Black Entertainment Television, an ABC affiliate, on the program "Conversations with Ed Gordon."

The Associated Press reported Sunday that Farrakhan said there was a "Jewish manipulation of the media," and that there is a Jewish media conspiracy to destroy him.

"I see a conspiracy," Farrakhan said. "I don't know what others see, but the conspiracy is to destroy Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam."

Farrakhan has said that many of his statements have been distorted by the media and that he is quoted out of context.

A source who refused to be named at Black Entertainment Television said Tuesday that the viewers' reaction to Farrakhan's appearance has been mixed.

"Some people have called asking why he was on and why we didn't fire questions or rebut his statements," the source said.

"But it is a news story and a news segment. It definitely evoked a reaction and we have kept in contact with the Anti–Defamation League. People were very concerned with the phrases that he used, but we have to remain impartial."

The source also said that Farrakhan cited a study made by the Nation of Islam surveying the bylines of reporters across the nation. Farrakhan said in the interview on Black Entertainment Television that most of the bylines are Jewish names.

Black Entertainment Television plans to do a follow–up on the piece. Segments of the conversation that were not aired will be broadcast Feb. 25 at 6:30 p.m.

Farrakhan said he was reaching out to Jewish and Black leaders in the interview with Ed Gordon. He said the Holocaust was wrong, and the six million Jewish people killed didn't deserve the suffering.

"Why is it that we can see a Schindler's List but there is nothing that is said of the holocaust to black people, which was 100 times worse than the Holocaust of the Jews," Farrakhan said in the interview.

The Associated Press reported that Jewish leaders condemned Farrakhan's remarks on Sunday.

Farrakhan is scheduled to appear on "The Arsenio Hall Show" Feb. 28.

The Nation of Islam headquarters in Chicago would not answer questions about Farrakhan over the phone. A typed list of questions was faxed to their office early yesterday afternoon in compliance with their procedures, but they did not reply.

College democrats elect new leaders at convention

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The College Democrats of Massachusetts held their annual convention last Saturday at Cushing Hall on the Boston College Campus.

The convention brought together members of the College Democrats from all over the state of Massachusetts. About 100 members of CDM attended the convention.

College Democrats of Massachusetts is an umbrella organization for the 19 active campus College Democrats clubs.

The convention began with a speech by the outgoing president Neil Carpenter at 10 a.m. Carpenter, a student at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, reviewed some of the highlights of the College Democrats past year, said vice president of CDM Mage Falzone.

Other speakers who followed included Adam Kreisel, president of College Democrats of America, who talked about the history of College Democrats, and Justin Lamnen, co–chair president of the convention's host chapter at Boston College.

The opening speeches were followed by workshops and then speeches by the keynote speakers.

Democratic gubernatorial candidates Mark Roosevelt and Michael Barrett spoke for a half hour at the convention. Talk centered around the health care issue.

"The speeches lasted about five minutes and then the candidates took questions," Falzone said. "Health care was the prevailing issue at the convention,"

A panel on health care included former state senator and Head of the House Ways and Means Committee Pat McGovern and Joel Watson, state organizer for President Bill Clinton's health care plan.

Several workshops were held during the day. Ron Vallerio, Democratic Campaign Institute co–chair, held a workshop on grassroots political organizing.

Adam Kriesel and CDM Director of Development Josh Wachs led a workshop on chapter development. Leslie Lillard, press secretary for Sen. John Kerry, presented a workshop on press.

A dance for the election of positions on CDM followed. Ted Lazarus, a second year student at Amherst College was elected president, and Falzone, a first year student at Boston College, was elected vice president.

"The good thing about the new officers on the board is they are young yet experienced," Falzone said. "Benefits to a young board are that we will all be around for more than just one year."

CRC hopes to raise funds through fees

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

By next year, University of Massachusetts students may have the opportunity to support the Cannabis Reform Coalition by paying their University bill.

The CRC is currently gathering undergraduate student signatures so they can put a referendum on the ballot students will use to vote for Student Government Association president and trustee. The CRC is a student group dedicated to legalizing marijuana for all uses.

The referendum, if passed by 10 percent of the students, would add a $5 per semester affirmative check–off fee to the University bill. This means students could choose to fund or not to fund the CRC.

Acting CRC President Aaron Wilson said if the students pass the referendum this spring, the money the optional fee would generate would be used by the CRC to fund a drug and alcohol education program for students.

"The number one priority for us if we receive this money would be to fund a non–partisan drug and alcohol education program," Wilson said. "I say non–partisan because we would fund it but we would not use it to promote our cause. We are taking it upon ourselves to better the condition of the people who use drugs on campus."

Wilson said the CRC would not dictate the agenda of the proposed drug program, but he did say the program would not tell people not to use drugs, but rather to be aware of the consequences of using them.

"The focus of the program wouldn't be 'just say no,'" he said. "The message would be, 'be responsible.' I think our program would have a lot more credibility with drug users because they know we are not going to lie to them."

Wilson said there is no organized opposition to the CRC's cause on campus, but he said there is a possibility the University Board of Trustees could attempt to block the addition of the refer–

Lack of sales forces porn out of University Store

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Early in the semester, the University Store removed all pornographic magazines from the shelves. Yet it was not done because of protests, but because they just were not selling.

"It wasn't a question of supporting the removal of the magazines, we just were not selling them," said John Kuusisto, manager of the University Store/Retail Services. "We are running a business here, and we treated the issue as a business."

Kuusisto, who has been working for the University Store for 16 years, said the pornographic magazines have always been a "focal point" for complaints from certain groups and individuals on campus.

"Requests have always been made to remove the magazines. But then, we have always have requests to add and take away certain products," he said.

Kuusisto said these complaints are common on all college campuses because pornographics are sensitive in nature.

Other pornographic magazine titles have been removed many years ago. Kuusisto said there used to be many other pornographic magazines before he worked at the University, but they have all been removed.

He said they take them off the shelves because they don't sell well.

"We add and subtract items as much as they sell. We always try to be responsive to the community and bring in products they ask for and remove the ones that don't sell," he said.

"I fully support freedom of speech and press. But I am also in full support of business," Kuusisto said.

Something's missing from the magazine racks in the University Stores across campus. Pornographic titles were pulled earlier this semester, not because of complaints but because they don't sell well.

CIA finds 'mole' and wife

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a case fraught with Cold War echoes and implications for U.S.–Russia relations, a former top CIA counterintelligence officer and his wife were charged Tuesday with selling national security secrets to the Kremlin.

The federal affidavit for the arrest of Aldrich Hazen Ames and his wife reads like a spy thriller novel: secret CIA documents handed off at "dead drops;" $1.5 million in alleged Russian payoffs and FBI agents sifting through trash cans for clues.

The White House immediately ordered an assessment of the damage to national security.

President Clinton called the breach "very serious," and Secretary of State Warren Christopher summoned Russian diplomat Vladimir Chkhikvishvili for a formal protest. The Russians were told in blunt terms to take responsibility for Ames and make amends, a senior administration official said.

The White House was reviewing how the case might affect relations with Russia at a time when the United States is strongly supporting President Boris Yeltsin and providing millions of dollars in aid.

The affidavit accuses Ames and his wife of conspiring to deliver information about secret CIA operations and of revealing the identity of Russian officials who were illicitly providing information to the United States, including a Russian counterintelligence

HRTA career fair called a success

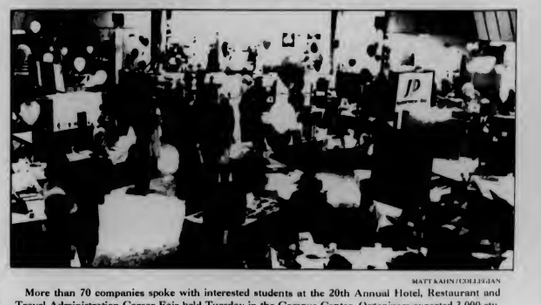
By MICHAEL R. DILORENZO
Collegian Staff

Seventy–seven companies were on hand at the Campus Center to recruit prospective employees as the School of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration held its 20th annual career fair.

Co–Chairman Scott Hartford, a senior HRTA major, said that nine months of planning went into the event, which included a breakfast, luncheon and evening reception.

"But if somebody gets one job, the whole nine months will be worth it," Hartford said.

Over 400 HRTA student–volunteers were needed to accommodate the 3,000 students expected to attend.



Each of the 70–plus companies at the fair were assigned student–hosts who were responsible for guiding recruiters as well as informing them about UMass' HRTA program.

"The HRTA program [at UMass] is well–respected," said Hartford. "There is not a problem in attracting companies to the event."

David Conlin, a food and beverage recruiter from the Foxwoods Casino in Ledyard, Conn., expected to hire from the pool of students who attended the fair.

"We have food and beverage positions available immediately," Conlin said. "There are some excellent candidates and we will be interviewing a few hundred

Zulu leader rejects proposal to end election boycott

By TOM COHEN
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi on Tuesday rejected the latest proposals to end his boycott of the nation's first all–race election.

But Buthelezi and his nephew — the Zulu king — later met with President F.W. de Klerk to discuss demands for Zulu autonomy after the April 26–28 vote. A statement issued by de Klerk after the three–hour meeting said talks would continue, but offered no details.

Government and African National Congress leaders said the Zulu leaders and their allies, including pro–apartheid whites, have no reason to boycott the election because all their demands were addressed in proposals approved Monday at multiparty talks.

A boycott by the opposition Freedom Alliance would likely increase political violence that killed more than 3,000 blacks last year. Much of the violence, which is considered the greatest threat to free and fair voting, stems from a power struggle between the ANC and Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party.

The Freedom Alliance complained the constitutional changes made at Monday's talks failed to protect the powers of regional governments from being stripped by a future government.

Alliance members fear the ANC will win the April vote and impose a socialist dictatorship, denying them rights and privileges enjoyed under apartheid.

"We've given them an arm and a leg," said Cyril Ramaphosa, the ANC's chief negotiator, speaking on independent Radio 702 in Johannesburg. "We believe now that pressure should be put on them by the people of this country, by indicating to them that they now ... stand completely against the democratic process that is unfolding."

Constitutional Development Minister Roelf Meyer said he hoped "reason will now prevail" among the alliance leaders. "There is now nothing to keep them from participating in the elections," he said.

But Buthelezi told state radio the proposals only gave regional governments some expanded powers and fell short of the Freedom Alliance demands.

Zulu King Goodwill Zwelithini has called for establishing a Zulu state.

Over the past week, the ANC has made the following concessions: —Agreeing to a separate ballot for regional elections, giving regionally based parties such as Inkatha a better chance for victory;— Relaxing its outright rejection of a whites–only homeland, although not meeting demands of right–wing whites to guarantee one; — Allowing regions to write their own constitutions;— Guaranteeing that the draft constitution would not be substantially changed by the future elected parliament.

More concessions were offered Monday when constitutional negotiators agreed to grant regions additional revenue–raising powers. The negotiators also gave all parties —including alliance members — until March 4 to register for the April election.

endum even if the students pass it. He said while he does not expect any problems with the Trustees, the CRC is prepared to sue them if they do try to block the referendum.

Brian Juiin, a founding member of the CRC, said the biggest obstacle in getting the referendum passed is student apathy. He said that although the CRC estimates that one third of UMass students smoke marijuana regularly and most students will experiment with the drug before they graduate, he is concerned that not enough people will turn out to vote in favor of the referendum during the spring election.

officer who was an agent for the CIA.

Ames is accused of being an agent for the Russian foreign intelligence service, known as the SVRR, which is the direct successor to the KGB of the former Soviet Union.

Ames, 52, and his wife, Maria Del Rosario Casas Ames, 41, of Arlington, Va., appeared before a federal magistrate in Alexandria, Va., on Tuesday on charges of conspiracy to commit espionage. If convicted, each would face a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and a $250,000 fine.

The CIA had suspected since 1985 that there was a "mole" spying for the Russians inside the agency, and Ames had been under investigation for two years, according to a law enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

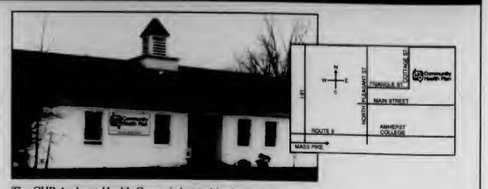
UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.



Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Doctor to speak about the medicinal uses of pot

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition will present marijuana legalization activist Dr. Lester Grinspoon in the Campus Center Auditorium tonight.

Grinspoon will speak on the medicinal purposes of marijuana, and will discuss his latest book, Marijuana, the Forbidden Medicine, published by Harvard University Press.

Grinspoon is a graduate of Harvard Medical School and is considered to be an "icon in the fight for marijuana legalization." He is an associate professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School and has written several books on the medicinal uses of cannabis.

Grinspoon is currently the editor of the Harvard Mental Health Letter, and serves on the advisory board of the Physicians for Human Rights. He has testified before the House Select Committee on Narcotics, the Controlled Substances Advisory Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee. Grinspoon has written 12 books on subjects ranging from drug addiction to schizophrenia.

"As a marijuana legalization activist, I think Lester Grinspoon is the most valuable asset our movement has," said Aaron Wilson, president of the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition. "His books form the core of what our movement is made of."

Grinspoon began studying marijuana in 1967 because he wanted to examine the "terribly destructive drug that everyone was talking about." Grinspoon said that he discovered that the greatest harm was that the government was arresting over 400,000 people a year.

"I discovered that I had been brainwashed like most people in America," Grinspoon said. "Marijuana is far less harmful than alcohol and cigarettes."

According to Grinspoon, the government has kept a false position on marijuana and should "reconsider marijuana with its medical uses."

Grinspoon also cited the important medicinal uses of marijuana in the treatment in multiple sclerosis, AIDS, epilepsy, glaucoma and nausea.

"He is a credible source — the man is brilliant," Wilson said. "He is not some long–haired kid; he is a credible doctor from Harvard. He has such honesty and integrity for what he does." Wilson also said that Grinspoon is not charging a speaking fee.

Grinspoon will speak at 7:30 p.m. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Looking forward to break

Spring break.

It's just under a month away, and I am anxiously awaiting its arrival. It's a break from the rigors of college life, a vacation of sorts for us hard-working students. It's only a week, but it's a much-needed seven days off from classes. I'm looking forward to it. There's one tiny, minuscule, problem.

I have no idea how I'm going to spend it.

Kind of a problem, considering my last spring break. There was snow. There was cold. I was at home.

I love my home, but a spring break is not intended to be spent at home. When I was in grade school, I didn't hesitate to spend my vacation there. Playing with my friends, running around without tiring, riding our Huffy dirt bikes around the neighborhood, playing manhunt — those days of the break were filled with activities.

Andrew Bryce

Now that I am a collegiate student, the break is different. it is trips to Cancun, Florida and California. It is spending a ton of cash on those trips. it is days of partying it up under the sun.

And if the plan does not include money and trips, it is working at home for cash, or hanging around with your buddies at home who are just as dirt poor as you are.

As for me, I am penny–pinching to put away some money for a possible voyage during the break. I want to do something wildly interesting, memorable, exciting and entertaining.

ideas are starting to roll around in my head as I speak:

I could go to a Guns and Roses concert the day spring break starts like I did last year, only to have it cancelled, and have to get brought home in the blizzard by my friends from home who were coming up to see the concert, after my roommate and I were the last students on the entire campus — I can't quite remember the last time I listened to those pathetic jerks who screwed up my first two days of spring break. It may not sound like much, but days are valuable when you spend a vacation at home.

I could go to the video arcade with my friends at home — I just don't see the point in dumping my small amount of cashflow into a video game, and yet, some of my buddies at home insist on spending quality time there. Probably the best part of going to the video arcade with my friends during the last break was seeing my friend hurt his wrist while playing a punching game. That was the last game played before we left the arcade.

I could go to California — Let's see. I have one, two, three, four... five dollars saved up for a trip. I'm almost there.

I could go clubbing back at home — I do three things at a club. I try to dance, though i haven't truly mastered the concept. I try to drink from my older friends' cups, only to get a sip before a worker dude who looks as if he has watermelons underneath his arms walks by. And i sweat. Anyone up for going to the arcade?

I could go home to work — Man, I crack myself up.

I could spend my time on the phone fighting with the Bursar's Office like I did each day for the last two weeks of the winter break — I was always taught to respect my elders — except for those at the Bursar's.

I could go to Florida — How much money did I say I had?

I could get a good book to read for the break — No problem. It has to be a book that is meant to be read on an airplane or on a beach under the bright sun. Hey, I have my conditions.

I could do a load of laundry — it needs to be done sometime.

I could help my mother around the house by washing the dishes or vacuuming or dusting — But then, my mom would think something was wrong with me.

I could rent some movies at Blockbuster Video — Wait, i can't. i almost forgot; I have that late bill from the last break.

I could wait by the mailbox each day for my snail — Yet, the only thing I get to open are letters that say "and family."

I could listen to Tony Robbins while vacationing at home — i may be at home, but Tony would make me feel good about myself.

I could join the Lionel Richie Fan Club — Hopefully there is still room for one more big fan.

I could bitch and moan about where I wasn't able to go on the break — Basically the same as last year.

I could stop writing this damn column and start counting my money and trying to figure out ways to make some more — There's a penny. . . I got a nickel in my drawer. . . here's a couple of quarters. . . i have five and change now, baby. i'm on my way.

Andrew Bryce is a Collegian columnist.

I'm not confused, are you?

What I'd like to talk about is bisexuality and biphobia. Hopefully I will dispel a few stereotypes as weil.

Bisexuality is attraction to people of both biological genders emotionally and sexually. This does not mean a bisexual person needs to be involved with a woman and a man at the same time, nor does it mean that they would need to be in a relationship at all.

To me this really means being attracted to people, not genders. After all, when you fall in love with someone is it their biological gender that you find appealing, or is it the person? Isn't it the way they smile at you, the sound of their voice, the touch of their hand to yours that makes you feel so good inside? Not the fact that they are a woman or a man. It comes down to love, plain and simple, and not limiting oneself because one person has a penis and another has a vagina.

After all, when you fall in love with someone is it their biological gender you find appealing, or is it the person? Isn't it the way they smile at you, the sound of their voice, the touch of their hand in yours that makes you feel good inside?

Stephen C. Campbell

Bisexuals are not people so horny that they'll jump on anything that moves, nor do they need a male partner one minute and a female partner the next. it is also possible for someone who is bisexual to be in a monogamous relationship — though some say otherwise.

Love is not a dichotomy of being gay or straight. If it were, there would be no such thing as bisexuality. There are many points in between these two extremes, as well as outside of them, and i should know — i am at one of these points. I am not a straight man with homosexual tendencies, nor am I a gay man with heterosexual tendencies. I am bisexual. Some people in both the queer and the straight communities would say that I am going through a phase. They say that I will eventually "get off the fence" and make my choice.

A person's sexuality is not a static thing. it never, never stays constant throughout a person's life. It changes as the person grows, matures, and experiences. To be honest, some people do use bisexuality as a stage in their lives, but people also use homosexuality and heterosexuality as a stage. Also, some people are comfortable right where they are. Experience and practice are not necessarily indicators of a person's sexual orientation.

One of the difficulties in being bisexual is the fact that I will be identified by others according to the relationship i'm in. if I'm involved with a woman i will be seen as straight, and by some in the queer community as taking advantage of heterosexual privilege. This means I can go out with a woman, get married, receive spousal benefits, etc., without being harassed or worrying about safety. i could even safely be affectionate in public. They might also say that i'm just too scared to come out of the closet all the way. Because of assumptions like this and others, some homosexuals see bisexuals as hindrances to the gay rights movement, not as assets. They are wrong.

On the other hand, if I'm involved with a man i will be seen as a gay. I will be denied equal rights to employment, housing and family. I will not be able to go everywhere I would like with my partner, because some places are not safe places to be gay.

Some straight people would say I'm just confused and i'll grow out of it. Others would say I'm just another bleeding–heart fag, destroying the American way of life, crying out, "Help me! I'm being oppressed!" They, too, are wrong.

I am not confused. i am not denying my true self. I am certainly not hiding from persecution. I am bisexual. By saying this, I and other bisexuals are leaving ourselves open for persecution from both the homosexual and heterosexual communities. This is biphobia.

There are many bisexual–identified people out there now. We are your bosses, your employees, your friends and neighbors. We are your parents and siblings. We are your lovers. We are, as I see it, a gateway to bring all the communities together. The lesbian, bisexual, gay and straight groups living and working together for each other.

Race-based aid discriminates

Last Thursday the Clinton administration supported a proposal stating that colleges and universities throughout the country can award scholarships on the basis of race.

Scholarships on the basis of race?!

This proposal seemed to come and go without a peep of opposition. Am I the only one who sees this as unjust? Reverse discrimination has once again reared its ugly head, and this time it's more serious than ever.

The Clinton administration's education department claims that race–based scholarships will remedy past discrimination and diversify institutions of higher education.

Who are they kidding?

The discrimination that has occurred and still occurs in this country is inexcusable, and a scar on the history of this nation. But does anyone really believe that increasing the financial aid available to minorities will remedy the problem?

The discrimination that minorities have endured is inexcusable, but current college students cannot be expected to be punished for the crimes of their ancestors.

Matthew Vautour

Instead of trying to end the discrimination, the federal government is advocating reversing the problem and slighting whites instead. This policy will keep capable students out of higher education and, rather than easing tensions, will cause even more resentment between races.

In most careers, a college education is essential to getting a job and succeeding in it. During these difficult economic times, college costs are still rising. Paying for college is tough for everybody right now, not just minorities. A student's need has to come before one's race, or capable students will be dropping out for financial reasons in even greater numbers.

The government is saying that universities can ignore need and academic performance and give a scholarships to minority students in an effort to "diversify" their campus. But financial aid and scholarships should be need–based and blind to one's race.

The civil rights laws that exist in the United States shouldn't only protect minorities; they should defend everyone and ensure that all persons are treated as equals.

In an Associated Press article, Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education, stated that "these programs are symbolically very important." Financial aid is not an issue to be used as a "symbol," it is a very real, tangible issue with a very real impact on students trying to further their educations.

There is a trend of thought in the 1990s that minorities need to be appeased with reparations for past injustices. The discrimination that minorities have endured is inexcusable, but current college students cannot be expected to be punished for the crimes of their ancestors.

Years from now, when lack of financial aid has forced some white students to drop out of college, will the government step in to repay them for this injustice? Don't bet on it. Yet, if it were a minority student losing out on financial aid, it would be branded as racism and would probably set off an outcry. When it's the white student being slighted, it is done under the misnomer of "diversity," and the question of fairness doesn't even come into the issue.

Race–based scholarships are unconstitutional and should be abolished. Take out the check box on forms that ask for race. We're all needy.

Farrakhan's speech full of racism, lies

To the editor:

I was outraged when I read the cover story about Louis Farrakhan in last Tuesday's issue of the Collegian ["Farrakhan visit topic of debate," Feb. 15]. It is deplorable that the University is allowing someone who has publicly made racist comments, and supports the erroneous racist statements of others, to speak at our school.

The chancellor is supporting the visit because of the First Amendment. I would like to know if the chancellor is also in favor of having other bigots, such as David Duke or neo– Nazis, come voice their opinions on minorities. The First Amendment only goes so far. In sixth grade my teacher said that although we have free speech, one cannot yell, "Fire!" in a crowded theater.

if we can't yell fire, then I don't see why Mr. Farrakhan can make and support racist statements that are lies. In the book The Secret Relationship between Blacks and Jews written by Farrakhan's senior aide, Chalet Abdul Mohammed, the statement is made that the Jews owned 75 percent of the slaves in the antebellum South.

This statement is a severe distortion of the truth. The fact that Mohammed is referring to is that 75 percent of Jews in the South did own slaves. However, since Jews made up such a small part of the population of the South, it is safe to say that the majority of slaves were not held by Jews.

I am a strong believer in the First Amendment. However, I am also a strong believer in the truth. I cannot believe that people hide their racism under the foundation of our nation, the Bill of Rights. I am even more disgusted that our University is tolerating it.

Admissions protest cheered by UNLV

To the editor:

I am writing this letter to congratulate the students of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst for their victorious efforts against the skyrocketing cost of tuition.

Since 1988, the students of the University of Nevada at Las Vegas (UNLV) have faced similar outrageous increases. Although we did battle through other means, the results were the same. it took the courage of one person to simply say "no" to the proposed increases. Through the efforts of our student government, we achieved the first moratorium in our state's history.

As the student body president and leader of the six–month– long fight, my heart goes out to the students who displayed their courage and unwavering devotion to their cause. Be proud of yourselves. . . I certainly am.

SGA senator says work has just begun

In the battle of stopping tuition and fee increases for next year, we, the students of the University of Massachusetts, have the toughest road still ahead of us.

Now is the time for students to band together to ensure that our Legislature passes a measure that gives us the proper state funding to freeze tuition.

Students must register to vote, whether it be in Amherst or their own home towns.

We must vote for candidates that support state funding of higher education. Without funding from the state, UMass is in danger of becoming a private institution through tuition retention.

Senator, Baker House

Earls stresses education, common sense

By RODNEY POWELL
Collegian Staff

Although scheduled to speak on the struggles and challenges of students of color in the field of science, Dr. Julian Earls' lecture last Thursday was focused on the struggles and challenges of all students of color.

Speaking in Bowker Auditorium as part of the ALANA Lecture Series, Earls expressed a strong belief in the idea that "education is more than classrooms and laboratories."

Earls spoke on a wide range of topics dealing with problems facing students of color, race relations and Black History Month. He began by answering the question of whether or not there should be a Black History Month.

"We would not need a Black history month if White people told the truth about history," Earls said. He continued by explaining that Blacks would not need to celebrate any special group's history if the truth had been told from the beginning. He also explained that this did not mean Blacks should tear down anyone else's contributions to history, but that the complete truth must be told.

Throughout his presentation, Earls used a variety of humorous anecdotes that kept the fairly small audience on their toes, laughing and interested in hearing everything the eloquent and articulate speaker had to say. His effective style of presentation had the Bowker Auditorium sounding like it was holding a full house rather than the handful of students that were actually in attendance.

Earls' opinion on how students should deal with each other was that they should "stop viewing each other as the competition." He promoted the idea of banding together to work toward a common goal. He stated that "our success is not dependent on someone else's failure." These statements pertained to students in the classroom as well as people in society.

Earls opposed the idea of "neutrality," which he defined as when people of color get into important, policy–making positions and get comfortable, feeling they should not address issues of race. He suggested that "neutrality helps the oppressor and never the victim," and that "silence encourages the tormentor and never the tormented."

He believes people of color who attain these policy– making positions should use the position to "lift up our people." Otherwise, Earls says, "they should not get the position."

He also spoke about equality and double standards. "People of color have to be twice as good to go one half as far up the socio–economic ladder," Earls said. He suggested that true equality of opportunity will come when we see mediocre people of color in policy–making positions. "This nation will not accept that," he said, "but mediocre White males become president and vice president of the United States." Earls said Blacks cannot let such things make them distant; they just have to get better. He also urged Blacks to remember that "not all White folks are your enemies and not all people of color are your friends."

Earls' speech was very inspirational and he was successful in bringing his views across in an effective manner. He had the full and complete attention of the audience from the beginning and had no trouble in keeping their attention throughout his presentation. Unfortunately the audience was not as large as it should have been. Those who did not attend missed something special.

Students speak out on Farrakhan's visit

"How do you feel about Farrakhan coming to speak at UMass?"

Eric Poulin

"UMass, although it claims to be a center of diversity, does not always hold true with that statement. Bringing Farrakhan here to speak can only be perceived as a positive gesture."

GIGI Dujour

"I feel that it's a freedom of speech. I feel those who don't agree with what he says shouldn't bother showing up."

Dan Shea

"I think the school could find a better way of spending $25,000. Farrakhan is to whites what David Duke is to blacks. Hate is hate regardless of color."

Matt

"The man has a right to his opinion and I respect that. After all, this is a free country. I don't believe that the students of this University who don't agree with his views should have to pay for his visit. All in all, Farrakhan has a right to speak his beliefs, and if it happens to be at UMass, so it be."

Tavis Phillips

"He's a controversial figure but he has something to say. Those who don't want to hear what he has to say shouldn't listen. Those who are interested in what he has to say should have the right to hear him."

Eric Sutton

"Whether you are in favor of Farrakhan or not he definitely gets the attention of UMass students. You have a large amount of the African–American students that are anticipating his arrival. it all boils down to the First Amendment: he has the right to preach his views here at UMass or anywhere else."

Appearance, reality aren't the same thing

Before I came to UMass, I was overwhelmed by what seemed to be a strong sense of solidarity among Black students — particularly the many protests that took place after the Initial Rodney King verdict was passed down.

However, upon arrival I was confronted by the obvious reality that this "strong sense of solidarity" was a fallacy. Even my family and friends who came to visit me here on campus have noticed this also. There are certain things that I find important to the survival of the Black student that I would like to address.

Roxanne Huddleston

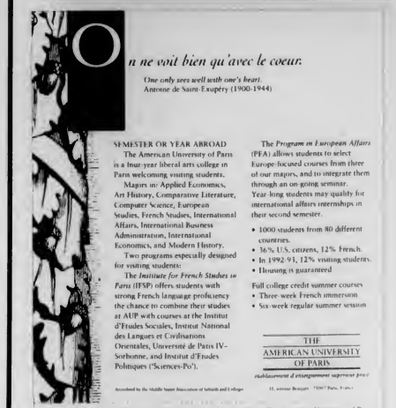
First, I would like to know why is it so difficult for us to greet and acknowledge each other's presence on campus. Why is it a problem for us to say, "Hi," "hello," or even "w'zup?" As a Black student on campus, I feel it is vital for us to acknowledge each other's presence. This alleviates the feeling of isolation and helps you know you are not alone in your quest to succeed in a predominantly White environment.

Too many times I've passed a brother or sister and instead of speaking, they just look away, look at the ground, or even better, pretend i'm not there. In my opinion, it is our nature to be cordial towards each other and any time we deviate from that we are disrespecting a bond that is essential for our progress in every aspect of life.

Second, while I feel it is important for us to identify with our respective heritages, it is ironic that in 1994 our people are still plagued by this crisis. Whether you are from Jamaica, Detroit, Haiti or Belzoni, the fact of the matter is we all hail from the same continent. Instead of creating barriers that cripple our struggle, we should embrace diversity because It is our strength. Simply stated, "It's not where you from, it's where you at." However, we put more energy into concentrating on our differences than what makes us alike.

Finally, there are a few registered student organizations on campus that function for the purpose of networking and providing support systems that we need, and there are many that exist for purposes unknown. As students, it is our responsibility to seek and find these organizations that we pay for and make them responsive to our needs.

On the other hand, many of these same RSOs operate in small cliques and it is very easy to be turned off. More importantly, if we don't start bridging these gaps in our community on campus and in the Five College area, our numbers will continue to decrease. Just look around on campus.



So as we approach the end of the end of the 29 days allotted for the celebration of our history, let us reflect on the essence of past movements. Unity, unity will give our struggle a type of strength in spirit that will enable us to make some REAL concrete progress.

Black students, we need to put all of the pettiness and bull—— behind us. Let us unite.

Dating double standards

He said: God is playing another cruel joke on us guys

By CUTTER GARCIA
Collegian Staff

Every once in a while, as He sits there in heaven watching his erect monkeys find new and interesting ways to defame Him here on earth, God gets mad and decides to play some hugely belittling joke on us so he can prove his eminence and embarrass us all.

Some of the greatest Holy Ha-Ha's aimed at men have come down in the forms of: the leisure suit, receding hairlines, obstructed view seating in the Boston Garden, jock itch, beautiful women who snub you in nightclubs and probably the biggest laugh of them all — premature ejaculation. Ha, ha, ha.

Now you'd think that after all of these punishments He'd give us a break and start playing some of these pranks on the opposite sex. Maybe cut us some slack so we could try to regroup and counter the attack. But just when things seemed to be about the worst they could possibly get, when we were face down in the gutter with a shoe on the back of our collective necks, John Lennon had to go and open his stupidly insectile mouth and make that crack about being more popular than Christ. And how did the good Lord handle that one? He went and changed the rules on dating.

It used to be that the rules were simple. Men were men and the women loved them for being such. We were strong, we were virile, we drank beer, smoked cigars and never ever stopped to ask for directions. John Wayne and Lee Marvin were too busy kicking ass to stop and smell the roses and even if they had found a moment or two to do so, they most likely would've just picked their teeth with the thorns.

Then when the late sixties came something really bizarre happened. Alan Alda and Phil Donahue showed up and changed our dating destinies. They introduced sensitivity and the understanding of our inner, child–like selves and just stood there and smiled as they watched Woody Allen metaphorically rip the spine out of Steve McQueen's back in order to make a picture frame of it for his mom.

And who's left to pay the price for this sick joke? We are. The generation X–ers. If you've ever wondered just how we got that cute little Newsweek cover story nickname for ourselves I have a nagging suspicion that it's in relation to one of the chromosomes they ripped from us during those oh–so–enlightening '70s.

Now women want so much more from us than we were ever biologically meant to deliver. We are simple folk, we men. We are hunters, therefore — we hunt. We are no good at these ritualized forms of decorum and angst so commonly associated with dating today.

In today's dating scene men are constantly walking a tightrope stretched between the mountains of futility and aggravation. First we have to struggle with the fear of rejection. In this society the man is responsible for the impetus of invitation.

While women are always ready to jump on the feminism bandwagon when it offers them some form of convenience like equal pay, the right to vote and the ability to wear pants, they don't mind claiming their right to old fashioned femininity when it comes to the hard stuff, like asking someone out on a date. And while my confused colleague would argue that women do ask men out on dates, let's talk averages. What are the stats for that happening — maybe one every 337? Keep swimming Em, eventually you'll reach the surface.

Then we have to deal with the communication problems. As far as a guy is concerned the definition of the word date is easily understood as an appointment to meet socially (Webster himself was a man) but had Mr. W. been a woman the description would more likely read something to the effect of: date n. an event which transpires between a man and a woman in which afterwards the man must sacrifice any and all of his natural instincts by agreeing to sign away a piece of his soul in order to keep the female peaceful while retaining his scrotum.

We pay for the dates, we drive to the dates, we go to silly places while on these dates, places like art galleries, poetry readings, the ballet and the Ice Capades just in the hopes that you'll be impressed enough to want to sleep with us when it's all said and done. And how are we most commonly rewarded for our troubles? With a pat on the back and an invitation to go through it all again the following weekend.

And I'm willing to bet that He's up there just laughing his omnipotent head off the whole time. Heh, heh, heh.

Who knows why it is and when you stop to think about it, who are we to ask? The way I figure it, when it comes to the issue of dating, men and women are as different as night and day and we're never going to find the dusk where the twain shall meet to blend. Women refuse to try and understand men and men will never be able to understand women. In fact, it's a lot like trying to teach a pig to sing. It just wastes your time and frustrates the pig.

Now she'll try to tell you that the real problem revolves around romance and the death of mystery in dating, but that isn't what this column is about. Romance is a wonderful thing which should be celebrated and cheered (after all, the world's greatest romantics have always been men) but as usual when it comes to beating a scapegoat for any social dilemma existing today, the male is the most convenient snot rag to blow on.

Country music is not high on the musical priority list of a northeastern college student. The hooting of Garth Brooks and Travis Tritt just doesn't do much to a bunch of city kids. Uncle Tupelo may be inadvertently changing this.

Anodyne, the recent release by Midwestern alternative– country trio Uncle Tupelo, has the audacity to introduce the college–rock market to a musical style preferred hundreds of miles south and west of here.

Hail the greater accessibility of country as Uncle Tupelo comes to the iron Horse in Northampton.

Jay Farrar and Jeff Tweedy aren't much for elaborate design or dressing to impress but the music of Uncle Tupelo is so ferociously scorched with punk influences quelled by the structure and precision of country, it easily accounts for their lack of physical presence.

Anodyne stands proudly as Uncle Tupelo's landmark album, where they finally and successfully merge country with college rock. After two more uptempoed and electric efforts, No Depression and Still Feel Gone, the duo ventured into the studio for the perhaps too sedate March 16–20, 1992. It received the least praise of their albu o date and forced a repackaging of the: and on Anodyne.

"Acuff Rose" / "Anodyne," "Give Back the Key to My Heart" are solidly grounded in country acoustic strumming. "The Long Cut" and "Chickamauga" accelerate into harder electric riffs. Most appealing is the seeming legitimacy with which the Belleville, Ill., native express their views.

Two years ago, Uncle Tupelo was mismatched opening for college sweethearts like Teenage Fanclub, but 1994 finds them in appropriately more mature settings like the Iron Horse. They are smartly paired with opening act, Mammoth recording artist Joe Henry, who owns an equally country–based style. This is not to be missed.

Uncle Tupelo and Joe Henry bring southern flair to the Iron Horse in Northampton tomorrow at 7 p.m. for an all ages show. Tickets are $10.50.

She said: Real–life romance is a scarce commodity

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Dating. A difficult topic to discuss, mostly due to the fact that it is so hard to define. I don't believe that dating actually exists anymore, at least not on this campus. Cosmic romance is a thing of the past, and we are left with few options that allow us to deal with people who turn our insides mushy and make our hearts pound.

I am not, contrary to tradition, going to blame this lack of true romance completely on men (although if you check out what he said, you may disagree). The women's movement continues to redefine the way in which men and women think of each other. Male friends of mine assert that many men are afraid to approach women who come across as being ambiguous, and that in many cases it seems that they simply can't do anything right when it comes to dealing with women.

Likewise, I know women who feel that while they like to maintain their independence and seem emotionally strong in all personal relationships, these tactics often scare men away, or keep them at an uncomfortable distance.

And then there's the problem of eliminating that initial distance. While we all like to think that we have a good grasp on convincing that special someone (and the rest of the world) that we are not slaves to our emotions and could really care less if he or she calls or displays even the slightest interest in us, we are all phonies, deep down.

I have observed a few ways in which the pseudo–cool try to manifest their emotions in various situations, and I conclude that romance is a rarely–found treasure.

We can all think of couples we know who have seemingly been together forever. I'm sure that most of these relationships started out well enough, and that the buds of romance were oh–so–close to blooming. At one time, these people were ecstatic at the mere thought of Mr. or Ms. X, the phone calls, the movie dates, the strolls along North Pleasant Street or around the common. Studying became an opportunity to spend quality time together instead of spending empty hours at the library, and the dining commons was transformed into a mystical dining experience as they munched on bagel dogs together.

But then something usually changes, some cosmic alignment shifts and the proverbial honeymoon ends. Mr./Ms. X doesn't like the fact that sweetlips is talking to the beautiful creature at the party that has been cast-

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Talking things over with an executive could give you valuable answers. You must become more objective about someone who has become an irritant. Loved ones give you fresh insights regarding an old problem.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Follow your intuition in domestic matters. You can save money by taking care of things yourself. You will perform well in science–related activities.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Do all you can to work what you want. Help comes from a surprising source. Rearrange your schedule to accommodate others, and leave some time for fun. A romance is just beginning.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Your popularity is on the rise. Good manners will win you the attention of someone difficult to please. Remember, you need all the support you can get.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Pay no attention to older individuals who think they have all the answers. New starts are favored. Resolve it is foolish to continue destructive habits — replace them with healthy new ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A great day to engage in group activities. Lend your special talents, especially if no money is involved. Disguised behavior is a big plus, so long as you do not act too still.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Your agenda attracts new friends and support. Promote your ideas with flair. A long–distance reunion could be opportune. You benefit both physically and mentally from a change in lifestyle.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Be careful not to make a big production out of something you overhear. What developments will dictate your best course of action. Consult experts before signing contracts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Be open–minded about changes; others will admire your flexibility. Stay in touch with friends who have helped you in the past. They could do so again! Cultivate your writing or public speaking skills.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Use your organizational talents to help the disadvantaged. Tackling a special project with confidence. Make it in sympathy with your long–term goals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Balance work with play. Patience and faith will see you through some difficult financial times. Practice small economies. Do not blow a loan of romance down on your way!

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Stay upbeat when you are outer–ranged and roadblocked. Old friends will come to your rescue. Be more patient with higher–ups; new things learn their points of view. Map out plans with loved ones.

ing hopeful glances all night. Phone conversations are either brief and tense or long and pointless. Eventually "honey" turns into "ball and chain," and freedom seems like a long way away. Then the break up occurs, and both former members of the X party rave that they are too young to be serious with one person, and that they should date a variety of people while in college. Which leads to a whole other set of problems.

When you stop and think about how many sexually willing and able young men and women there are on campus, meeting people wouldn't seem like a problem. However, (and I think what he said may have overlooked this) there is a difference between meeting that sexual dynamo and finding someone with whom you can really relate, and who won't assume instantly that you are envisioning wedding bells.

This is where my gingerbread theory comes into play. Gingerbread people are those who can pretty much hook up with anybody in whatever state (drunken or sober) and be happy. Gingerbread people are generic in a sense, their interaction with others tends to end at a certain level (like after, "So, do you like Pearl Jam? Oh my GOD, me too!" or "Yeah, I'm thinking about the five–year plan myself," or better yet, "You're from where? I know someone from there! Do you know so and so?").

Vague physical encounters that usually end when the hangover sets in are all–too–common for the average gingerbread man/woman until next weekend, when the next party kicks off and the bars fill up.

Gingerbread people have sober cookie–cutter (sorry Garcia, no pun intended) relationships, too, that may even last for weeks or months. The underlying factor remains, however, that the bond these people share lacks the uniqueness that each individual brings to the relationship — they could just as easily find another gingerbread person the next day and pick up pretty much where the last cookie left off.

Now assorted bakery cookies, on the other hand, are looking for something different — something that will indicate to them that there is something remotely spiritual about our peers that separates humans from other life forms. Each assorted bakery cookie is different, with a completely individual flavor.

Not just anyone can truly appreciate these tasty treats. Finding them usually requires a special trip to just the right bakery (timing is everything), it typically takes longer to eat them, and you've really got to understand what the realm of assorted bakery cookies is about in order to savor and enjoy the one you finally sink your teeth into.

With all this said, I will leave you to ponder the whole dating thing. If you read what he said you'll realize that there are, indeed, many different ways to perceive the world of hormones and emotion, lust and love.

My point is that somewhere, wrapped nicely in a bakery box, tied with string is the epitome of a balance of these things which inspire us to get to know other people in the first place.

Second half streak buries St. Joseph's

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Yet again, No. 11 Massachusetts made the home-town fans in the William D. Mullins Center await the final shot. Unlike in past games, the decision of the game did not hang in the balance, only the score.

Donta Bright recorded a double-double, including eight points in the first six minutes of the second half, as the Minutemen (22–5, 12–1 Atlantic 10) buried A–10 foe St. Joseph's (11–13, 3–11 A–10) last night 99–73, avenging last week's loss in Philadelphia to the Hawks.

The Mullins Center crowd, with the outcome already determined, stood in anticipation of the Minutemen surpassing the century mark for the first time all season, but as the waning seconds ticked off the clock, Massachusetts faithful had to wait another day.

Bright led five Minutemen in double figures with 18 points and 10 rebounds; juniors Mike Williams (16 points, nine in the second half), Derek Kellogg (15 points, all on three-pointers) and Lou Roe (14 points, 10 rebounds), along with freshman Edgar Padilla (13 points, 8–9 from the free throw line) rounded out the quintet.

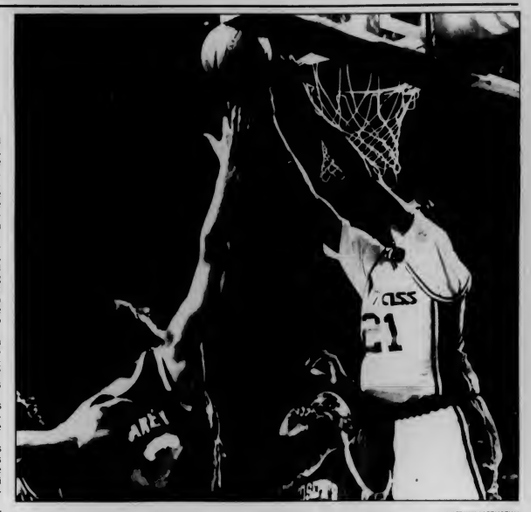
With 16:24 left to go in the contest and only up by five points, Massachusetts outscored the Hawks 24–4 to take an insurmountable 70–45 lead, putting to rest any ideas that another upset would occur.

"Because we lost down there, we wanted to come out tonight and show who is the better team," Bright said. "We matched their intensity [in the first half] and then we took it to another level. That shook 'em up."

After shooting 43 percent from the floor in the first half, the Hawks found little success from the field in the second as the Massachusetts defense clamped down, allowing St. Joe's to only hit 10 of 30 attempts.

At the same time, the Minuteman offense began to click. Bright started the second half with two jumpers which sandwiched two Hawk forward Carlin Warley free throws, giving Massachusetts a 42–35 advantage.

The seven-point buige for the Minutemen would only be sliced one more time when a jumper by St. Joe's Dmitri Domani (game-high 20 points) cut the Massachusetts lead to 46–41. On the next series, Padilla drove to the left block and drew a foul on Hawk center Wilbur Johnson (six points, five rebounds). Johnson was visibly unhappy with the blocking call and let the officials know it; unfortunately Johnson and the Hawks, they slapped him with a technical.



After Padilla hit one of his two free throws, the barrage began. On the ensuing inbounds play, Massachusetts used perfect bail movement as forward Dana Dingle (eight points, four rebounds) slid along the baseline and found a cutting Roe in the paint who jammed it home, giving the Minutemen a seven-point lead once again. The Roe slam was the beginning of the end for the Hawks as Griffin's club would get no closer.

"The first 10 minutes of the [second] half they got a lot of baskets in the lane, getting the ball to Lou Roe and or off the offensive backboard," Griffin said. "it became sort of a 'who controls the line of scrimmage' kind of game and they controlled the game. That's where the game was decided."

St. Joe's was able to withstand a Massachusetts charge that gave the Minutemen a 21–10 lead immediately out of the gates thanks to the play of reserve guard Terrell Myers.

Despite going 0–for–3 from the field, Myers replaced starter Rap Curry, who had three turnovers in the first three minutes, at the point and kept the Hawks in the game. Myers was able to find Domani and Johnson for key hoops during the St. Joe's comeback in the first half.

Massachusetts travels to Philadelphia, the city where the Minutemen received their last loss, tomorrow night to battle No. 8 Temple in McGonigle Hall.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts sent a message to St. Joseph's early in the second half last night in the William D. Mullins Center — there would be no upset again, as the Minutemen won 99–73.

First A–10 loss avenged in blowout win

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

The servings were hot and plentiful last night at the William D. Mullins Center as the Massachusetts Minutemen served the St. Joseph's Hawks some revenge pie in the form of a 99–73 shellacking.

UMass was shocked just one week prior at Alumni Memorial Hall in Philadelphia when St. Joseph's squeaked by the Minutemen 81–80 on a Kevin Connors free throw with 00:2 seconds left.

But there would be none of that last night as UMass ripped off a 30–5 run in a eight-minute span midway through the second half. The run, which might be better termed a marathon, stretched a five-point UMass lead at 46– 41 with 16:24 to go to a 30–point bulge at 76–46 with 8:40 left in the contest.

The huge run was orchestrated by a number of things; tough, gritty defense, solid outside shooting, and crisp ball movement. According to UMass' Donta Bright, who pumped in a team-high 18 points and 10 rebounds, it was the intensity of the Minutemen which got the Minutemen going.

"We came out and matched their intensity and then we just took it to another level and that shook them up," Bright said. The 6-foot–6 sophomore forward appears to be taking his game to another level right now; in his last two outings, Bright has combined for 37 points and 17 rebounds. After sitting out a year, Bright said there is a reason why his rust is starting to wear off.

"I feel comfortable now because I know how Coach Calipari wants me to play," he said. And according UMass Coach John Calipari, Bright is playing just the way he wants him to.

"Donta Bright is just playing terrific basketball for us right now," said Calipari.

After falling to St. Joseph's last week, Bright said the Minutemen had something to prove to the Hawks.

"We wanted to come out today and show them who was the better team," he said.

It looked as though UMass would prove that early on as the Minutemen pressed and trapped their way to a 16–5 lead a little over three minutes into the game. Then the Mullins Center crowd started to chant the classic, "it's all over," and indeed it did appear that the Hawks could be done for.

However, the Hawks used a 16–3 run to turn a 21–10 deficit into a 26–24 lead with 5:07 left in the first half. Down 33–31 with 1:44 to go in the first half, UMass used a 7–0 run to take a 38–33 lead at the half.

UMass guard Derek Kellogg (15 points, 5 treys) said the offense finally began to run smoothly in the second half.

"I think it's about time that our offense is starting to come together a little bit," Kellogg said. "We got the movement and the shooting like the Sweet Sixteen team of a couple of years ago."

The Minutemen hoisted up 19 threes, burying eight of them for a 42 percent efficiency. According to Kellogg, the St. Joe's defense forced that.

"They were doing a lot of double teaming, packing it in," he said. "Our guys in the post did a nice job dishing it back out."

Calipari said that revenge was one thing not on his mind.

"It [the game] wasn't about them [St. Joe's], it was about us," Calipari said.

He should try telling that to St. Joseph's.

Player of the Game

Donta Bright
Massachusetts

Bright was again the man that started it all for Massachusetts as he scored eight points in the Minuteman run early in the second half, helping bury St. Joseph's Tuesday night. He finished with a double-double (18 points, 10 rebounds) and was one of five Minutemen in double figures in scoring; Bright didn't succumb to his early season traveling problems either — no turnovers in the victory over the Hawks.

WHY MASSACHUSETTS WON THE GAME

Did you really think the Minutemen would lose? Coming off the upset loss at Hawk Hill at the hands of St. Joe's last week, the players said there was no way they were letting this one get away. Massachusetts used a 30–5 second-half run to do two things — bury St. Joseph's and send a message to the Temple Owls, their next opponent, tomorrow night at McGonigle Hall in Philadelphia where the Minutemen have never won. Ever.

SPORTS NOTICE

Tickets for the men's basketball game against Duquesne March 2 and Friday night's hockey game versus R.I.T. will be handed out starting at 7 a.m. tomorrow morning at the Curry Hicks Cage. If any lines form before then, tickets will be handed out via a lottery system. Students must have an I.D. and an activity card.

Minutewomen disappoint, just get by NU

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

Sometimes you have to take a step back before you can take two steps forward.

For the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team, the victory over Northeastern last Saturday was just that — UMass won a tight victory over NU in a very low–scoring meet.

The Minutemen tallied a total score of 180.6, with the Huskies right behind at 179.8. The UMass score represents almost a nine–point drop–off from the weekend before.

UMass Coach David Kuzara juggled with the lineup, allowing Ruth Reeves, Angela Jent and Margaret Furtado to compete in the all–around.

Kuzara held back the usual all–arounders Shaheda Keels and freshmen Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz to rest them and get everyone involved.

"We had to get everyone involved, to see where we are. For later on in the season with injuries, we have to get all the gymnasts action," Kuzara said.

Laing led the Minutewomen in the vault with a 9.475 with Jent getting a 9.275 as UMass scored a combined 45.525 in the event.

Swartz won the bars with a 9.67S; Erica Baum took second with a 9.3. The Minutewomen picked up a combined 45.9, well ahead of NU at 44.6.

"The scores were low, but we knew going in if we hit all our sets, we were only looking at the 18S range," Kuzara said.

UMass scored especially low on the beam, combining for 42.9 points with NU getting 44.45. Laing again led the Minutewomen, scoring an 8.8, with NU's Robin Beeley taking the beam at 9.375.

Furtado, a senior, won the floor exercise in an amazing performance — she was added to the floor line–up when Keels was forced out with an injury and recorded a 9.575. Furtado ended up leading UMass in the all–around with a combined 36.450.

"Margaret was great, she's in such great shape. She has done so much preparation," Kuzara said.

"We will never let that happen again. We are upset about this score, it brings us down a notch, but we'll be better off for it."

Men's gym drops meet to Temple, Army

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team traveled to West Point this past Saturday and dropped a tri– meet competition to Temple and Army.

The Minutemen took the third and last position with 263.85 total points, 3.35 behind second place Army and 5.95 points behind the first place finisher Temple.

UMass had a strong performance on parallel bars, taking first place in the event, and managed a second place finish in vaulting as well. However, in the remaining four events the Minutemen came up short, taking third place.

UMass Coach Roy Johnson said that the team didn't have its "best day" but there were some highlights from the meet. Johnson pointed in particular to the performance on the parallel bars, where UMass took first place as a team with a score of 44.65.

"We've really been concentrating on parallel bars and made some big improvements there," Johnson said.

In addition, Minuteman gymnast Steven Goldman captured first place in the event with the top score of 9.2 for individual honors.

"That's a big score," Johnson said. "[Goldman] won it and then we won it as a team."

Other top finishers for the Minutemen include freshman Ruslan Shupak, who captured second on the floor exercise with 9.45, and senior Jason Braud, who scored a 9.2 to earn second on the vault.

According to Johnson, one of the keys in their defeat was pommel horse where the Minutemen dropped three points to Temple and two points to Army.

UMass stayed close to its competitors in the remaining events, showing that with a little more consistency, the Minutemen might be able to jump a few points and capture higher finishes as they had done in the previous two weeks.

UMass travels to Syracuse Feb. 26 for a meet against a team that Johnson indicated he is confident his team can compete with.

"We're looking forward to Syracuse," said Johnson. "We have a shot at them."

Also rapidly approaching the Minutemen are the ECAC Championships which they will host on March 12 at the Boyden Gymnastics Center. At the ECACs, according to Johnson, any school in the east that wants to go will clash in an attempt to win championship honors.

Throwers lead women's track in Last Chance

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team had some strong performances this past Friday at the Last Chance Invitational at Brown University, and many Minutewomen will be heading to the New Englands this weekend at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass was strongest in the field events and the relays. Christie Martin, Dhamana Shakespeare, Stephanie Townson and Natalie Landry all qualified for New Englands in the 20 –pound weight while Natalie Hart, Martin and Townson qualified in the shot put.

"The throwers had a field day," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "They did a great job."

Martin is close to qualifying for the ECACs; she needs to hit 48ft and, according to LaFrenlere, she is not far off.

The distant medley relay team, consisting of Kerry Aker in the 800, Erica Doyle in the 400, Jen Waeger in the 1200, and Kim Liljebiad in the mile, came in first with a time of 12:14.8. That time was good enough to qualify for the ECACs. Freshman Anya Forrest, who has been sidelined for virtually the whole indoor season, qualified for the ECACs in the 55m hurdles with a time of 8.44.

"[Anya] Forrest had a great night," LaFreniere said. "She was laid out most of the season so this was a really good comeback for her."

The Minutewomen also qualified for New Englands in the 4x2, 4x4 and 4x8 relays. Kristin Diggs, who needed a 10:20 to qualify for New Englands, ran a time of 10:13.55 in the 3000m.

"It was do or die Friday night and she did a really nice job, she was nice and smooth," LaFreniere said.

Sophomore Megan O'Neill will participate in both the pentathlon and the high jump at New Englands. She needs just 196 points to qualify for ECACs. Janey Meeks has qualified for New Englands in both the triple jump and high jump, but because both events will be held at the same time she will only participate in the triple jump.

Other Minutewomen who will participate in New Englands are Doyle in the 400m, Aker in the 800m, Waeger in the 1000m, Liljebiad in the mile, Katie Greenia in the 5000m and Pasha Summers in the 55m dash. Waeger is another Minutewoman who is close to qualifying for ECACs. She is about one one–hundredth of a second off and should be able to qualify this weekend.

Coalition supports Farrakhan

By MONICA C. JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Black Agenda, a coalition composed of concerned students of African Descent from the five–college area, held a press conference announcing the visit of The Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan.

The press conference took place yesterday at the New Africa House Library. The panel was composed of four persons: Douglas Greer, a member of Phi Beta Sigma; Minister Yusef Muhammad, the head of a mosque in Springfield; Shomwa Shamapande, president of the Black Student Union; and Angela Bronner, a student at Amherst College.

Shomwa Shamapande read a statement that announced why the Black Agenda, Phi Beta Sigma, Graduate Student Senate, Ahora and a host of other student organization and groups decided to bring up The Honorable Louis Farrakhan. The statement also addressed their support for Farrakhan and his efforts.

"Our commitment to hear Minister Farrakhan and any other so–called controversial leader stems from a historical fact. This fact being that throughout the history of Black people in this nation, America has always wished to glorify the dead and persecute our living leaders," said Shamapande.

The press conference which lasted 1S minutes gave local newspapers such as the Amherst Gazette an opportunity to ask questions. Because of the weather, representatives from only a few papers were able to attend.

Some reporters wondered if the negative portrayal of Farrakhan would have an affect on him coming to the University, and if safety was a problem.

Muhammad, representing the Nation of Islam in Springfield, said he hopes that the media will not present Minister Farrakhan as something he is not. "I ask only that you report the truth," said Muhammad.

Muhammad said he also feels that the recent reports on Farrakhan have not been truthful and have not said much about his efforts.

CHRISTOPHER RAGUSA/COLLEGIAN

Minister Yusef Muhammed, Shomwa Shamapande and Angela Bronner, members of the five–college coalition The Black Agenda, announced in a press conference yesterday the visit of The Honorable Louis Farrakhan to UMass.

Minister Louis Farrakhan, will speak at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Wednesday, March 9, at 7:30 p.m. Sale of student tickets began yesterday at the Fine Arts Center box office. Tickets for the general public go on sale March 1. Tickets are $7 for students, $10 for the public. There is a limit of four tickets per person.

Tuition hike discussion set for today

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students can find out what they can do to see that their tuition and fees do not go up any more at panel and discussion at the Cape Cod Lounge today from 4–5 p.m.

Chancellor David K. Scott, State Rep. Elien Story, Student Government Association President David Nuñez and various other faculty and staff will be at the panel being sponsored by the SGA.

Matthew Pavesi, undergraduate student speaker, said the SGA will be counting on students to lead the fight for an increase in state funding for the University system. He said the goal is to convince state legislators to increase the budget for the University by $23.8 million, or a seven percent increase from last year's University budget. Students will also be pushing to increase the state financial aid pool to $100 million from $67 million.

"Everyone who comes to the meeting will be asked to help," Pavesi said. "We need students to call their state representatives and senators. We need students to call their parents, and we need students to go and lobby our state legislators in Boston."

Pavesi said this campaign is being called the "Save Our School" campaign. He said in the past student activism has been successful. In 1990, the UMass community lobbied against question three on the gubernatorial ballot, a referendum that would have rolled state taxes back to 1988 levels and won. Pavesi said the student's efforts helped prevent a 50 percent cut in the University's state appropriation.

Pavesi said during the week of April 11–18, the SGA will be providing buses and vans to take students to Boston to speak with state legislators in person about their concerns over tuition and fees. He also said beginning Tuesday, March 1, the SGA will be inviting students to come up to the SGA office and make phone calls to their representatives in their districts.

"We have a list of all the students by their legislative district," Pavesi said. "Students don't have to know who their reps and senators are before they call.

Also beginning March 1, the SGA will be registering students to vote in the Cape Cod Lounge. He said students can register to vote either in Amherst or in their home city or town. If students want to vote in Amherst but are already registered to vote somewhere else, they can change their registration to Amherst, Pavesi said.

Scandal continues
Soviets who spied for U.S. killed

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At least two Soviets who spied for the United States were killed after being exposed by the career CIA officer who has been accused of selling national security secrets, American officials said Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the accused officer's wife has been cooperating with the government since she was arrested along with her husband on Monday, according to one official, commenting only on condition of anonymity.

The official would not say what Maria del Rosario Casas Ames has disclosed. But her cooperation could be crucial to the government's effort to learn how much damage she and her husband, CIA operations officer Aldrich H. Ames, might have done.

The Clinton administration seemed determined not to allow the issue to ruin relations with Russian President Boris Yeltsin. President Clinton said the case involved a "very serious" breach of security "because of issues that I am not at this time at liberty to discuss." But he cautioned against a drastic change in U.S.-Russia relations.

"I do not think the facts of this case at this time undermine in any way shape or form the policy we have followed the last year toward President Yeltsin and his government and the forces of change in Russia,"

Candidates address homophobia, racism

By STEPHEN C. CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

Candidates for President and Trustee of the Student Government Association spoke at the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance Infosocial last Tuesday.

Three people, George Hardy, Charles Lenchner and Jamie Bearse, are running for the position of SGA President on separate tickets. Joe Vozza and Diego Figueroa are running together on one ticket as president and trustee respectfully. Mirran Raphaely and Al Lizana are running together on another ticket as president and trustee.

Each candidate had ten minutes to speak and answer questions from the audience. All of the candidates said they felt that current tuition and fees are too high and that tension and ignorance are excessive on this campus in regards to ethnic and diverse communities.

When asked on how they expected to combat homophobia and racism on campus, the candidates suggested a range of ideas from required diversity courses to having various RSOs working together to help educate and bring the campus communities together.

Hardy said a mandatory course on diverse groups for all freshmen should be offered, because of the fact that most people when coming to college have had little contact with groups other than their small high school cliques. Hardy and Vozza said they felt

The men's basketball team's blowout victory over St. Joseph's last Tuesday featured another runaway victory at halftime as School of Management professor Dennis Hanno sunk four out of five free throws to win a $1,000 scholarship for senior accounting major Matt Borden in the first–ever "Great Academic Shootout."

The event featured professors from six different schools within the University shooting free throws to win a share of $4,500 in scholarship money for students in their respective schools.

The names of the winning students, selected in advance by the dean's of their schools, were opened from sealed envelopes and read by Chancellor David K. Scott.

Borden was very pleased with being awarded the money.

"Professor Hanno did a great job. They picked me and I'm very pleased and very thankful for that," said Borden.

Scott contributed $1000 to the scholarship fund, Dean of Students Jo–Anne Vanin contributed $500, with an additional $500 coming from the deans of Icy weather a hassle for students

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

The sight of collegiate flesh hitting ice was again visible on campus yesterday as cold weather and snowfall made foot travel treacherous after a brief taste of warmer weather.

The icy weather, which forced the closing of the University at 3 p.m. yesterday, has been a pain in the rear for many students.

"I hate it because I fell over and didn't particularly like it," said Justin Santos, a first year turf management major.

"With the taste of spring, it was kind of upsetting, but it's New England, so what can you expect," said Laura King, a sophomore sociology major.

Students living off–campus also reported being inconvenienced by the renewal of wintery conditions.

"It's horrible. It takes forever to get here. You have to plan like thirty minutes ahead if you have an exam or something," said junior economics major T.J. McEvoy, a Northampton resident.

The number of students seeking medical attention at Health Services because of injuries sustained falling on the ice tends to pick up as walkways and roads become frozen.

This winter Health Services has handled an unusually high number of such cases, according to Leslie Burke, a clerk in the Medical Records Department of Health Services.

Many students take the cold and icy weather in stride.

"I like to ski, so I don't have too many complaints. Mother nature kind of took fall away from us since winter started in October," said Bari Zell, a senior legal studies and sociology major.

The cold and snowy weather has affected UMass in other ways as well. In addition to early campus closings, this winter's high amount of precipitation was blamed for leaks in the roofs of the John Adams and Washington Residence Halls earlier this semester.

Cold weather was also blamed for temperature control malfunctions in several residence halls earlier this semester. Heating systems in Coolidge, Thoreau, Wheeler and Mary Lyon Residence Halls were all affected by prolonged stretches of cold weather.

West analyzes race, democracy

By MONICA C. JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

According to Cornell West, "White Supremacy is like a serpent wrapped around the table on which the declaration of independence was signed, and 218 years later white supremacy haunts the experiment called America. Black Americans are regarded as a problem people, rather than people with problems."

On Tuesday night, February 22nd, there was a large turn out in the Student Union Ballroom to hear Cornell West, who gave a profound philosophical analysis into "Race Matters."

Shomwa Shamapande, president of the Black Student Union, gave the opening address.

In an analysis that was both philosophical, biological and historical, West deemed paranoia in democracy as the problem of race in the United States. West called for a return to values, trust, morality and the quest for truth.

He also called for a return to the things that go beyond hedonism and narcism, which are root causes to erosion of our system. "The elite must not have a monopoly on the ideologies that shape our society," West said.

West made the correlation between poverty and crime saying, "If someone thinks they are not worth anything, they won't think you are either or your property, which thus leads to crime and violence." He gave astounding statistics on young black men who are incarcerated, on parole, and on probation.

He estimated that there are 100,000 incarcerated black men nationwide. The working poor and the criminals is a problem that contributes to the relative economic decline in the chocolate cities, said West. "Society has lost the art of public conversation," thus lack of distrust of one another is inevitable.

According to West, history has pushed their backs against a wall and life has knocked them to their feet. Blacks have held great strength in formuiating resistance, but we must continue, because "resistance is important."

"We don't have optimism, but we do have hope," West said, "The world is prematurely ended Black Freedom and struggle."

West concluded by saying, "We must keep our eyes on the prize."

Newspaper sues school over reporter ban

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — A newspaper is suing to stop local schools from banning one of its reporters from school grounds.

The ban was in retaliation for the reporter's failure to warn officials of a lesbian group's plans to distribute leaflets and candy at an elementary school on Valentine's Day, said West Springfield School Committee Chairman Michael Bigda.

"She was in a position to stop it and she didn't," Bigda said Monday after the district sent a certified letter to the reporter threatening her with arrest for trespassing if she appeared in a school building. "She was more interested in getting her story than in the children."

The paper asked the Hampden Superior Court on Tuesday to block the ban on the ground that it violates constitutional protections of press freedom. A hearing was scheduled for March 2.

Four women claiming to be members of the Northampton chapter of the Lesbian Avengers distributed leaflets and candy to youngsters for about 15 minutes Feb. 14 before leaving at the request of school officials.

A telephone number listed in the pamphlet as being a gay "hot line" actually was for a graphic sex line. A spokeswoman for the group said later that it had been listed by mistake and apologized. Angry school officials and some parents at a school committee meeting Tuesday night blamed the newspaper, the Union News. In an editorial in Wednesday's editions, the newspaper said the reporter, Jeanette DeForge, was given the assignment after the paper got a tip about "possible" leafletting.

"It would have been improper for us to notify West Springfield officials late on a Sunday night of a legal event that might take place the next morning. To do so would have made us participants."

the participating schools.

"I was very pleased that the deans supported us and that the students got their scholarships," said event-organizer Eileen Stewart, assistant dean of students.

"The long and the short of it is that six students got scholarships that wouldn't have had them beforehand."

Junior psychology major David Amsbary was awarded $900 after psychology professor Keith Rayner, representing the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, hit two out of five free throws to take second place.

Sophomore English major Devin Hague and junior education major Valerie Lucien each won a $750 scholarship as English professor John Wideman, representing the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, and education professor George Urch, representing the School of Education, respectively, tied for the next two spots.

Senior hotel, restaurant and travel administration major Scott M. Hartford and senior biology major Dan S. Nguyen were each awarded a $550 scholarship as HRTA professor Rodney Warnick, competing for the College of Food and Natural resources, and mathematics and statistics professor Nate Whitaker, representing the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, tied for the final two places.

Clinton said.

The administration has asked the Russians to defuse tension over the spy case by voluntarily removing from Washington one or more of the Russian intelligence officers connected to the alleged 1985 recruitment of Ames and his wife, Rosario.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas called the case "as damaging as any in U.S. intelligence history." He said that at a minimum the Russians should "cease and condemn efforts to penetrate American intelligence."

Dole also said a temporary freeze on U.S. aid to Russia should be imposed until Clinton is satisfied that the Kremlin is ending its espionage against the United States.

In Moscow, officials played down the importance of the case and said it should not provoke "excessive political emotions." Some said the United States continues to spy on Russia.

Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service chief, Yevgeny Primakov, told The Associated Press he had never heard of Ames.

The Ameses were charged Tuesday with conspiracy to commit espionage, a charge that carries a potential penalty of life in prison. The couple are scheduled to appear at a hearing in federal court in Alexandria, Va., on Friday.

The Justice Department accused Ames, 52, and his wife, 41, of funneling U.S. national security secrets to the Soviet Union and later the Russian government in exchange for cash payments totaling $1.5 million. The spy operation is alleged to have continued until the two were arrested by FBI agents on Monday.

When asked about homophobia in the Greek area, Vozza, president of the Inter-Fraternal Council and co-president of the Greek Area Government, said, "Yes, there probably is a very strong homophobic community in the Greek area," and that "they will need to be educated, just like rest of the campus."

He suggested that a course taught during freshmen orientation could be used to accomplish this. Both Vozza and Figueroa said they would not cater to the Greek nor the Puerto Rican communities if elected.

Hillel set to celebrate Purim

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

At sundown tonight, the Jewish holiday of Purim begins. The holiday, celebrating how Queen Esther saved the Jews from destruction at the hands of the evil Haman, is one of the most "raucous" of the Jewish holidays, according to University of Massachusetts Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

Perlmutter said the holiday is celebrated in many ways. This is the traditional Jewish gift-giving holiday, as opposed to Chanukah, which has developed due to its proximity to Christmas.

Jews give gifts to the poor and to their friends. The gifts are often foodstuffs, and Hamantashen, a fruit-filled cookie, is a tradition at this time.

The final way of celebrating is a reading of the Megillah, which is the story of Esther. Jews often go to the readings in costumes and bring noisemakers to blot out Haman's name. It is a very festive holiday with drinking, noise, costumes and parades.

UMass Hillel will be having a Megillah reading at 7 p.m. tonight at the Hillel House, with a party afterward. It will be an evening of fun and entertainment with costumes and food.

Hillel will also be staging a "very nearly annually" debate on the merits of Latkes, a potato pancake served at Chanukah, and Hamantashen.

Barry Levy of the history department and Shlomo Barmoon of the public health department will be speaking for the Latke, and Jessica Korn of the political science department and David Bloome of the English department will speak for the Hamantashen.

According to Perlmutter, the debate will be in the mood of Purim and will be "fun, crazy, doing spoofs, laughing, and having a good time."

The debate will be held at 12:45 p.m. on Sunday Feb. 27 in the Hillel House. At noon the same day, Hillel will be serving a brunch which will cost $3.

Kids get the wrong message

Open your eyes and take a look at what the media is presenting to children. Have you ever thought about what children see on television or in the movies? Think back to when you were a child — what kinds of toys did you play with? Which Disney movies or cartoons were your favorite? When a child watches T.V. or a Disney movie, the same fairytale storyline appears. The man is always the hero who saves the beautiful princess from distress. Do young children pick up on the sexism in children's culture? I believe so.

I remember wanting to be a nurse. I didn't hope to become a doctor because I thought they were only men.

Vanessa Amin

I recently thought back to when I was a child. I remember my favorite toy was the famous Barbie doll. If I had a chance to rename this doll, I would call her "The Stereotypical All–American, Perfect Blonde Woman." And let's not forget the handsome, muscular Ken doll. You can't play with only Barbie — who is going to be the hero? I remember that I used to role–play or daydream that, one day, I would become that "perfect" Barbie Doll. Here comes the same question — do you think that young children pick up on the sexism in children's culture?

According to "The Smurfette Principle" by Katha Pollitt, little girls learn to split their consciousness, filtering their dreams and ambitions through boy characters while admiring the clothes of the princess. I didn't know until recently just how negative it was for me to have compared myself to my Barbie doll. Look at Barbie's measurements: 36–24–36. Hey, no one is perfect!

I flipped through various channels on the television on Saturday morning, focusing on children's cartoons. What I found was astonishing. There were no cartoons that had female characters as heroes. I guess I should be happy that some cartoons have any female characters at all. Well, that's not good enough. For example, in The Smurfs there is only one female in that huge town — Smurfette.

Most of the cartoons that children love to watch all have male characters. For instance, Garfield, Daffy Duck, Porky Pig, Pink Panther, Tom and Jerry and, last but not least, Bugs Bunny. I remember I loved to watch Wonder Woman — probably because I felt I could relate to her more. What kind of message are these cartoons giving to children? The message is that women should be submissive and stay in the background. Men, however, are shown to be powerful and always end up being the hero.

In our society, men are portrayed as active, adventurous, dominant, and powerful. Women, on the other hand, are viewed as sex objects who are usually young, beautiful, passive, dependent, and often incompetent. When is this ever going to change? Do you remember what you wanted to be when you grew up? I remember wanting to be a nurse. I didn't hope to become a doctor because I thought that they were only men. Women were the nurses — everybody knew that. My friend's niece wants to be a fireman, but her parents told her that she could be a firewoman but not a fireman. The little girl became very upset and asked, "What's the difference?"

Have you ever noticed that the most popular Disney movies incorporate the same fairytale storyline? A beautiful, young princess needs the help of a handsome prince. Such movies include Cinderella, Sleeping Beauty, Snow White, and The Little Mermaid. But Beauty and The Beast actually shows the movies are slowly but surely presenting a better image of women.

In Beauty and the Beast, the main female character Belle ends up becoming the hero. The Beast needs Belle's help in order to change back into a man. However, there is a part in the movie where the Beast saves "elle from wild wolves. Well, at least we are slowly moving into the right direction.

As soon as our society understands that the media is, in fact, affecting the minds of our children, we can hope for a change. Until then, I will tell my children that men and women are created equal, but our society just doesn't know it yet.

Vanessa Amin is the Collegian editor for women's issues.

What's going on? Anyone?

This is what I'd call a typical (or maybe atypical) road trip to Philadelphia. Do you want to come? Anyone?

10:20 a.m.: Rolled out of bed, suddenly realizing that I was getting picked up in 25 minutes to leave for the UMass– St. Joseph's game. Will I be ready? Anyone?

10:30 a.m.: Turned on the television to see my favorite television show of all time, Three's Company. A classic episode in which Jack Tripper and Larry Dallas were dating the same "chick." What a great show. I think I'm going to name my kid Tripper Crofts. Do you like that? Anyone?

11:20 a.m.: While picking up radio equipment at the Campus Center I noticed that the arcade has placed two classic video games right next to each other. There they were, Star Wars and Spy Hunter, the latest in technology. The music to Spy Hunter alone makes it a must play. Maybe these two games will lessen the pathetic, eight–deep lines at Mortal Kombat II that block the path to the concourse. I hope so. What will the CC have next, a row of Elevator Action, Burger Time and Zaxxon? Anyone?

11:45 a.m.: I am still wondering why there is a huge Montreal Expos insignia painted on an old barn on Route 9. Who put it there and why? Anyone?

11:50 a.m.: Now at Subway, some lady in front of me ordered a steak and cheese sub and they microwaved the thing. Can you say "disappointed"? I'll stick with my tuna sub, thank you, I don't need a roll that resembles silly putty. What the hell is a microwaved steak and cheese sub? She didn't order a Steak–umm and cheese sub, did she? Anyone?

12:50 p.m.: Riding through Connecticut now, just wondering exactly what town Tony Micelli keeps house in. Did everyone love Samantha (Alyssa Milano)? Or was it just me? Please say it wasn't. Anyone?

1:30 p.m.: Just passed by a billboard for cigarettes in which a lady proclaimed, "I switched to less tar!" Isn't that comparable to saying, "I no longer do cocaine, I switched to pure crack!" Maybe that's a little dramatic, but it is along the same lines. Less tar? What's going on here? Anyone?

3:05 p.m.: Looking at our toll ticket, realized that it would cost $13.90 to drive from one end of the Pennsylvannia Turnpike to the other. Wow. Did you know that? Anyone?

4:10 p.m.: Just passed by a run–down, but still open, place simply called Motel. That's it. Nothing more. Its billboard said it offers Cable/ESPN, and that rooms are only $29.95. I really want to stay there. It reminded me of the tents that Clark Griswold and his family stayed at in the movie Vacation. I wonder if Motel, like those tents, has a charge for a Wildlife Fund? Right down the street from Motel is The American Motel. I wonder if that is where Hacksaw Jim Duggan stays when he is Philly for a big card at The Spectrum. Does anyone care about this like I do? Anyone?

4:30 p.m.: I cannot get those old video games out of my head. Remember Dodge 'Em, Warlords, QBert, Bezerk, Night Driver, River Raid, Stampede and Frogger? Anyone?

4:45 a.m.: Just realized that one of my travelling compadres, Tim Mahoney, knows the words to every song ever recorded and enjoys singing them, although he sounds like Shaggy from the cartoon Scooby Doo. Why is he doing this to me? Anyone?

5:12 p.m.: There are two packies on the same street with the names Sud's Beer Take Out and Cold Beer To Go. Now is there any doubt as to what these stores do? Nope. Although not creative, they are definitely great names. Simply great. I wonder which does better business. What's with these names? Anyone?

11:00 p.m.: Finally out of Hawk Hill with a loss on our hands, we need something to eat. Definitely craving Friendly's, but don't have the time. Their service is slow and awful; shouldn't it be renamed UnFriendly's? Anyone?

11:15 p.m.: Found a Mickey Dee's on the outskirts of Philly. Big mistake. The bathrooms were awful. The floors had that urine–coated shine and a scent that could not be described as lemony. The door to the regular toilet was ripped off the hinges. The bathroom alone is column material. As for the food, it was served to us by the female counterparts to pro wrestlers Earthquake and Typhoon and it only got worse. I felt like the character Fudge in the Judy Blume book Tales of a Fourth Grade Nothing when I bit into the turtle shell–hard hamburger rolls. And the french fries were soggier than the steak and cheese roll at Subway. Just a terrible experience. What happened? Anyone?

12:30 a.m.: A radio station played the Danzig song "Mother" twice in 10 minutes. The same station. And the dee jay said that Glenn Danzig, who resembles Satan on steroids, is putting out a workout tape and is writing a romance novel. What the hell is this world coming to? Will someone please tell me? Anyone?

2:00 a.m.: Finally fell asleep. Why now? Anyone?

4:15 a.m.: Arrived home in North Amherst only to realize that my space heater was off so my room resembled an igloo. Who turned it off? Anyone?

Frat offends with rush poster

Did anyone happen to see a practically naked woman in the Campus Center, near the barber shop last Tuesday morning? I did! She was on a bright yellow poster that announced the fraternity rush of Zeta Beta Tau. No, I am not exaggerating. she was practically naked, on a bed, covering part of herself with what appeared to be a pillow.

When a university such as ours allows posters and literature that show women in such degrading poses, you have to think about what kind of a message this sends out to students.

Sonia Paz

When I saw this poster, I was not only shocked, but I was obviously offended. It was a blatant display of sexism. Is this the only way the brothers of Zeta Beta Tau see women? Did they really think that no one at UMass would notice, or even better, did they think no one would care?

Since I was a freshman, I have seen many forms of "isms" here at UMass. For example, I have seen all sorts of racism, heterosexism, classism and separatism. In all these cases there has been definite opposition to these injustices. Sexism, on the other hand, isn't taken as seriously.

When a woman walks down the street and a rude comment is made towards her, it's okay. When a woman is raped, there is always someone who tries to justify the rape by blaming the victim. Or when a sleazy poster is stapled to every wall in the Campus Center, nobody says anything. I know it sounds cliche, but women are not pieces of meat to be displayed in such a degrading fashion.

When I saw this poster it reminded me of something that I noticed when I lived on campus two years ago. One of my friends from home gave me a postcard with a picture of a man on it. All you could see was his outline, yet just by looking at it you could tell that he was naked. I didn't think anything of it, so I hung it on my door among my collection of postcards and my memo board. Before long, every man on my floor was in an outrage. They thought that the picture was lewd and degrading. I promptly removed it from public view.

Now, the funny thing was that all of these men had pictures of practically naked women in their rooms and on their doors. Huge posters of the Swedish bikini team adorned the walls of every man on the floor. It was okay for them to be surrounded by pictures of practically naked women, spread–eagled on the hood of a sports car, but my 3–by–5 picture of a dark silhouette was unacceptable and offensive.

Where does this double standard come from? Looking at it with this small experience in mind, I have come to the conclusion that if a sorority hung up a rush poster with a picture of some well–built, oiled–up beefcake stud on it, someone somewhere would find it offensive. Yet, Zeta Beta Tau's rush poster was basically overlooked.

When a university such as ours allows posters and literature that show women in such degrading poses, you have to think about what kind of a message this sends out to students. Is Zeta Beta Tau trying to say that women are only useful in the bedroom? I did not spend the all this time and money to attend the University of Massachusetts to major in "Bedroom Studies." Instead of overlooking or, worse yet, accepting images that portray women only as sexual objects, people must stop and think about the negative images and the consequences that result from them.

In addition, this poster not only hurts women but it may also prove to be harmful to the other fraternities on this campus. The majority of the fraternities on this campus have tried to shed the negative image associated with the Greek Area. For example, Sigma Phi Epsilon raises money for the library. Delta Upsilon raises money for the Jimmy Fund. In fact, all the fraternities have sponsored blood drives and sponsor community service projects during Greek Week. Now, thanks to Zeta Beta Tau, all the work these fraternities have accomplished to improve their image may have been in vain.

Is Zeta Beta Tau so desperate to increase its membership that it has to turn to pornography in order to do it? Didn't anyone think that this practically naked woman with the come–hither look on her face might upset someone? Who was the genius who thought up this bright idea, Hugh Hefner?

Hey guys, get a clue! Your poster was offensive.

Letters to the Editor

Fighting tuition hikes takes more than talk

To the editor:

I am writing in response to a letter to the editor by Jamie Bearse ["SGA senator says work has just begun," Collegian, Feb. 23]. As an intern at SCERA (Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy) and fellow Student Government Association senator, I have worked tirelessly with a whole team of students who have dedicated themselves to the issue of tuition and fees here at UMass and I am outraged by Mr. Bearse's audacity.

Although I agree with his statements urging students to register to vote and to band together to ensure that our Legislature gives us proper state funding, I am offended by the fact that he has yet to do so.

How can he encourage students to join the bandwagon of a zero percent tuition and fee hike and at the same time not put in even five minutes of work on the issue? If he's going to talk the talk, Jamie should also walk the walk.

I think that it is no small coincidence that Jamie is running for SGA President against another candidate, Mirran Raphaely, who has been at the forefront of this issue. Jamie should be ashamed of himself for trying to take credit for the work of so many students who would have welcomed his help. I'm surprised that Jamie hasn't taken credit for the success of the Eurohouse Party or the fall of the Berlin Wall — things he also could have been a part of, but sadly was not.

I would like to encourage all students, including Mr. Bearse, to band together on this issue; come on down to room 420 of the Student Union. We need the help! For some people, this is not a campaign issue, but a real passion that takes more to win than writing a 19–line letter to the Collegian.

Organ music adds excitement to games

To the editor:

When my friends and I attended the UMass–Holy Cross hockey game a few weeks ago, we were delighted to discover that UMass now has an organist for the games. After searching for the source of the sounds, we found him perched high atop the executive promontory. Although the organist basically sucked, it was great to hear that classic organ sound at the game, a sound found at all the great sports venues across the globe.

Therefore, I object to the harsh letter sent by Luke Goldstein [Collegian, Feb. 22]. The crowd enjoyed the organist at the game; they were clapping right along with the music. However, I think there is one fault to this great addition to UMass hockey — the organist isn't very good, and mistakes were aplenty.

Indeed, the irony of the whole thing was that the fans clapped to the organist's music, then booed and hissed when he screwed up. Also, the selection of tunes the organist played were, at the very least, limited. It seems that with our prestigious music department here at the University, we could get someone who knew more than "Swanee River" and "Here We Go UMass, Here We Go (clap, clap)."

The organ is a tradition at professional hockey games, and to hear it here at UMass makes the games all–the–more exciting to watch. It keeps the crowd involved in the game, more so than "Welcome to the Jungle" or "Crazy Train" ever did.

So, Mr. Goldstein, if you really enjoy watching hockey, you shouldn't mind the organ, and if you would rather listen to your favorite tunes, bring a Walkman. As for the organist, I have one bit of advice. Practice. Listen to pro games, get some sheet music, and practice. Oh, I also have a request. Do you know "No Quarter"? Nah, forget it.

Muslim–Croat accord gives hope for peace

By SNJEZANA VUKIC
Associated Press

ZAGREB, Croatia — Under growing diplomatic pressure from the West, the military chiefs of Bosnia's Muslim-led government and their second-strongest foes, Bosnia's Croats, signed a truce Wednesday.

Many truces in Bosnia have collapsed, but the accord between the former allies against Bosnia's Serbs is likely to gain strength from diplomatic efforts to extend across Bosnia a NATO-enforced truce in Sarajevo.

A new note of discord, however, emerged between Russia and the West when Boris Yeltsin lashed out at NATO for threatening air strikes against Russia's traditional allies, the Serbs, without asking Russia first.

The Russian president reiterated his proposal for a summit between Russia, the United States, France, Britain and Germany to "put an end to the Yugoslav conflict." But the United States and Germany were cool to the idea Wednesday, indicating it was premature.

Foreign diplomats consider an end to fighting between Croats and government forces crucial to an overall peace settlement.

The cease-fire, which takes effect at noon (2 a.m. EST) Friday, covers central Bosnia and Mostar and other areas in the south where Muslims and Croats have fought bitterly since their alliance collapsed last April.

Amnesty awarded

Leaders of Russian coup attempt pardoned

By LARRY RYCKMAN
Associated Press

MOSCOW — In its first major action, Russia's new parliament took a swipe at President Boris Yeltsin on Wednesday by granting amnesty to leaders of the 1991 Soviet coup and the hard-liners who fought him last fall.

Yeltsin, who disbanded the last parliament just five months ago, issued an angry statement denouncing the vote as a "dangerous path which contradicts the national interests."

"Regrettably, having barely started its work, the State Duma has shown that it hasn't drawn any lessons from the bitter experience of th- Supreme Soviet," said Vyacheslav Kostikov, Yeltsin's press secretary.

The vote came one day before Yeltsin was to deliver his first, long-delayed speech to parliament's powerful lower chamber, the State Duma.

Reformers warned that the amnesty could revive the political unrest that turned the streets of the capital into a battleground in October.

"This is the beginning of a civil war in Russia," said Sergei Yushchenkov, chairman of the parliament's defense committee. The Communists and nationalists who pushed the measure through parliament argued it would heal Russia's political wounds, not reopen them.

"This is a historic moment: Feb. 23, 1994, means an end to civil war in Russia," said ultra-nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky. Later, at an anti-Yeltsin rally near the Kremlin, there was no talk of reconciliation. "Yeltsin is a murderer!" the crowd of about 2,000 people chanted as a light snow fell at sunset. "All power to the Soviets!" they shouted.

Friday appears to be the day Big East athletic directors will vote on the deal and cement the league. The six non– football playing schools might jet, but this doesn't help UMass, which wants to eventually play D–I football.

Remember, this all started years ago when Penn State decided to eschew its independence in football for the Big Ten and subsequently leave the A–10 in basketball. Since then, a number of schools have left for greener pastures.

Finally talking about action on the court, Arkansas appears solid at the No. 1 position for the second straight week, which in this year is somewhat amazing. The SEC Tournament will be tough and will determine who comes out with a No. 1 seed in the Southeast bracket. Don't bet against Nolan Richardson's fiery team.

The Sporting News predicted the 64–team field in last week's issue, and some of the No. 1 seeds may be surprising. Purdue was the best team in the country, according to Jim Sukup from Collegiate Basketball News' computer rankings. The Boilermakers couldn't even be first in the Big Ten, never mind the country. Louisville, which was creamed by Temple last weekend, was a No. 1 in the Southeast. Missouri was the top team in the East, while defending champion North Carolina was sent out West.

Massachusetts? A No. 4 in the East and a rematch with Penn. Arkansas? A No. 3 in the East. Marquette, struggling in the bottom of the Top 25, is a No. 2 seed in the West. Computer geeks, get a life.

Michael Morrissey is a Collegian columnist.

going to be the case. I really honestly feel that we will be fine."

For UMass, there are a couple of players who Calipari points to as keys for this season's future: freshman center Marcus Camby and junior guard Mike Williams.

Camby played limited minutes against St. Joseph's Tuesday night and sat out the previous game versus West Virginia because of sinus problems. Calipari said Camby's skills inside are going to be needed against Temple tonight and then at George Washington on Sunday afternoon.

As for Williams, Calipari said he liked what he saw (16 points, four assists, three steals, no turnovers) from the enigmatic shooting guard against St. Joseph's on Tuesday and that Williams is going to have to put the ball in the net in order for UMass to be successful the rest of the year.

But before Calipari thinks about tournament–time, the UMass coach said he knows what lurks in Philly tonight.

"I think for our team this is a great challenge. It's a place where we've never won," Calipari said. "It's going to be a tough environment, but we've been there before.

"I don't think in any way you're going to have a team that's afraid, or a coach that's afraid, or intimidated. That's not going to happen."

The City of Brotherly Love?

Not this place. Not tonight, anyway.

This will be the last Olympics for both Jansen and Blair. They will be missed.

Harding vs. Kerrigan: Considering every media outlet from A Current Affair to Sesame Street has had coverage of the Harding–Kerrigan incident, I'll keep mine to a minimum.

First off, if the leg injury that Harding endured in a fall had kept her from competing, I'd have chalked it up to divine intervention.

Tonya Harding: from the Olympics to the big house.

Tommy Moe: The 23–year–old American had never won a World Cup race. But fortune smiled on the Alaskan as he shocked the world to take the gold in the downhill, almost 10 years to the date of when Bill Johnson was the surprise downhill winner in Sarajevo.

Sports Illustrated called the U.S. skiers a "lead–footed snow plow brigade"... not Tommy Moe.

Things weren't quite as well for Giant Slalom favorite Alberto Tomba who failed to finish yesterday's race.

Comebacks: A quick question for Brian Boitano, Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean, and Katarina Witt who are all attempting past–their–prime comebacks: Does the name Jim Palmer mean anything to you?

Ice Hockey: It appears in 1998 that the NHL players will make their Olympic debut. Although including professionals will improve the quality of the play, and in effect create "dream teams" for several nations, it will eliminate the enthusiasm of the college players that were just happy to be there. In effect there will never be another "Miracle on Ice."

Sports created to fill Olympic TV time:

Biathalon. Who invented this one? Cross Country skiing and target practice? Sounds like something from a Lite Beer commercial.

The Pat O'Brien show. Although technically not a sport, this time slot would be better filled by an hour of Dave Letterman's Mom.

Yes it's true. Former Family Ties star Tina Yothers will play Harding in a made for TV movie.

the final 20 minutes for UMass to make it 8–0, and then the Minutemen's captain made his presence felt.

Jaynen Rissling, playing in only his second game since Jan. 12, scored his sixth goal of the season at 14:05. Rob Bonneau stayed at the top of the UMass scoring lead with his 26th goal at 15:20. Condon's goal ended the Massachusetts barrage.

The contest, played in the Vietnam Memorial Arena in North Adams, was chock full of penalties, half of which were matching. Players from UMass attributed the chippy play to the small size of the rink as opposed to the Mullins Center. Last Saturday at home, UMass and Sacred Heart combined for only four penalties.

UMass outshot the Mohawks, 45–17. Kilduff had 16 saves for the Minutemen, while Jason Smith and Scott Bray combined for 33 saves for North Adams.

In the past two games, the Minutemen have outscored their opponents 25–3. The team plays its final game of the season Friday night at the Mullins Center against Rochester Institute of Technology.

Your Horoscope

By Joann Rose

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Events behind the scenes or a bunch adds power to your plans. The bargain–hunting forecast is bright. Put yourself in partner's shoes. Your encouraging words will seem like pearls of wisdom.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Positive dealings with the opposite sex are good for your public image. Keep up a steady pace at work. Show your mate or partner that you have a sense of responsibility.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Limited help from others may narrow your options now. Careful use of your own means will allow you to reach an important objective. Try not to take sides during family disputes. Remain independent.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Your kindness could bring an estranged friend back into the fold. Stake this person to a small loan, if you can afford it.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Private talks with influential people could lead to substantial gains today; a financial or business offer may result. Displaced possessions surface in unusual places. A secret rendezvous is features this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A good day to spend money on things that make you look or feel better. A confidential pact or innovative idea has great value. Your intuition is right on target; do not ignore it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): The visionary changes you implement now will pay rich dividends. A credit arrangement, loan or joint undertaking holds great promise. Your keen love radar zeros in on someone special. Go slow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): You know what you want and are pretty sure how to get it. A wish comes true when you act on news received.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Shared experiences strengthen a new friendship. A long–awaited gift is received. Avoid arguing over money. A beneficial contract can be signed with a talent agency.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): A strong sense of purpose will carry you through this busy day. Recent profits right back into your business. Spend time building a home base. A phone call brings wonderful news. Teach children responsibility.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Refuse to be overwhelmed by the challenges before you. Setting priorities will bring the best results. Reading or dancing will make this evening especially pleasurable. Put romance on hold for awhile.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Have a wonderful birthday. Go outside and play in the snow. Sleep through class. The next year will be a good one. Really. Jeane Dixon says so.

ARAM COMEAN / COLLEGIAN

Derrick Battie attempts a shot over Lou Roe and Marcus Camby during the Temple-Massachusetts game at the Mullins Center earlier this month. The Owls' effort wasn't enough as the Minutemen came away with a 56-55 victory.

Massachusetts

22-3 overall, 12-1 Atlantic 10
Current AP ranking: 11

John Calipari, head coach
Bill Bayno, associate head coach
James "Bruiser" Flint, assistant coach
John Robic, assistant coach

STARTERS:
F Donta Bright
F Dana Dingle
C Lou Roe
G Derek Kellogg
G Mike Williams

IF THE MINUTEMEN WANT TO WIN, THEY MUST: Control the inside and dominate the glass. With one of the best frontlines in the Atlantic 10 and in the country, Calipari must hope that his Minutemen play with fire and intensity in order to counter the Owls' outside play.

Another key is the shooting of the Massachusetts backcourt, especially Mike Williams. Edgar Padilla and Derek Kellogg have proven they can take the set-three-pointer, but Williams needs to be on the move to be effective. If he can hit consistently from the outside, Massachusetts will only benefit.

MASSACHUSETTS IS IN TROUBLE IF: The home crowd packing McGonigle Hall is allowed to rock all night long. It's Senior Night, UMass got the last one and let's face it, the Philly fans love to hate Calipari. If Temple's on, and you know they will be, the Minutemen can't afford a lackidaisical first half or they'll be driving to D.C. with an L.

ROUND II

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

The City of Brotherly Love? Huh?

That phrase certainly does not fit tonight's scenario in Philadelphia when the No. 11 Massachusetts Minutemen (22–5, 12–1 Atlantic 10) take on the No. 8 Temple Owls (20–4, 12–3 A–10) in a rematch of a thrilling 56–55 UMass victory at the William D. Mullins Center on February 13.

That terrific basketball game between two very big rivals, however, will forever be overshadowed by L'affaire Chaney, which occurred afterwards. There is no mistaking that.

UMass Coach John Calipari was speaking in his post-game press conference when he was verbally and nearly physically attacked by Temple Coach John Chaney. Apparently Chaney was upset with Calipari for allegedly having words with the game officials in the hallway after the contest without Chaney being present. Very upset.

For his outburst, Chaney was suspended from coaching one game by Temple President Peter Liacouras. A few days later, an emotional Chaney offered his apologies to Calipari, UMass, Temple and everyone present at the Mullins Center press room.

Now, with all of that hopefully in the past, the real focus tonight should be on the game — a game which is of major importance for the top two teams in the Atlantic 10.

It is simple for UMass; if it wins tonight at McGonigle Hall (a place it never has), the Minutemen will clinch their third straight regular season A–10 title and will gain the number one seed in the upcoming A–10 Tournament.

Temple, meanwhile, must beat UMass and then hope for some help from the Minutemen's final two opponents, George Washington and Duquesne, in order to be called A- 10 champs.

Even without the title implications, UMass–Temple would be a huge game. The past history between the two teams would make sure of that. For 21 straight games Temple defeated UMass. Then two years ago, the Minutemen broke through with a 67–52 victory at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Since then, UMass has taken three of the last four from the Owls, including a 68–61 victory in last year's A–10 Tournament championship game. But not one of those victories has come in McGonigle Hall, where Temple is 9–1 this year.

It has been well documented how Calipari used the Temple program as a blueprint for UMass. Calipari said he has also used the Temple program as a measuring stick.

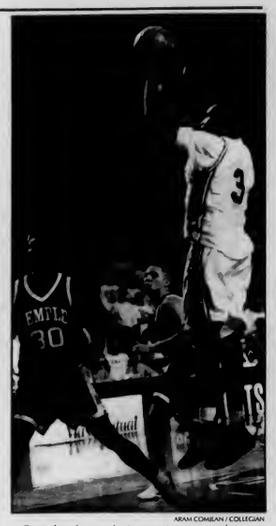
"They were the benchmark in our league for years and years and years, and the team that if we could play and beat them, then we could beat anybody in our league," Calipari said. "And that was the was the whole idea. The minute we were able to play with them then we could play with anybody in our league."

The Owls have proven to be a Top 10 team this year, with wins against top teams such as Kansas and Louisville to prove it. Calipari said that Temple is a team with a lot of talent on its roster.

"They've got two lottery picks on their team in Aaron McKie and Eddie Jones. Two lottery picks. Next year, Rick Brunson will be one of the top players in our league," Calipari said. "And their three players inside, one's seven foot (William Cunningham) and (Derek) Battie and (Jason) Ivey who both can play."

The issue of security at McGonigle Hall is one thing that remains after Chaney's outburst. UMass players said they are focused on the game and not security issues while Calipari said if there are any security problems he already has the solution.

"I'm not in anyway trying to intimidate [anyone] or anything," Calipari said. "But if my team is in any compromise, safety-wise, in anyway, we will walk off the floor.



"But I really feel that that's not

ARAM COMEAN / COLLEGIAN

Guards Aaron McKie and Derek Kellogg will meet for the second time in as many weeks when the No. 11 Minutemen face the eighth-ranked Temple Owls tonight in Philadelphia.

ARAM COMEAN / COLLEGIAN

Temple forward Jason Ivey watches as Massachusetts forward Dana Dingle puts up a two-pointer for the Minutemen. UMass won the game to remain undefeated in the Mullins Center and stay atop the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Jim Maloney, assistant coach
Dean Demopoulos, assistant coach
Vic Carstarphen, assistant coach

STARTERS:
F Jason Ivey
F Eddie Jones
C Derrick Battie
G Rick Brunson
G Aaron McKie

IF THE OWLS WANT TO WIN, THEY MUST: Be consistent inside and out and get contributions from players other than their big three of Eddie Jones, Aaron McKie and Rick Brunson. Temple's inside men must equal the performance of Massachusetts' frontline in order for Chaney's squad to do the damage from the outside.

Keep Minuteman Lou Roe from going crazy while hoping that the Massachusetts backcourt is cold from the outside.

Above all of this, though, the Owls are hoping that history repeats itself and Massachusetts is unable to leave McGonigle Hall yet again without a victory.

TEMPLE IS IN TROUBLE IF: The Owls get in foul trouble, plain and simple. Expect the big three to play at least 36 minutes a piece; with the thin bench, Chaney can't afford to delve deep into his team. If he does, watch for Massachusetts to really pound it inside to Roe, Camby, Bright, Dingle and Meyer.

Hockey sets record with final road win

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY

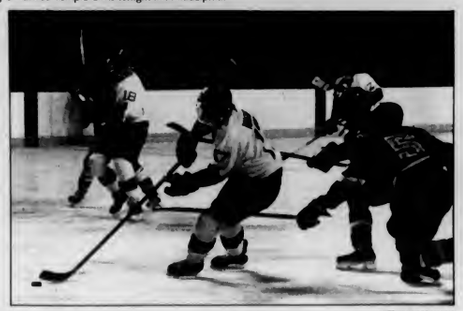
The University of Massachusetts hockey team set a school record for wins in a season when it defeated North Adams State College 12–1 Tuesday night.

The Minutemen (20–8) were led by Blair Wagar's second collegiate hat trick en route to Coach Joe Mallen's 100th career victory. UMass finishes at 5–5 on the road.

"We had a lot of tough games on the road and you want to be at least .500 on the road," said senior Steve Corradi.

UMass jumped out to an early 3–1 lead in the first period on goals by Corradi, Wagar and Mike Evans. The lone Mohawk goal of the game came in the first period on a power play score by Matt Kalghn.



Dave Kilduff shut out North Adams in the final two periods while scoring nine goals of their own. Defenseman Bill Condon scored his first collegiate goal.

"My first goal was the icing on the cake," said Condon. "The biggest thing was to get 20 wins and Coach Mallen's 100 wins.

"To be a good team, you have to win at home and go .500 on the road," he said. "That was a goal that we accomplished. Coming in, we had high hopes but 20 wins is pretty amazing."

The Minutemen scored one power play goal, Evans' in the first period, in six opportunities. Evans, Jason Smith, Tom Perry and Wagar tallied goals in the second period. Brett Pearlstein opened scoring in

After the Globetrotters' show tonight in the Mullins Center, which begins at 7 p.m., the doors will be open to the public and the Massachusetts–Temple game will be shown on large screen TVs. Admission is free.

The game will be televised on ESPN (9:30 p.m.). If you can't be near a television, WHMP (99.3 FM) and WMUA (91.1 FM) will broadcast live as well for your listening pleasure.

A report from Norway — almost

LILLEHAMMER, Norway (seriously) — Greetings from the frozen North. I have endured sub-zero temperatures and meals of Reindeer steaks to send back news from the 1994 Winter games.

Call me a purist but I think it was a bad idea to put the Winter Games on the off-years. There was something more special about only having an Olympics every four years.

Speed Skating: When our generation thinks of the otherwise obscure sport of speed skating, two names will come to mind: Dan Jansen and Bonnie Blair.

Jansen has been a household name since he fell at the 1988 games in Calgary, just hours after his sister had died of Leukemia. A fall in 1992 once again kept him from the medal stand. After a fall in the 500 meters last week, and only the 1000 meters, admittedly not one of Jansen's stronger events, it looked like he would never get a gold medal.

Jansen refused to give up his dream and his perseverance paid off. He shocked the world, not only winning a gold medal, but breaking the world record in the process.

The image of Jansen taking his daughter with him on his long awaited victory lap could be the most memorable scene of the games.

Blair has been a success story for her entire career. Her gold in the 500 meters made her the first woman ever to win the event in three-straight Olympics. Yesterday's gold in the 1000 meters made her the only woman ever to win five gold medals.

TSN's picks way off base

Time again for speculation, wild assumptions and sweeping generalizations. What do you expect — it's almost March.

The word for this week is humility, at least for college coaches. I was away in California (weep not for me) last Thursday, so I missed John Calipari's "It's about more than basketball" spiel, but Rick Pitino of Kentucky also took a big stand when he suspended three of his players — Jared Prickett, Travis Ford and Gimel Martinez — for their part in a free throw swapping scheme.

Holding Court — Michael Morrissey on NCAA Basketball

Both coaches said some admirable words concerning serious issues with major implications.

Pitino suspended the three when they admitted Monday that they fooled the officials after fouls. The three Wildcats convinced the refs that the better free throw-shooting player was fouled in three instances, and therefore shot the foul shots.

The coach said that the players are "hard-working, good kids," but they made a mistake, a mistake that Kentucky basketball and the Calipari-lookalike would not tolerate. Bravo, Pitino.

Conference reallignment is the other major issue which is in the forefront. The Big Eight has informally asked four Southwest Conference teams to join them, which would shatter the SWC. Texas, Texas Tech, Texas A & M and Baylor appear to be headed to the Big Eight, which leaves the other four schools out in the cold.

Even more troubling for local University of Massachusetts fans is the word that the Big East football teams have signed a deal with CBS that essentially destroys the Atlantic 10. Temple, West Virginia and Rutgers are expected to leave the A–10, leaving the league with no Division i–A football schools.

Clinton funks out FAC

Funkmaster George Clinton

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

You have heard George Clinton, even if you don't think you have. Heard Dr.Dre's "Nuthin' But a G Thang?" How about "What's My Name" by the infamous Snoop Doggy Dogg? Or even "The Humpty Dance" by Digital Underground? Truly, if you have heard any number of rap songs in the past, say, decade or so, then you have heard a little slice of George, the undisputed king of funk.

Clinton, if nothing else, should go down in history as the most sampled artist ever, as rap musicians continually steal bits and parts of his funk masterpieces as a foundation for their own work. It seems there is no better sound to build on than Clinton's.

There is, of course, plenty else to make Clinton famous. In the seventies, he headed the Parliament/Funkadelic troupe that produced some of the most seamless funk albums ever. The group's live shows were known, not only for frenetic funk jams, but theatrical showmanship and effects that sold out continually and left audiences enthralled, excited and sweaty.

This past year, Clinton returned to the charts with Hey Man, Smell My Finger, another deep funk jam that has received both critical and popular success. And luckily for us, Clinton has reunited many of his former Parliament/Funkadelic bandmates as the P–Funk All Stars to tour in support of his latest effort.

One cannot underestimate the influence has had on today's music, and when it comes to funk, nobody does it better than the godfather of the genre itself. Consider us lucky to have him here to help get the funk out of our winter blues.

The Mothership will be landing Friday, Feb. 25, in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $15 with a UMass ID, $17 for everybody else. Tickets are available through the FAC Box Office, or by calling 545–2511.

Heavy metal comics on view

By MARTIN BROWN
Collegian Staff

The music of Meatloaf makes me wants to throw–up, but I have to admit the cover of the album is pretty cool in a rock excess sort of way. The artist of the album, Richard Corben, has his work on display at the Words & Pictures Museum of Fine Sequential Art in Northampton.

The Meatloaf album is not his only work. Corben has tackled everything from traditional black and white sequential art to sculpture and fantasy paintings in his career. His comic book work first became widely known through the Underground comics (comix) of the 1970s, often self–publishing his work. It was during this period that he created the post–Apocalyptic landscape peculiar to much of his finest work, (Rowlf, 1970).

Then came the animated feature Heavy Metal the Movie in 1981. Here his ongoing saga of the adventurer, Den, with the voice provided by John Candy, became one of the features. Corben continued to do a great deal of work for Heavy Metal magazine both with the continuation of the saga of Den and with slick dynamic cover paintings.

The Words & Pictures Museum exhibit showcases a unprecedented collection of his work, past and recent. Widely recognized by artists and fans alike for his use of rich color, which is nothing short of magnificient, Corben has always had a style that is truly his own. The museum's lower galleries will feature several short stories and a number of lavish paintings, each canvas a mixture of oils, acrylics, airbrush and Magic Markers.

The upper gallery of the Museum will be

Bluiett at tip of Magic Triangle Jazz Series

By JONATHAN RATCLIFF
Collegian Correspondent

Interested in seeing some live jazz performed by an inventive and skilled quartet? The Magic Triangle Jazz series makes its season debut tonight in the Hampden Theatre with the appearance of the Hamiet Bluiett Quartet.

Hamiet Bluiett is a baritone saxaphanist who has liberated the instrument from its use primarily as a bass and rhythm tool, employing it far lead wark. Bluiett's baritone spans the full range of the instrument's capability: from its inmost depths to its rich heights.

As stated by the New York Times, Bluiett is "without question, the leading barintane saxaphanist, with a big blustery tone, astonishing fluency . . . and a style steeped in the blues."

Bluiett began his career in St. Louis, during the 60's. The area, like Chicago, was ane that nurtured creative jazz experimentation. Bluiett was able ta take a deep background in blues and gaspel and translate it, with dexterity, to a cantemporary jazz forum.

Fram St. Louis, Bluiett moved ta New Yark, where he performed with famed African rhythmist Babatunde Olatunji, and ather leading musicians. in 1972, Bluiett joined Charles Mingus' big band, and then twa

This is an all points bulletin ta reggae fans throughout the valley, fram the natty dread ta the casual listener. If yau so much as awn a copy af Bob Marley's Legend, you shauld be there when "top-ranking" Wailers authority Roger Steffens and reggae artists Loose Caboose come to the Student Unian Ballroom this Saturday night and the natural mystic returns ta Amherst far Reggae Tribute 3.

This year's cast includes the star attractions from the twa previaus gala events, which included Steffens who presents his twa and a half haur lecture/video an the kings of reggae, Peter Tash, Bunny Wailer, and the honarable Robert Nesta Marley. Fallowed by a perfarmance by rhythm and melody masters, reggae recorded artist Loose Caboose lead by the powerful Ras Jahn Bullock.

Steffens, wha was bitten by the reggae bug when he heard Bob Marley sing "Catch a Fire," has since seen his collectian graw ta include over 9,000 reggae albums and singles, 9,300 reggae cassettes, 1,500 haurs af videa and rooms full of ather reggae paraphernalia.

From his vast wealth of music, videa and knawledge of reggae, in addition to his interviews with Marley, Tosh and Bunny Wailer, Steffens has put together his videa and lecture perfarmance that is rivaled by none. The show cantains rare, unreleased footage and shaws Marley at his most powerful.

Included in the videa in the past have been such rare treats as an intimate recarding of "Redemption Song" and a performance of "Zimbabwe" far the newly independent peaple af Zimbabwe. Channing, Smith spark intriguing Six Degrees imagination, memory, pink shirts and pots of jam. Although seemingly disparate issues for any film to discuss, Six Degrees of Separation manages to make even the most random events appear like the seams of the very fabric of humanity. And it's not just that director Fred Schepisi links small instances, but emphasizes their place in context of larger, more complex themes.

When we first meet Flanders and Ouisa Kittredge, (Donald Sutherland, Stockard Channing) a prominent art dealer and his wife/partner, they are rushing around their plush upper West side Manhattan apartment in a frenzy. They soon hurry off to a wedding, where at the reception, they reveal the past evenings' events to a gradually enlarging crowd.

As the Kittredge's prepared to treat an old friend to dinner, George (Sir Ian McKellan), a knock came to the door, revealing a young, black man, who had apparently been mugged in the surrounding Central Park. Wounded, and claiming to be a friend of the Kittredge's children at college, Paul (Will Smith) asks for help.

As the Kittredges discuss their children with Paul, they are surprised to learn he knows many intricate details about their lives as well as home, particularly a double-sided Kandinsky painting they own. Bright, eloquent, and with a knowledge of high class personalities, Paul ends up making dinner and presenting a mesmerizing thesis about Catcher in the Rye and the death of the imagination. Flan, Ouisa, and George are completely taken in by the charming youth, but it is when Paul tells them that he is the son of Sidney Poitier that they are impressed most.

The Kittredges offer him a room for the night, but throw him out the next morning, when Ouisa finds him in the arms of a male prostitute. This, of course, throws the perfectly manicured world of the Kittredges into a state of chaos. As the Kittredges talk with their friends, they realize that Paul is not Poitier's son and has been pulling the same perplexing routine on others. They are then determined to find out how Paul has managed to know so much about their lives, and why his "break-ins" never result in material theft, only a kind of spiritual and class rift.

This rift extends itself to a ripple of realization in Ouisa, and is made genuine due in no small part to Stockard Channing's endlessly intriguing, Oscar-nominated performance. Channing makes Ouisa's transformation less a whirlwind conversion than an honest self-doubt and questioning.

In the near exact midpoint of Six Degrees of Separation, Ouisa contemplates: "I read somewhere that everybody on this planet is separated by only six other people. Six degrees of separation...I find that A) tremendously comforting that we're so close and B) like Chinese water torture...Because you have to find the right six people to make the connection. It's not just big names. It's anyone."

Paul is the central figure of this musing for Ouisa because he represents all that she is not, and yet he is one of the degrees that leads to all of the other people around her.

Will Smith gives a more than impressive performance, showing that dramatic acting is easily at reach for this comedy slinging-rapper. Not only is he not made to play the stereotypical homosexual, but the viewer, like everyone in the film, is seduced by him and his absorbing personality.

As Paul gives his thesis on the death of the imagination, director Fred Schepisi likewise forces the viewer to resurrect this part of psychic life. Most of the film is sophisticatedly structured as a series of memory sequences, but not as flashbacks. Perhaps they are better described as a series of flashforwards: as a character describes a situation, the viewer is lead through the person's memory to reveal the events leading up to the point in question.

If all of us are separated by only six degrees, then the world is simply a collage of individuals — "the art form of the twentieth century" as Paul quotes. Unable to let go of this thought, Ouisa claims that she is "a set of unaccounted for brush-strokes...all random," a collage. if this is what Schepisi intended to portray, he produced a convincing piece of evidence at the end, because unlike Ouisa feels, Six Degrees is a set of accounted-for brush strokes in the eye of the viewer. voice, uplifting lyrics and bright acoustic guitar are featured.

In addition, McCalla's message, coming from a self- deemed "double minority" (as an African-American lesbian) emphasizes the need for us to work together to create a more just society.

"We all have many ideas, many hopes and dreams of a better, safer, more just society, in common," McCalla told the Austin American-Statesman. "If people stress what keeps them apart instead of what unifies them, the problems of society will never be solved."

With the theory that life is more complex than your average pop song, McCalla has compiled a spectrum of tunes featuring themes ranging from indifference to the homeless to the affirmation of love in a troubled world.

McCalla, who is from New York City and who now lives in Oakland, Calif., received two New York Music Awards in 1985 for her first album, Don't Doubt It and was pegged by the Oaklond Tribune as on of the Ten Best Albums of the Year in 1987 for her second release, With A Little Luck.

The show starts at 8 p.m. in Hampden Theatre. Tickets are $8, $5 for UM students. For more information call 545- 4824.

Mingus quintets.

Bluiett has since then formed his own jazz outfits, himself filling the role as band leader. One of these is the World Saxophone Quartet, which, as stated by the New York Times, is "perhaps the most important acoustic jazz quartet performing today," and, more recently, the Hamiet Bluiett Quartet.

Last August, jazz magazine Downbeat rated Bluiett as the best baritone sax player in the world in their annual critics poll, and consistently gives Bluiett albums excellent reviews.

On the quartets recent album release, Rear Garde, Downbeat states that Bluiett's "playing is especially confident, perhaps inspired by his solid companions."

His "companions" in the quartet include drummer Ben Riley, who is best known for his work as Thelonius Monk's drummer from 1964 to 1967. Riley has played with a variety of jazz musicians and outfits in performances all over the world.

On bass is Clint Houston, who has played for singer Nina Samone, and with several others. Clinton's bass work provides driving rhythm for the quartet; and he is adept at solos.

Jazz guitarist Ted Dunbar has played with the likes of Sonny Rollins, and while an the music faculty at Livingston College has written a number of books on jazz harmony and guitar.

The Hampden Theater, located in the Southwest Residential area, provides an intimate setting for the Triangle jazz shows. This is, however, a mixed blessing for those who wait to buy tickets; Triangle shows often sell out.

Tickets are $5 for students and $7 for the generol public. Advance tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Call 545-2511 for more information.

come the little struggle."

You can also see Marley joining the leaders of the warring factions of Jamaica together for the first time, on stage at the One Love Peace Concert. Though it was a clear night, it is said that lighting can been seen streaking through the sky during the show.

Rarely will you find someone as intimately acquainted with reggae as Steffens. He has traveled with Marley on tour, and, since his death in 1981 as well as the assassination of Tosh in 1987, has kept in close contact with the last surviving legend, Bunny Wailer. Steffens is also co-writing Marley's autobiography.

Unknown to many people is the fact that of all wealth of Marley material available according to reports in the Hampshire Daily Gazette, one of the most frustrating things for Steffans is the fact that when Marley died he left behind enough unreleased material for an estimated 15 albums — no doubt songs and psalms that could change peoples lives. However due to legal matters the material remains under lock and key.

Ras Jahn of Loose Caboose is the man behind Reggae Tribute 3, bringing together the performers to give a "history lesson" to the diverse audience through music and experience.

"We've tried to push reggae music, and the Wailers music forward," said Ras Jahn. "We've always wanted to bring Steffans to the Valley for reggae fans who would appreciate the show."

In addition, Steffans has updated his video presentation every year, and has an amended video for the crowd this year as well. According to Ras Jahn the plan is to bring the presentation every year.

"Each time he does it he brings new material," said Ras Jahn. "He's got enough in the bucket for 20 years. It's that deep. Ya man."

Loose Caboose will be closing out the night with a dance party when they perform their set of stirring reggae with an infectious beat and powerful vocals.

According to Aaron Wilson, acting president of the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition, "Loose Caboose is pretty much your classic Bob Marley reggae."

The event is sponsored by the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition and brought to the UMass community for Black History Month, which Wilson indicated "we are always proud to be a part of."

Ras Jahn who "knew Bob Marley personally" has recently finished his latest album with Loose Caboose at Marley's Tuff Gong Studios with Ziggy Marley. Loose Caboose also recorded their first album in Jamaica on Bob Marley's invitation, at the time however Marley was fighting his illness in Africa.

In addition to the big names, two performers will appear from the Amherst area to take the stage for the first time. The Kids From Afrique will open the show with a kind of "dance hall, hip-hop, freestyle," followed by The Black Rebels, who will bring "their own brand of roots music" to the event.

"If you like reggae, this is the best event of the semester," said Wilson. "There won't be anything else like it."

To add even more to the atmosphere of the event artist Mark Bode will be providing an artistic background to set the mood of the show.

So if you want to be infected by the reggae fever the Peter Tosh termed "Reggaemilitis," come to this powerful event, but remember, "It is incurable."

The show is at the Student Union Ballroom, Saturday Feb. 26th. Tickets are available in advance at the Cannabis Reform table on the Campus Center Concourse or at the door. Tickets are $6, or $3 for CRC members. Opening dance act starts at 6 p.m., and main attractions Roger Steffens and Loose Caboose start at 8 p.m.

Minutemen clinch third A-10 title

Mike Williams hits another clutch three-pointer to give Massachusetts its first-ever win at Temple

Last night's 51-50 victory marked the second time this season that Mike Williams burned the Owls in the final seconds. The win makes the Minutemen the first school to three-peat in the regular season as Atlantic 10 champs.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – Mike Williams' second game-winning shot against Temple gave Massachusetts its third straight Atlantic 10 title.

The junior guard banked in a 25-foot 3-pointer with eight seconds to play Thursday night to give the 11th-ranked Minutemen a 51-50 victory over No. 8 Temple in the rematch of the Feb. 13 game he won with a foul-line jumper. That was the game that was followed by the threatening tirade of Temple coach John Chaney against his counterpart, John Calipari.

This time things were the same on the court and much different in the interview room.

"I was sitting around this afternoon hoping it wouldn't come down to a last shot. I was hoping we'd be up 10," said Williams, who finished with 15 points on 5-for-9 shooting from 3-point range. "They gave me a chance to get the shot off and I took advantage of it. This one was more of a lucky shot than the last one because it was off the glass. It looked good, just long."

"They were perfect, perfect," Chaney said of his team's last two chances. "He's won a lot of big games for them. I would have been screaming my lungs out if he went in for a layup, but he hit a 23-, 24-footer off the glass. When a shot like that goes in it just wasn't meant to be."

"We knew if we won we'd have the championship," Calipari said. "We forgot all about the incident. How big a win was this?" Big enough that it almost overshadowed the pregame hype involving the coaches. They shook hands before and after the game and there wasn't anything close to a second incident.

"That's in the past," Chaney said of the tirade that got him suspended by the school for one game. "I don't carry things like that around. I'm an old dinosaur. I have a lot of problems in my old age. Of course I shook his hand, but I did think for a second maybe I should have had a rose with thorns in my hand. No, then I should have shaken Mike Williams' hand."

Temple had gone ahead 50-48 with 1:10 remaining on two free throws by Eddie Jones. The teams exchanged turnovers during the next 47 seconds and Massachusetts took its last timeout with 20 seconds to play and from that Williams hit his banked bomb. "Jones took away my penetration so I knew I'd have to get a lot of arc on the shot. I almost got too much arc," Williams said. "I make that kind of shot in practice quite a bit."

Skating coverage tops ratings on TV

By RONALD BLUM
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Nancy Kerrigan's showdown with Tonya Harding was the most-watched television program in the United States in 11 years and the sixth highest-rated show ever.

CBS's prime-time coverage on Wednesday night got a 48.5 rating and a 64 share, Nielsen Media Research said Thursday. Only two Super Bowls and three entertainment programs got higher ratings.

"I don't think if we sat down to try to script an Olympics we would have done much better," CBS Sports president Neal Pilson said. "I guess we could have scripted the medal round for the [U.S.] hockey team. I think this is as good as any fiction could be."

The three highest-rated programs are the final episode of "M-A-S-H" on Feb. 28, 1983 (60.2), the Who-Shot-J.R.? episode of "Dallas" on Nov. 21, 1980 (53.3) and an episode of the miniseries "Roots" on Jan. 30, 1977 (51.1).

Among sporting events, Wednesday night's Olympic coverage trailed only San Francisco's 26-21 victory over Cincinnati in the 1982 Super Bowl (49.1) and Washington's 27-17 victory over Miami in the 1983 Super Bowl (48.6).

Each rating point represents 942,000 homes and one percent of the total television households in the United States. The share is the percentage of televisions in use at the time.

"I think we'll do better on Friday night, but I'm not prepared to quantify that," Pilson said, looking ahead to the women's figure skating finals. "I think the story continues to be compelling. Nancy Kerrigan being first after the short program is a dramatic story by itself."

CBS estimated 126,656,000 people watched its coverage Wednesday night, the fourth-highest audience ever for U.S. television behind three Super Bowls. NBC's estimates had it the 11th-highest audience, trailing the "M-A-S-H" episode and 10 Super Bowls.

The Lillehammer Games are on track to be the highest-rated Olympics ever. Through 12 of the 16 nights, CBS averaged a 27.6 rating and a 41 share, up 44 percent over the 19.2 rating and 30 share for the comparable period of the 1992 Winter Games.

"I don't think the Kerrigan-Harding saga is solely responsible," Pilson said. "The Winter Olympics are now appointment television, just like the Super Bowl. People are working their calendars to watch the Olympics."

The record for a Winter Olympics is the 23.9 rating and 37 share for the 1980 Lake Placid Games, when the United States won the hockey gold medal. The record for any Olympics is the 24.4 rating and a 44 share for the 1972 Munich Games, when a group of Palestinians entered the Olympic Village and killed 11 members of the Israeli team.

Human rights the reason for U.S. embargo on Cuba

By JORGE MATOS
Collegian Correspondent

According to the Puerto Rican socialist newspaper Claridad, President Clinton's non–recognition and economic blockade against Cuba, as well as the travel restrictions to Cuba imposed on all U.S. residents, including Puerto Ricans, has continued due to a lack of a "multi–party system and alleged human rights violations."

World politics is changing and Cuba stands alone and unchanged, according to White House arguments.

In an interview with French journalist Jean Daniel on Oct. 24, 1963, President Kennedy stated that the threat of Soviet influence in the hemisphere — not Castro's domestic policy — was the sole reason for the initiation of moves to isolate and destabilize Cuba.

In an article in the New Republic on Dec. 14, 1963, Kennedy acknowledged the pain and the suffering the United States have caused to the people of Cuba (see excerpt).

France's president at the time, Charles De Gaulle, stated that Castro was driven by his will to independence. Castro's anti–U.S. stance came from nationalism, not communist doctrine.

We have to remember that the European presence in America, such as that of the Soviet Union, meant the end of the Monroe Doctrine. Even though Latin American– European economic trade has always existed under the doctrine, it has been done under U.S. surveillance, jeopardizing the sovereignty of those American nations. Cuba ended the United States intervention into its domestic affairs.

Blockade on Cuba
News Analysis by Jorge Matos

According to Saul Landau of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., U.S. Congressman Robert Torricelli propelled a new "punishment" on Cuba under the label of "the promotion of democracy."

According to Torricelli's words: "we [the United States] have brought democracy to Latin America and we should continue to do so. There wouldn't be any democracy in Latin America today without our efforts, take Chile, for example."

"We took it in 1973, when the CIA backed a coup that overthrew the democratic Allende government," countered Landau. Torricelli responded, "The Chileans would have thrown him out anyway."

Landau then confronted the representative about how he thought his sworn oath to hold the laws and the U.S. Constitution conformed to this mission to overthrow governments he deemed unworthy.

The congressman responded by calling Fidel Castro a tyrant and declared that he would help to bring him down. To which Saul Landau asked, "and if your policy produces a bloodbath in Cuba?"

Torricelli's answer: "we [the United States] can't concern ourselves with consequences. That's up to the Cuban themselves. We have to shorten the suffering for the Cuban people by isolating Castro and forcing him out."

The Torricelli bill has made life more difficult for Cubans. An economist for Cuba's planning board estimates that the U.S. "blockade" has already cost the country more than $43 billion in trade and investments (according to 1988 figures).

Although the bill and President Clinton's continuation of the economic blockade has increased economic pains it has not caused the death of the revolution.

The blockade (not embargo) has led Castro to impose tougher internal policies as a means of stiffening the back of the Cuban leadership against the ever–present "imperialist threat." The government has called this period in Cuba's history "the special period" — a period which has stimulated not only Cuban creativeness in order to weather it, but the talents of all human beings that believe and cherish life and dignity above all things.

New Republic excerpt gives JFK's view on Cuba

This is an excerpt of President John F. Kennedy's views on Cuba, published by the New Republic on Dec. 14, 1963:

"There is no country in the world where economic colonization, humiliation and exploitation were worse than in Cuba, especially under policies during the Batista regime. I believe that we created, built and manufactured the Cuban movement out of the whole cloth and without realizing it. I believe that the accumulation of these mistakes has jeopardized all of Latin America.

I can assure you that I have understood the Cubans. I approved the proclamation which Fidel Castro made in the Sierra Maestra, when he justifiably called for justice and especially yearned to rid Cuba of corruption. I will go even further: to some extent it is as though Batista was the incarnation of a number of sins on the part of the United States. Now we shall have to pay for those sins.

In the matter of the Batista regime, I am in agreement with the first Cuban revolutionaries. But, it is also clear that the problem has ceased to be a Cuban one and has become international, that is it has become a Soviet problem. . . . Castro has agreed to become a Soviet agent in Latin America.

SGA to lobby legislature

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The plans for lobbying the legislature was the main topic of at a forum held yesterday by the Student Government Association.

Approximately 120 students, citizens, administrators, and politicians gathered in the Cape Cod Lounge to discuss SGA's plans for getting a zero percent tuition and fee increase and a three to seven percent increase in state appropriations through legislature. The forum is the second step to the SGA's three–step plan.

Those who were in attendance included Chancellor David K. Scott, State Senator for the Franklin and Hampshire Counties Stan Rosenberg and the Amherst and Pelham State Representative Ellen Story.

SGA's fight now is for high state appropriation. The zero percent increase in tuition and fees is contingent on an increase in appropriations by at least the rate of inflation, which is about 3 percent.

"The university as a whole is asking for a seven percent increase from the state, and if we get an increase proportional to inflation, then we get a zero percent tuition and fee increase."

"After a long battle for Chancellor David K. Scott's support of a zero percent tuition and fee increase, SGA is getting ready to fight the state legislature."

"We wanted a unified campus to go out and fight for this against the people who are really in control, and that's the legislature," Nuñez said.

CHRISTOPHER KNAUSS/COLLEGIAN

State Representative Stan Rosenberg

SGA's focus has shifted getting the administration's support to gaining the support of the student in the fight in the state legislature.

"The power is in the vote and in the numbers," Nuñez said. "We are going to need lobbing, that is going to mean phone calls and letters and trips to Boston."

SGA is going to target the House and Senate Ways and Means Committees to lobby. SGA is also planning to contact the 2,400 UMass students who are voters in the Franklin County District to get their support.

"We have to find all the students who are registered to vote in the House Ways and Means Committee," said Amy Lloyd, legislative coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Advocacy and Research.

"We need to call them, and get them involved because they are registered to vote in the district therefore they hold influ-

S. Africa heads call for halting of violence

By SAHM VENTER
Associated Press

COLESBERG, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk and ANC leader Nelson Mandela called separately Thursday for a halt to organized protests against election opponents.

Their pleas followed the shooting death Wednesday night of a woman in the Roodepan black township.

The son-in-law of a lawmaker in de Klerk's National Party was charged in the slaying, which occurred during a clash between supporters of the president and the African National Congress.

De Klerk has warned that the intensifying violence could taint the results of the April 26-28 election, the first to include the black majority. His attempts to campaign in black townships have repeatedly been disrupted by ANC supporters.

On Wednesday, ANC protesters threw rocks and other debris at de Klerk, forcing him to cut short one appearance and cancel a later one in Roodepan. ANC and National Party supporters then clashed in Roodepan, leaving the woman dead.

De Klerk blamed the ANC for the violence, saying it had organized protests to disrupt his campaign. He called for the Independent Electoral Commission to investigate.

Mandela issued a statement Thursday condemning the violence and ordering ANC members to refrain from such disruptions.

HIV athletes may get visas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Immigration and Naturalization Service is drawing up plans to allow foreigners with the AIDS virus to obtain visas to attend the Gay Games in New York in June.

"We're developing the options and they will be sent to the attorney general to determine exactly what course of action will be taken," said INS spokesman Duke Austin.

"The State Department has asked us to develop some options on how we would admit these people on some sort of broad waiver of their inadmissibility," he said.

U.S. policy is to deny visas to anyone with a "communicable disease of public health significance," which includes HIV, Austin said.

But the State Department jumped the gun Wednesday by sending a cable to all U.S. diplomatic and consular posts saying that Attorney General Janet Reno had granted "a blanket waiver for HIV-afflicted visa applicants seeking to visit the United States for 30 days or less to attend or participate in this event." A copy of the cable was obtained by The Associated Press.

On Thursday, Reno said that cable was issued prematurely, adding, "I'm not even aware of the issue."

A State Department official conceded that the cable was sent in error. The Justice Department authorizes waivers, he said.

House condemns speech

By MARC GORDON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted Wednesday to condemn as "outrageous hatemongering" a speech last fall by an aide to Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

By a vote of 361-34, the House adopted a resolution condemning the "racist, anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic speech" by Chalet Abdul Muhammad and "all manifestations and expressions of hatred based on race, religion and ethnicity." Twenty-nine lawmakers, including Rep. Case Mfume, D-Md., chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, voted present.

The Senate unanimously adopted a similar resolution on Feb. 2. In a speech last November at Kean College in New Jersey, Muhammad referred to Jews as "bloodsuckers."

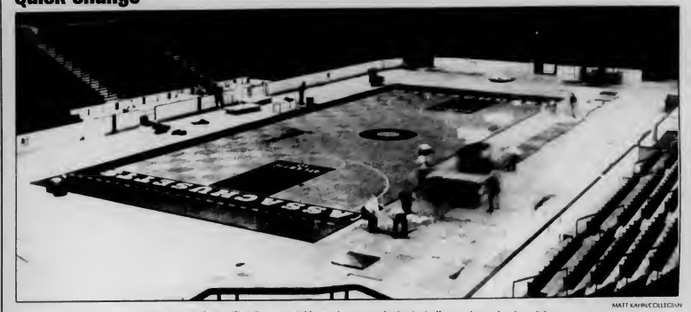
Muhammad did not comment on the House resolution in a speech Wednesday night at Howard University, but spoke out against the general criticism he has faced since his remarks.

"This thing ain't fair, this thing ain't fair at all," he said.

He did not comment on the speech he made in November, but said neither he nor other Nation of Islam followers were advocating hatred of white people.

"We are to be respectful, courteous and polite to all people as long as they are respectful, courteous and polite to us," Muhammad said. "We don't want to rule white people ... We just want to be left alone so we can rule and govern ourselves. But you want to call me a hater."

Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., the resolution's chief sponsor, said on the House floor that Muhammad's speech contained "murderous venom that drips from every utterance" and was an "attempt to incite hatred."



Before the vote, Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., circulated a letter to House members opposing the resolution on grounds it violated freedom of speech.

"The resolution condemning (Muhammad's speech) makes the Congress into an official ratings board, scanning the landscape for speeches to label 'Condemned by Congress,'" Edwards wrote. "If we officially condemn this one speech, how can we not condemn others?"

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., a member of the Black Caucus who supported the resolution, said in a floor speech, "I know there are some who would say that what we are doing is out of the ordinary. But these are unusual and extraordinary times. There are some immutable principles that are non-negotiable. We must not turn away from them."

[Farrakahan is coming to the University of Massachusetts on March 9, to speak at the Fine Arts Center.]

Janitor relieved of job

Housing Services have decided to remove a janitor from working at the University of Massachusetts because of charges brought up on him for indecent assault and battery.

On Feb. 14, Edward C. Stafford Jr., Stafford, 38, of 6 Chesterfield Drive, Amherst, was arrested at 8:30 a.m., for allegedly touching a student's breast in the second–floor bathroom of Melville, an all women's residence hall.

Chika Nnamani, executive director of Housing Services, said Housing Services made their decision last Wednesday.

"We are relieving him of his duties. He is not to work on the entire campus," Nnamani said.

Stafford was found in a first–floor janitorial closet after police were called and told of the incident.

A description given by the assaulted woman of what the man looked like matched to Stafford.

Stafford was arraigned in Northampton District Court last Wednesday. According to court documents, he admitted to grabbing the student's breast.

Yet, in court, he pleaded innocent to the charges against him. The court ordered him to stay away from the woman.

Nnamani would not comment more on the case. He said it was under confidentiality and it was not fair for Stafford.

He also said he did not want to talk about the case because it was a "personal issue."

ence over their representative," Lloyd said.

Sharron Kennaugh, director of State Relations and Dick Conner, the assistant director, spoke about the budget process in the state legislature.

"The frustration on the part of the campus with the budget process is that many of you are all gone when this before process is even half way through," Kennaugh said. "Any participation on the part of students and faculty is really critical in March, April and May."

Nuñez closed out the forum saying the students fight was not over. He stressed the need to make the school more affordable.

"Even if we do win and do get a zero percent tuition increase there still going to be tough times on this campus," Nuñez said. "But we have to keep focus. The issue is affordibility and accessibility foremost."

U.S. supports Haitian plan for timetable

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A multi-party delegation of Haitian parliamentarians unveiled details Thursday of a U.S.-backed plan which, they said, promises "electoral legitimacy" and an end to the country's political crisis.

But the government of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide countered by reaffirming support for its own plan, which differs substantially.

State Department deputy spokeswoman Christine Shelly reiterated U.S. backing for the parliamentarians' plan, calling it a practical means of restoring Aristide to power in the "shortest possible time."

The Aristide plan calls for a specific timetable for the deposed president's return while the parliamentarians would leave the return date open.

The latter plan calls for the departure of Army chief Raoul Cedras while Aristide would go further, insisting on the "removal of coup leaders." There are also major differences in the sequence of events proposed by the two sides.

The Aristide government statement raises questions about the credibility of the parliamentary delegation, saying members have no mandate to negotiate and are not representative of the parliament. The parliamentarians maintain that four of the nine members of their "leadership delegation" are Aristide supporters.

Speaking to reporters, Antoine Joseph, a parliamentarian who belongs to an anti-Aristide group, said the strength of the delegation's plan is that it is not being imposed by the international community but is the product of "Haitians of many different political persuasions."

Another anti-Aristide lawmaker, Duly Brutus, said fast action was necessary because of the "extremely grave" social and economic conditions in the country.

Accused spy passed polygraph tests

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Accused CIA turncoat Aldrich H. Ames passed agency polygraph tests twice during the time he is suspected of working for Moscow. The Senate Intelligence Committee plans to review the agency's internal security procedures, officials said Thursday.

The CIA suspects that secrets allegedly sold by the former counterintelligence officer led to the deaths of at least 10 Soviets working for U.S. intelligence, according to one official familiar with CIA and FBI briefings to the House and Senate intelligence committees about the case.

In an effort to detect traitors, the CIA tries to administer polygraph tests every five years to its employees, but there have been backlogs.

Ames, alleged to have worked for the Soviets and then the Russians from 1985 until his arrest Monday, was tested on schedule without his spying being discovered, according to a government official, who, like the others, declined to be identified by name. Those tests occurred in 1986 and 1991, according to another official.

"Doesn't the machine work? Or is it that easy to beat?" asked a congressional official who had been advised of Ames' passing the tests. "That's one area the Senate Intelligence Committee will be looking at."

One of the government officials said successful polygraphing depends on the questions.

"They ask you if you are a spy. It's about that blunt," said the congressional official. "We'll have to look closely at his test results; sometimes when the tests do not show deception, the results are inconclusive."

CIA Director James Woolsey told the House Intelligence Committee that the CIA and the Pentagon have been studying ways to improve internal security for the past year. He said they are reviewing their reliance on polygraph testing and the use of financial audits of employees.

Portrayal of skaters sexist

Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan — I have seen everything about them analyzed to pieces, except for the sexism involved in people's reactions to the situation.

As I write this, I have just watched yet another pseudo– news show about "skate–gate" called "Shattered Glory." As usual, Kerrigan was described as "Snow White," "fairy princess," and "the girl next door," while Harding was "the wicked witch," a "renegade princess," and so on.

Harding was described as "more comfortable fixing her truck than at a social function or a skating function," (note the classism there) and as "focused and fiercely independent." These traits are offered to explain her possible motive for masterminding the attack on Kerrigan, right alongside the fact that she was apparently "controlled by [ex–husband] Jeff and ... under his spell."

I don't want to enter the "did she, didn't she" debate, but I am interested in how this issue has been framed and interpreted to reinforce society's notions of how a woman should be. In all the theories I've seen in the media — or heard discussed by my friends — Harding is either a helpless pawn or a scheming, driven competitor and an unfaithful wife.

The link is made directly between her strong independence and her capability to commit a crime and order the infliction of pain. Because she isn't comfortable at social functions or skating functions, it adds to the picture of her as, not simply a strong woman, but a killer. It is a picture with which we are familiar — the blonde, ice–cold (no pun intended) killer like Sharon Stone and Madonna's characters in recent films.

The media and the public are condemning Harding, not because of the evidence, but because of their picture of her as strong, as independent, as driven to win, as wanting fame and money, as assertive; in a word, as unfeminine.

These are characteristics which we celebrate in males and male athletes! Entire male sports revolve around hitting and tackling each other. Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing for us guys — why does it make you a criminal if you are a woman? Without realizing it, this country is holding up a double standard once again for women and men.

Kerrigan is also demeaned in the "helpless victim" and "princess" roles in which she has been cast. She has been denounced and reduced to two dimensions as much as Harding has. Both deserve more credit — as athletes, as women and as human beings.

I have had my fill of Tonya Harding jokes, just as I had my fill of Lorena Bobbitt jokes a few weeks ago. And it is no coincidence that they sound similar, or that they are grouped together. When I watched "Saturday Night Live" a few weeks ago, they had a skit about the "Tonya Harding School of Charm" with Bobbitt as a recent graduate.

The media and society have used "skate–gate" and the Bobbitt trial as a chance to reinforce male fear of female power and the male desire to keep women in their place. And if I go by what I see in my daily life, it seems to be working.

Ben Zeman

All the Bobbitt jokes I've heard were from men, and underneath the laughter lay our fear of having our own penises cut off. One of my friends, after our women's studies class, joked that he feared that the teacher and the women in the class would "do a Lorena Bobbitt on him."

Once again, this equated women's criticism of patriarchy and men with cutting off our penises. Unfortunately, I must have that fear as well, for I laughed along with him.

Lorena Bobbitt was a battered woman, but we men tend to forget that or dismiss it. I wonder why there aren't John Wayne Bobbitt jokes going on — for example, when women come out of a predominantly–male classroom with a male teacher, do they joke, "I thought they were going to do a John Wayne Bobbitt on me?" Maybe not, because it isn't going against the sex role conditioning as much. Maybe not, because a woman is beaten every 15 seconds in this country and it's too close to home to be a joke.

The media and society have used these two cases as a chance to reinforce male fear of female power and the male desire to keep women in their place. And if I go by what I see in my daily life, it seems to be working.

It is we men who have created and are perpetuating this sexism, and it is we men who must end it. We must follow the lead of our feminist sisters but can't make them do all the work.

And when you're watching the Olympics tonight, try to remember that Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan are more than just princesses.

Ben Zeman is a UMass graduate student.

What life means for Katie

Last week I asked my 16 year–old sister, Katie, what it would mean for her to eat the fruits of life. Not just bite into them, but to really fixate her teeth on its rounded edges, and sink her mouth into all the richness it has to offer. The analogy confused her, so I asked her more profoundly what did she want to do for the rest of her life? Now being 16, with a neatly–pressed learner's permit and a part–time job chewing gum, Katie took the time to ponder what she wanted to do forever and ever.

During her mid–afternoon cartoon kick, Katie borrowed my word processor and tried to answer the question for herself. The word processor was fairly foreign to her, and in most situations, she'd rather take pilot control over a plane that just lost one of its wings. As she hunted for the "!" key, Katie began to answer the question I've been contemplating for quite some time now.

Suzanne Robitaille

When I think about Katie, whose list of toys start with laser tag guns, and have surpassed Nintendo, a 14–foot trampoline, skis (accompanied by a season pass), snowboards, a miniature four–wheeler and battery–powered motorcycle — I couldn't imagine Katie having any disturbing job thoughts. Any office job would be refused by her unless she could sit in a swing and play Pink Floyd.

For you I am going to duplicate the exact form of her typed answer, and leave you a few minutes to indulge in it.

> ...go to the NASA space place and hold someone hostage and get tons of space food and make the man take us to the moon and all the other planets and just fly around space with the longest rope in the world and tie it to the space ship and then after I had my fun I'll keep on going all the way up until I find the aliens ...

College bound? Well, that could be looked at in two ways. Bound to go to college or bound, as in bound and gagged. I personally am glad that I am in college, yet if someone as chilled out as my sister Katie offered me a lifetime in space I'd take it. Funny though, that Katie's answer was not just a whimsical extreme relief answer, the one where if all else fails you're gonna pick up and go west.

To "space out" is really what she'd like to do. How can college prepare you to approach a spaceman and steal all their micro–frozen moonburgers? It certainly hasn't taught me how to approach my own generation of humans. I see blind students walking across campus alone. Would they be alone still if Cruel Society 101 gave us a lecture on forming friendships with them? What does college teach you about expanding territorial boundaries and extending our labor force to a new frontier? We students won't leave the state in fear of losing financial aid. What does college teach us about tying ropes to dreams and flying around planets? It teaches us to suppress them.

We are given a brain, but school only challenges .01 percent of it. Our current educational system is so overwhelmed with limited budgets and with socioeconomic problems such as drugs, dropouts and teacher burnout that not enough attention can be given to teach students to develop their dreams. Chaos is discouraged. Measuring margins are graded activities.

Katie has no fear of failure. She's failed before and knows that it doesn't constitute rejection. But if fear of failure begins to dominate our natural curiosity, then the apple of life will fall from the tree and no one will be around to bite it.

Good luck in the future, and to all of you, in the words of Peter Dean, " ... Ride the hurricane!" Or In Katie's eyes, ride the Enterprise.

Suzanne Robitaille is a sophomore communication studies major.

Opinion

John Chaney not a monster

Calipari isn't God. And Coach Chaney isn't Satan. But again, in the name of civilization, in the name of justice, we have ostracized one man and immortalized another. In order to free ourselves from any association with Chaney we have stereotyped him as evil and excessively violent. When, in truth, he is not much different from any of us.

Michael Einhorn

What most people fail to see through their own smoke– filled vision, is that Chaney became a fall guy for our own anger. He vented, going right to the source of his anger, a glorified and legendary John Calipari. And he threatened him in front of many people who would later write about it in newspapers. He created an opportunity for the news media to make him an example; a bad, evil example.

This isn't a new feud between Cal and Chaney, and this is not something that deserves the kind of Chaney–bashing we have seen so far. There is something else going on here, under the surface, and few of us are willing to admit it. It's called scapegoating.

As humans in a tremendously complicated society, we need to simplify things with stereotypes. I am not completely against this — some of them are good, and some of them just might save our lives. (Like saying all tigers are dangerous.) But often we use stereotypes to scapegoat. We put people into groups so we can leave ourselves out of them.

I am not saying that Chaney is innocent of anything!

What I am telling you is to stop this ostracism of a great coach, a leader, and a prominent black man, based solely on your own need to justify your own behavior. It is immature and it's downright wrong.

We are educated people, we are doctors and students, we are here to learn, to grow and develop. Nothing stops a person's development faster than projection. Nothing. Once you can justify a behavior that was in question, you no longer need to change it. Chaney became that excuse, and every person who read the bashing could feel the anger. But why was the anger there? Why were you angry?

Because you love and lust for coach Calipari, and couldn't bear to see him upset or injured? Doubtful. It was because the bashing hit you internally, it brought up your own sets of morals and standards that are sometimes hard to follow. You, like most of us, felt a need to associate with the basher; a need to be good, not evil.

What I am talking about here is a major flaw of our society. That major flaw is that we are unwilling to believe that Chaney could be us. We could never be in the same situation as that 'horrible' man.

Remember, Chaney didn't do anything to you. And he paid a huge price, as the media made a mockery of him and his personal life. Please, please don't allow the media to make Chaney a scapegoat for society's problems.

This does not mean we should accept everyone who commits crimes and pardon them. Hardly. It simply means we should separate them from their crime and ask for restitution without creating hate and indifference. An example would be an RA telling their whole floor what a moron one resident was for getting written up. Making his life a living hell for a few days, just to prove a point. And once the resident lost his girlfriend, his seat on the student senate, and all of his friends on the floor, the RD issues a reprimand that everyone likes. When all that needed to happen was that the reprimand be made and everyone know what that reprimand was.

So when you see news, keep in mind to separate the person from their actions. Remember not to hate the person but the crime. We cannot classify and ostracize every person who does something we don't agree with.

Michael Einhorn is a junior majoring in psychology.

Frat says posters 'misinterpreted'

To the editor:

On behalf of all of the brothers of the Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, I would like to offer our sincerest apology for the misinterpretation of our most recent rush poster. We would not intentionally hurt anyone and our posters were not created to offend anyone on this campus, and were not intended to degrade the Greek Area.

We are deeply sorry if our actions were viewed as thoughtless and were found offensive. We look for an opportunity to make amends with the University community.

ZBT was founded on the basis of eliminating hatred and discrimination in its membership. Our members are extremely sensitive to the hurt caused by any form of prejudice and sexism.

That is why we are very unhappy with the way this situation has been handled.

Board of Trustees must reconsider

To the editor:

The recent decision by the Board of Trustees to link the naming of campus buildings to large monetary contributions is a slap in the face to all persons of color and their progressive allies in the White community.

Many students, faculty and community members wish to honor the late W.E.B. Du Bois. The fact that Du Bois, one of the foremost scholars in the 20th century, was also one of the key founders of the civil rights movement in this country makes his nomination particularly appropriate in trying to find a name for the tower library.

The fact that Du Bois' collected works reside at the University of Massachusetts tower library, bringing scholars to this campus from around the world to do research, makes the nomination of his name stronger still.

And the fact that W.E.B. Du Bois was a Massachusetts native, having grown up in Great Barrington, was named valedictorian of his all–White — save for himself — high school class, and received B.A. degrees from both Fisk University and Harvard before obtaining a Ph.D. from Harvard in 1896, shows that he is one of Massachusetts' greatest sons.

That Du Bois then went on to become one of the key founders of the NAACP and the modern civil rights movement, and a world–renowned figure only serves to indicate that the University of Massachusetts, the Commonwealth and the citizens of this state are provided with an opportunity of a lifetime to honor a person of such stature by naming a university library after him.

The campus coalition which is pursuing the library name will formally ask the chancellor to bring this issue before the Board of Trustees. We hope that the trustees will have the foresight and wisdom to honor the life of one of America's greatest scholars and, thus, contribute to the effort to move this society beyond the politics of the color line.

Students attest to senator's dedication

To the editor:

I am writing in response to Steven Cohen's letter, "Fighting tuition hikes takes more than talk" [Collegian, Feb. 24] and his remarks toward Sen. Bearse.

It was disgraceful to see that Cohen accused Sen. Bearse of taking full responsibility in fighting tuition and fee increases. Not once in Sen. Bearse's letter did he say "I." There were many students involved in working for a zero percent tuition and fee increase for next year.

Cohen goes on to accuse Sen. Bearse of not working five minutes on the issue of zero percent tuition and fee increase and of not being registered to vote here in town. On the contrary, Sen. Bearse has put in an inexhaustible effort in telling hundreds of students about the fight to stop tuition and fee increases and telling others where they can register to vote — and is registered himself.

Furthermore, Cohen is a campaign worker for Mirram Raphaely's campaign for Student Government Association President, a position for which Sen. Bearse is also running. I find it mendacious that Cohen is using negative campaigning and personal attacks on Sen. Bearse in order to get his candidate elected.

Let's stick to the issues! There are many problems that face UMass that need to be worked on.

Bananas unpeeling themselves. Fruits attacking each other. These were the actors in my first film.

My professor is big on editing. And editing. And editing. 800 ft of film ended up on the floor.

Ever since I was a kid I wanted to make a sci-fi movie. Now it's in the can.

MY FILMS ARE ABOUT LIFE IMITATING ART.
(ON MY BUDGET, I CAN'T AFFORD THE REAL THING.)

Using the American Express® Card at my wrap party helped neutralize hostile aliens.

A lot of people don't realize how much goes into making a film. Creating illusions with photographs being flickered, that, in itself, that's art. But as a student, reality kicks in fast. Having a budget of a few hundred dollars for my senior thesis film, that's reality. I couldn't afford 'Star Wars' type special effects. I got the actors to volunteer to be my aliens, free. And used the American Express® Card to charge major expenses like film and processing. The Card helps me stick to a budget. (It even helped me save serious money on a flight to New Orleans, with my Continental voucher.) Working on the film for no money, and long hours, tempers got a little short. So, the Card came in handy at my wrap party. We all became friends again. The American Express® Card works. For real.

De La Soul, Grammys, & other stuff

COURTESY TOMMY BOY RECORDS

De La Soul is en route to the Valley.

What is the most unexpected and downright strange hit single of the year thus far? it has got to be California underground singer Beck's song "Loser," which has received heavy play on both radio and MTV. The song, vaguely reminiscent of Basehead, lays a sloppy acoustic bass and guitar riff over a bare bones dance beat, producing a slacker/hip-hop sound. Beck whine/raps the verses, and the chorus proves to be the real hook, as multiple voices sing, "I'm a loser baby, so why don't you kill me?" in a disharmonious manner. Curiouser and curiouser ...

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Babineau & Matt Audette

Nine Inch Nails is releasing their long awaited LP The Downward Spiral on March 8, and all I have to say is thank goodness. Trent and the boys are back, and touring soon. I saw them at a rainy, foggy Lollapalooza 1, and my senses were all blown away. I don't sound too anxious, eh?

The Grammy nominations were announced, and among the contenders, there was one glaring mistake made by some really stupid person or other. Sade's "No Ordinary Love" was nominated under Best R&B Song by a Group. Apparently, they didn't realize that Sade is a person, a single female singer, not a bloody group. OOPS ...

The Valley was treated to a little "down-home" charm last Wednesday night when St. Louis' country-punks Uncle Tupelo took the stage at the Iron Horse. The band, which has received rave reviews for its newest release Anodyne, treated the modest-size audience to a hour and a half set that ranged from delicate country crooning to raunchy guitar noise, proving themselves to be one of the most competent and original sounding live acts today. The evening's only drawback was Mammoth recording artist Joe Henry, who opened the show with his brand of nondescript country rock which proved to be about exciting as his name.

Blame it on spring fever but it looks as if March is shaping up to be one of the finest months for live music in some memory. Hip hop superstars De La Soul and A Tribe Called Quest are rumored to return to the Valley on March 9, when they take the stage in the Student Union Ballroom. Boston natives Morphine will bring their odd line-up of bass, saxophone, and drums to Amherst college March 12. Jawbox, who have been hyped to death by the press for their latest (and greatest) album For Your Own Special Sweetheart, will play Pearl Street on March 17. And last but certainly not least, alternative darlings Pavement will bring their slacker rock to Pearl Street on March 28. With all these great shows, plus the annual Spring Concert looming in the distance, it seems like this may just be the cure to those winter blues.

It looks as if Jurassic Park is returning this summer as hordes of "classic rock" bands dust off their instruments and head back out on the road. The problem is that many of these bands such as The Rolling Stones and Pink Floyd are charging the outrageous price of $55 to $75 for tickets. Were not these the same bands that once preached "good hippie vibes" in the '60s? i guess the almighty dollar finally won out guys, huh?

It's pretty much a given now that our generation is starting a full fledged 1980s musical revival/obsession. This is ironic, as today's hip music and style is the complete antithesis of the 1980's version. In the '80s, the music was slick and stylish, computerized and formulated. Hip singers had their hair perfectly coiffed and faces manicured. Now music is messy and loud, grungy and sloppy. Hip style is ripped, dirty, greasy and thrown together. Does this portend some cataclysmic implosion when '80s and '90s music and style meet? Take cover. ...

Hinojosa's charming style entices crowd at Amherst

AKIAN COMBEAN/COLLEGIAN

Rolando Hinojosa.

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

When Rolando Hinojosa, one of the most famous Chicano writers, visited the University of Massachusetts last semester, he promised to be back soon. The bad weather on Thursday night didn't stop Hinojosa from once again bringing his charm and warmth to an audience at the Converse Assembly Room in Amherst College.

Hinojosa, born in Mercedes, Texas, comes from a family that migrated to the Rio Grande Valley in the 1740s. Members of his family defy political divisions, living in both sides of the river. His literature defies any cultural divisions, blending a Mexican cultural past in an Anglo- American framework.

His experience in the Army and in the Korean War are present in his literature. Hinojosa read from Korean Love Songs: Fram Klail City Death Trip, which he published in 1978. He later shifted to Spanish when reading Una Vida de Rafael Buentostro.

After reading from his own work, Hinojosa established a conversation with Ilan Stavans, a professor in the Spanish Department in Amherst College, and the rest of the audience. Asking the people in the auditorium to come closer to him claiming "I'm an old man," Hinojosa created an atmosphere that recaptured some of the same elements of the Rio Grande Valley used in his literature.

Stavans asked Hinojosa to explain his feelings when rewriting one of his books in another language. Hinojosa replied that it was an interesting experience since it was not a word by word translation and knowing the feelings he wanted to express it was more like "recasting."

Hinojosa concluded by asking who in the audience wanted to be a writer and then gave them a piece of advice: "a writer cannot afford the luxury of fear ... never say I want to be a writer, sit down and do it."

Magician Copperfield mystifies Mullins crowd

JESSICA TAVERNA/COLLEGIAN

David Copperfield, man of magic.

By JESSICA TAVERNA
Collegian Staff

With a little hocus-pocus David Copperfield pulled an array of tricks out of his metaphorical hat and managed to "ooh and ahh" those who attended his magical ensemble of illusions performed at the Mullins Center Wednesday night.

For the courageous individuals who braved the snowy conditions, Copperfield loaded his performance with an edge of flash, sap and seduction.

Encompassed by loud music, flashy lights and sensual dance routines, the magician's show gave off the sort of erotic aura often encountered in a sexually-explicit music video.

Copperfield attempted to orchestrate his program in a way that would grab hold of the audience's attention and retain that holding grip until the finale. He did this by alternating illusions with magic tricks which involved audience participation and utilizing a video screen which provided the illusions a greater sense of dimensionality.

Each Illusion entailed its own story line or theme, and those that did not involve audience participation had dance routines set to them in accordance with the story theme that was being presented and the music that was booming throughout the arena.

Most of the themes were derived from some dream or childhood fantasy of Copperfield's which he managed to manipulate into an optical-illusionary display.

The whole show seemed to be that of a Copperfield fantasy, as the two scantily-clad female assistants fawned and groped at him in dances which were meant to simulate story lines, but instead made Copperfield look as if he yearned to be the mighty man with the big "S" on his chest.

This was best displayed when Copperfield took a woman from the audience on stage and levitated with her in his arms to a little ditty that sounded remarkably close to that of the Superman theme.

But aside from the provocative dances and over- sentimentalized story lines, Copperfield accomplished such feats as making human beings appear and disappear, as well as dismembering them and simulating an indoor snowstorm.

His trickery truly did astonish his audience.

Northampton resident Ernie Jilison exclaimed as he left the auditorium, "What an excellent show! I really don't know how it's done!"

Good Country decorates FAC

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

When the first fleet of English prisoners arrived in Australia in 1788, they were ill-prepared for the life that awaited them. Living conditions were unbearable. Relations were strained. Guards and prisoners alike hung desperately on the movements of their supply ship.

How did they maintain their sanity?

According to dramatist Timberlake Wertenbaker, they put on a show. Our Country's Good, playing through March 5 at the Rand Theatre, tells of the first Australian theatre — peopled by convicts and their overseers.

Wertenbaker's award-winning play is an adaptation of the novel The Playmaker by Thomas Kenealiy (author of Schindler's List), which is itself based on journals from Australia's first White settlers. The story of whores and pickpockets being transformed into lords and ladies is both funny and poignant.

Nearly 100 actors auditioned for the privilege of putting on the penal colony greasepaint — 12 five-college students and graduates were finally chosen. Among the select dozen are such exceptional performers as Laurie Ciarametaro (Cloud Nine), Michelle CT Hendrick (Mothers and Others), and Alan White (Wallis, Hair) — all three winners of the Collegian MAC award for student theatre. Also on board is Toks Olagundoye, a Smith actress whose years living in England made her invaluable in coaching the accents of her fellow performers.

Under the guidance of dramaturg Andrew Herman, the cast was put through what Hamilton calls a "dramaturgy fitting" — researching the background of the play through studying and through visits to historical sights.

Our Country's Good is also noteworthy as the first University of Massachusetts show to feature the work of new faculty scenic designer Miguel Romero — an internationally known designer whose credits include work for the New York City Opera and such films as Good Fellas and New York Stories.

Romero's design for Country is described by Hamilton as "a very bold statement."

As bold, one might assume, as the production which accompanies it. As staged by Hamilton, every actor is seen in a variety of roles. Often this double-casting is used for ironic effect, such as when Aian White (an African- American actor last seen as the star standby in Joe Turner's Come and Gone) appears in the role of a White racist.

Yet it is also part of a larger statement contained in Wetenbaker's text — in which all prisoners are guards and the play itself is just a rehearsal.

Remaining performances of Our Country's Good are Feb. 25-26 and March 2-5 at the Rand Theatre, UMass. Tickets are available at the door or at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511.

The Psychology behind the Citibank Classic Visa card: The emotional security of the Photocard, now with No Annual Fee.

The Citibank Classic Visa® instills in students feelings of safety, security, and general wellness not unlike those experienced in the womb. Therefore, it is the mother of all credit cards. ¶ Some experts attribute these feelings to the Citibank Photocard, the first credit card with your photo on it. A voice inside says, "This is me, really me." (As opposed to, "Who the heck is that?"—a common response to the photo on one's Student ID.) It's an immediate form of ID, a boost to your self-image. ¶ Of course if your card is ever lost or stolen and a stranger is prevented from using it, you'll feel exceptionally good (showing no signs of Credit Card Theft Nervosa). ¶ Other experts point to other services, such as The Lost Wallet℠ Service that can replace your card usually within 24 hours. Or the 24-Hour Customer Service line, your hotline if you will, for any card-related anxiety whatsoever. ¶ Further analysis reveals three services that protect the services you make on the Citibank Classic Visa card, at no additional cost. 1. Buyers Security™ can cover them against accidental damage, fire or theft, for 90 days from the date of purchase[1] (preventing, of course, Insecurity). 2. Citibank Lifetime Warranty™ allows one to extend the warranty for the expected service life of eligible products up to 12 years.[2] 3. And Citibank Price Protection assures you of the best price. You need only see the same item advertised in print for less, within 60 days, and Citibank will refund the difference up to $150[1] (hence no Post Purchase Depression). ¶ Special student savings are particularly therapeutic. For example, you can receive a $20 Airfare Discount[3] on any domestic flight. (Case studies indicate that a Fear of Flying is overcome when Spring Break in sunny Florida is a possibility.) Not to mention savings on mail order purchases, sports equipment, magazines and music; a low variable interest rate[4] of 15.4% and No Annual Fee. ¶ Suffice it to say, you'll have a credit card you can depend on while building a credit card history. So, call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19, to apply over the phone (students don't need a job or cosigner) or to have your photo added to your Citibank Classic Visa card. ¶ If we say that a sense of Identity is the first component of the Citibank Classic Visa card, a sense of Security the second, and a sense of Autonomous Will from your newfound financial independence the third, don't be crazy...Call.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): A poorly timed financial or romantic venture could land you in hot water. Follow a conservative course or action. You are delighted by an influential person's comments.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): A close relationship provides the intimacy you crave. Could marriage be on the cards? Let a friend take the lead in organizing a social event. Everything will go like a well spending.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Consult a partner about ways to cut expenses. Paying low wages to good workers could lead them to seek employment elsewhere. Protect your staff. Questions that need not be asked need not be answered.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): An enrollment day for research and notetaking. Choose your agenda and your pleasures carefully. Keeping any promises you make to a child will mollify family members.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Practical matters dominate this morning. Expect professional activities to be hectic but productive. Once you are given more authority at work, you will be able to tighten out some shortcuts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Once a financial situation improves, your other goals will be easier to reach. Landing a new account or home will improve your chances. Curb an urge to be overly modest.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Travel is best postponed. Although a loan may not be forthcoming, do-gooders wants your help. Do what you can to give and withhold disappointing your financial security.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Double-check your work for errors. Careless mistakes could give someone the wrong impression. A special soiree may be featured tonight. Resist an impulse to spend money on an item you cannot afford.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Important decisions loom. Pick some one's brain, then hold out for a better deal. Avoid discussing controversial subjects. Although your mind is on high gear, your body needs rest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Be a straight shooter but sidestep office confrontations when you can. Reverse some time for study or light reading. Ignoring a young person's behavior will only lead to more trouble. Be fair but firm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Be careful not to lose you patience or step on a co-worker's toes. An affluence will fall only as long as everyone's needs are met. Trust your intuition when handling a family matter.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Romance could be challenging. Happily, you are right on the money where a banking or insurance matter is concerned. Higher-ups are eager to promote team players.

Doyle leads men's track to N.E.'s

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

This space is sought to give readers the impression that the Atlantic 10 men's indoor track and field championships would be quite a spectacle. In fact, no one saw them at all, because they were cancelled due to inclement weather.

The next in a seemingly never–ending series of snowstorms has hit the Atlantic coast, but it's not likely to postpone this weekend's New England Championships, to be held at Boston University. After all, this meet is an even bigger deal than A–10s.

"It's the culmination of our indoor season," coach Ken O'Brien said. "I hope we'll finish in the second five, but that will take our best performances of the year. But that's what championships are all about."

Forty–three schools from the six–state region will send their representatives to the Hub campus for this crucial meet, which the University of Massachusetts enters with a record of 19–9. The Minutemen last met at Southern Connecticut State University for last weekend's Eastern Conference Championships, where they placed second out of eight teams with 122 points. The host won the meet, scoring 144, and UMass earned victories over Springfield College (70), UMass–Lowell (58), Central Connecticut State (54), Bentley (52), New Haven (41), and Keene State (23).

Though his 14–feet, six–inch measure in the pole vault only placed him third, senior Paul Doyle had nothing to be disappointed about. That vault broke a 16–year old UMass record, set in 1978 by Teddy Power, who cleared 14'3".

"I've had my sights on [the record] since my first meet last year," Doyle said. "This was the last chance I had to break it, so [breaking the record] means a lot to me."

When Doyle was in training at Holliston High School, he was but a hurdler. He was recruited to UMass to compete in the decathlon, but initially his best pole vaults measured only about 10 feet. He accredits his great advancement to Curry Hicks Cage's new indoor facility, and to the tutelage of assistant coach Jim Giroux.

Doyle, an honors student in exercise science, will compete in the pentathlon at Boston University."I should definitely be in the top three," Doyle said. "And I have a good chance to win."

Williams money in the bank for UMass

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Williams, like the money player he is, banked in a 25-foot three-pointer with :08 seconds left, to give the Massachusetts Minutemen a thrilling 51-50 victory over the Temple Owls at McGonigle Hall.

After Williams drained the three (his fifth of the game), Temple's Rick Brunson raced down the court, but the ball was knocked out of the bounds by UMass with two seconds left. On the ensuing inbounds play, Temple's Eddie Jones missed a tough shot inside and a wild tip-in attempt by the Owls was also off the mark. Game to UMass.

"When the game is on the line, I want the ball," said Williams. "I feel like I can hit all the big shots."

It was the second time this season Williams had done in the Owls; on Feb. 13, at the William D. Mullins Center, Williams hit a leaning jump shot in the lane with three seconds left to give UMass a 56-55 victory.

But with this off-the-glass three, Williams not only gave UMass (23-5, 13-1 in Atlantic 10) its first victory ever at McGonigle Hall, but he clinched an unprecedented third straight regular season A-10 championship for the Minutemen.

The expectations for this one coming in were wild and rampant because of the previous game at Mullins Center. Temple (20-5, 12-4 in A-10) coach John Chaney's post-game tirade against UMass coach John Calipari made sure of that, if the tumultuous battle off the court did not.

The Minutemen showed no fear of the Owls or the raucous McGonigle Hall crowd in the first half. An Edgar Padilla three from the top of the key gave UMass a 10-5 lead nearly eight minutes into the game.

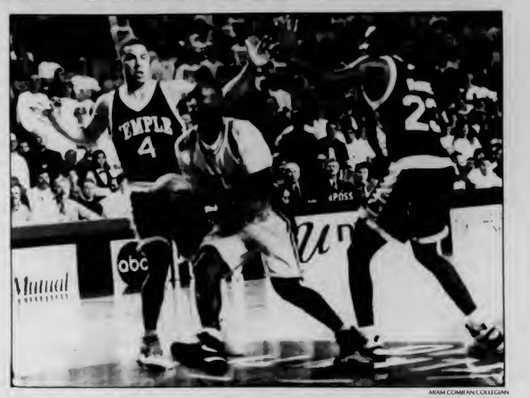
That five-point lead would become 11 at 19-8 when Williams (15 points) hit a three from the right corner. The Owls would battle back to within four at 21-17 on two Aaron McKie free-throws with 4:39 left in the half.

UMass would then end the half taking a nine-point lead on the strength of two more treys from Williams. Despite the 30-21 score, everyone knew it would come down to the final seconds.

The Owls shot out of the gate at the start of the second half, with its big three of McKie, Brunson and Jones doing all of the damage. Just over a minute into the half, UMass' Williams picked up his third personal when he fouled McKie to stop the 6-foot-6-inch swing man from getting a layup.

Temple immediately took advantage of this, isolating McKie on Williams, and the Temple senior got an uncontested shot inside to pull the Owls within five at 30-25.

The Owls would keep on fighting back with Eddie Jones leading the charge. Jones knifed through the lane to bring Temple to within one at 38-37 with 13:03 to go in the game. The Temple forward scored 13 of his game-high 22 points in the second half.



Neither team was able to make much of a run after that. Temple got its first lead of the half, 44-42, when Jones drained a three from the right wing. From there on in, it was a back and forth battle.

A Jason Ivey layup with 6:24 left gave the Owls a 46-44 lead, but UMass tied it the next trip down on a Marcus Camby hoop inside. Ivey then drove and scored inside to put Temple back up, 48-46.

The Minutemen answered once again. Lou Roe made a nifty feed to a cutting Donta Bright (11 points) for a layup and a foul. Bright missed the ensuing free-throw. Jones drew a foul on a strong move to the goal and hit the free throws to give Temple a 50-48 lead.

The Minutemen couldn't pull even on the next trip, but Brunson threw the ball away and gave UMass one more chance.

That was when Williams decided to go to the bank.

Player of the Game

UMass

Massachusetts Mike Williams

Williams, long known in Amherst for his intestinal fortitude, gave the frenzied fans in McGonigle Hall a taste of his last-second ability. One fan likened the junior from Hartford, Conn., to a switchblade – when he's open, he can kill you.

Why UMass won the game

The Minutemen refused to be intimidated by the hostile crowd and No. 8 Owls in the early going, jumping out to a nine-point lead at halftime. UMass distributed the ball better than its opponent and stuck close enough at the end to give it to Williams.

Minutewomen head to D.C. to play GW

STEVE PEDULLA/COLLEGIAN

Octavia Thomas and the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team travel to Washington, D.C, to play George Washington tomorrow afternoon.

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team has a goal to strive for this weekend against George Washington — getting over the .500 hump in Atlantic 10 play.

The Minutewomen (11-10, 5-6 in A-10), who will take on the Lady Colonials tomorrow at the Charles E. Smith Center (2 p.m.), have showed flashes of promise, yet have floundered at times. Something to expect of a young team.

Since the Jan. 19 game victory against Brown, UMass has traded a win for a loss. During a 10-game stretch, the Minutewomen won a game, then in the very next game were defeated. UMass broke that trend by dropping the last two against Duquesne and West Virginia.

"We need to be there mentally for every game," said sophomore center Melissa Gurile. "We are winning in the first half, and we are thinking that that's good enough. We have to play as well in the second half as we do in the first. We can't be satisfied with being up at halftime."

The Minutewomen hope to jump-start a winning streak against George Washington, who are currently second in the conference. The Lady Colonials (16-6, 9-3 in A-10) visited the UMass' own Curry Hicks Cage, and defeated the Minutewomen 63-49.

Tied at 24 at the half, the Minutewomen lost their lead and could not regain it. The inside tadem of Martha Williams and Darlene Saar combined for 28 points apiece, outshining the Minutewomen frontcourt of Gurile and forward Octavia Thomas (27 points combined).

Turnovers plagued the Minutewomen in the GW game, as they totaled 25, including 15 in the first half. The problem continues to hinder the play of the Minutewomen, as they had 28 in their last game against the Rhode Island WRams.

"Offensively, we have to move the ball around the court better," said Gurile. "In the last few games, we haven't done that."

The Minutewomen, have received outstanding play from two first year players as of late. Beth Kuzmeski and Crystal Carroll are both freshman, both starters and both have been recipients of the A-10 Rookie of the Week (Carroll twice) this season.

O'Brien has noted in the past that both are instrumental in the team's fate. Kuzmeski's main task is to hit the jumper, and Carroll's is to rebound. The coach says they must play well for the Minutewomen to come out victorious. Especially against the second place team in the conference.

Minutewomen notes: Two players are closing in on milestones. Gurile is 29 points short of the 700-point plateau, and Kuzmeski, with 38, is four short of the 100-point mark.

...Thomas has improved on her free-throw shooting touch this season. Last season, Thomas shot 62.6 percent from the stripe (82-131). This season, Thomas is shooting 76.7 percent (102-133) from the foul line, good enough for sixth in the A-10.

...The Minutewomen defense has been outstanding this season, holding their opponents to a 36.9 field goal percentage.

Minutemen set to face RIT in regular season finale

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts hockey team will wrap up its inaugural season tonight against Rochester Institute of Technology at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center.

The Minutemen (20-8), who have no post-season possibilities this season, will try to finish the season with a win.

This game will be a crucial one for RIT, as a win against UMass would be influential in determining their position in the ECAC tournament.

"This is a must win for us because (UMass) beat Salem State and Bowdoin," said RIT Coach Eric Hoffberg. "A win gives us leverage for ECACs."

Hoffberg admits that playing in the Mullins could be trouble for the Tigers.

"The rink scares me," said Hoffberg. "We haven't played in many rinks that big, and UMass looks like a team that has been playing well lately. They've got a solid team. Rob Bonneau is a legitimate Division I player. We'll just try to play physical and knock their defensemen off the puck."

UMass Coach Joe Mallen expects a battle from the Tigers.

"RIT has always been a very steady Division III team," said Mallen. "We're expecting to see as good competition as we've seen from the top Division II and III teams this year."

Mallen feels his team has peaked at the end of the season.

"I think we're playing our best hockey of the year in the last couple of weeks," said Mallen. "In years to come, we want to be hitting on all cylinders in the last couple of weeks of February, because the first weekend in March is the playoffs."

This game will be the final game for Minuteman Senior Steve Corradi. The former UMass baseball star has nine goals and 12 assists in 28 games.

"Steve Corradi brought genuine excitement and enthusiasm about playing hockey. I always enjoyed that in him," said Mallen. "After his four-year layoff from playing on the ice, it was like coaching another freshman, but his maturity off the ice, and his experience around UMass has made him a real asset to us.

"I hope 20 years down the road when UMass hockey is successful, he'll be able to say that he was a contributor to us our first year."

Mallen said he was reflective as the season draws to a close.

"I hope overall, especially after the game, that the kids will have a tremendous sense of satisfaction," said Mallen. "We met and exceeded our team goals in a very big way."

Mallen hopes that students will support the team in their final game.

"Everyone is saying to wait until next year," said Mallen. "If fans come to the game Friday night I promise to have them hooked for next year."

MATT KAHN/COLLEGIAN

Lone senior Steve Corradi (12) will play in the last game of his career tonight as the University of Massachusetts men's hockey team ends its season at the William D. Mullins Center. Opening face-off will be at 7 p.m.

Bertovich throws in the towel

CRANBURY, N.J. (AP) — Ron Bertovich, commissioner of the Atlantic 10 Conference for eight years, is resigning effective April 15 to become vice president and general manager of Empire Sports Network.

Bertovich joined the Atlantic 10 in 1982 as information director. Two years later, he was promoted to assistant commissioner, and during the summer of 1984 he served as interim commissioner. He was interim commissioner again in January 1986 before being chosen as commissioner four months later.

At Empire, Bertovich will replace Rich Bradley, who resigned last October to become assistant general manager at Sunshine Network.

Empire Sports Network services more than 410,000 subscribers in western and central New York State and northern Pennsylvania and 150,000 home satellite dish owners across the country.

Bertovich's appointment at Empire was announced today in West Seneca, N.Y., by John Rigas, owner of the regional sports network and president and chief executive officer of Adelphia Communications Corp.

Women's gym hosts Springfield

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

A local rivalry heats up again as the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team returns to Boyden Gym to host Springfield College on Saturday night at 7:30 p.m.

UMass is at home for only the second time this season, having competed in five of six meets on the road. The Minutewomen look to rebound after scoring a disappointing 180.6 points last weekend at Northeastern.

"We've only been home once, it's kind of like being an away team here. We are excited for it," said assistant coach Renee Lyst.

UMass slipped out of the Top 25 this week, but will be right back in contention in the next few weeks when scores can be dropped.

"I'm not concerned at all with not being ranked. I'm pleased that we can be at home for the next two meets," Coach David Kuzara said.

Springfield College, one of the top teams in Division II gymnastics, enters the meet with experience competing in Boyden. Springfield College represents an increase in talent from UMass' only other home opponent, MIT (Feb. 4).

"They are probably a little bit better than Northeastern, scoring in that range. It's going to be good, they are certainly a more formidable foe than MIT was," Kuzara said.

After last weekend's tough outing, Kuzara and Lyst expect to go back to a lineup they had used in previous competitions. After getting a meet off from the all-around competition to rest, look for Shaheda Keels, Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz to again compete in all four events.

"We want to have the healthiest lineup out there, we will make some subtle changes, but it will be similar to the lineup we used against MIT," Kuzara said.

"We will depend on everybody, we need to get good scores at home," Lyst said.

After the Springfield meet, UMass will host the nationally ranked University of New Hampshire squad on Mar. 4 in their last home meet.

"I expect us to get back up into the 187-190 range overall. If things break right, we have a chance to

Trial date scheduled for bicycle bandits

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

On April 28, two University of Massachusetts students who were involved in a bicycle theft ring, will go on trial before a Northampton District Court judge.

In court last Thursday, both Adrian J. Erdman, 20, of Bedford, and Brian L. Galloway, 20, of Lexington, admitted their involvement in the 13 charges brought up against them.

Both men are faced with 10 charges of receiving stolen property, single charges of larceny and two charges of possession of burglary tools.

Erdman and Galloway presented their facts in court to prove their guilt on the charges made in their connection with bicycle thefts in their Butterfield dormitory room.

Yet, when Judge Robert Kumor decided to impose a one- year suspended jail term with 30 days to be served in the House of Correction, they withdrew their pleas.

The sentence did not match the term recommended by the prosecutor. Erdman's attorney, James Couture of Northampton, and Galloway's lawyer, Sarah Schooley of Amherst, each requested that the charges be dismissed if the two men did not get into further trouble.

Both attorneys argued that felony convictions – having guilt charges on their records – would hurt their chances in getting jobs in the future.

Kumor wanted a more serious punishment than either the prosecution and the defense requested. He said the case would give a message to the community of how serious bicycle thefts are.

Information was presented by the prosecution that over $7,000 worth of bicycles and parts, as well as four nitrous oxide tanks and burglary tools, were found in their car and dormitory room.

Along with a 30-day jail sentence, the judge recommended 100 hours of community service and that both Erdman and Galloway pay reimbursements to the bicycle owners as well as working with police in finding the bike's owners.

Assistant Northwestern District Attorney Melinda Soffer suggested a 10-day jail sentence. Soffer and the two other attorneys agreed with Kumor's recommendations on the community service, working with the police and repayments.

Soffer's argument relied strongly on the seriousness of the thefts. She said Erdman and Galloway stole the main mode of transportation from many of their peers.

Because an agreement was not made between the judge and the attorneys, their pleas were withdrawn, and their cases will precede to a hearing before a District Court jury on April 28.

Erdman and Galloway were stopped by UMass police on Dec. 9, 1993 for driving a car with an expired inspection sticker. Three bicycle frames were found in the car by the police.

A search warrant was obtained and police found bicycle parts, a hacksaw, cable and bolt cutters and numerous other burglary tools.

Ex–Senator defends actions

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

The Third World Caucus (TWC) dismissed Sen. Alan Weinfeld Feb. 9 due to the allegedly racist actions he engaged in on Dec. 8, 1993 at a meeting of the Student Government Association.

Weinfeld was accused of handing out sheets with quotes of previous speeches by Louis Farrakhan to white senators only and disputes the facts that led up to his dismissal. Weinfeld said he "distributed material on Mr. Farrakhan to all senators, including senators of color, and after all senators received information, the general public was given copies."

Weinfeld then added that Jewish, as well as colored, students, had to wait to receive the handout, until after all of the senators received the information. He said the reason he had to give the handout to senators first was "because the Hillel copy machine was broken and I only had a limited number of copies."

Unaware that everyone at the meeting had to have a copy, Weinfeld said if he had been aware he would have had 100 more copies made at Kinko's. He also said there were just enough copies of the handout, and by the end of the meeting every student had received the information, and he "challenged anyone to deny that fact."

Weinfeld said he believes he was removed from the TWC because he is Jewish and because of his "vehement stance against Farrakhan."

The purpose of the TWC, is laid out in its constitution: "Acknowledging that Third World people have historically been and still are oppressed and underrepresented in the social, economic and political spheres of life in the United States, and specifically, in the institution called the University of Massachusetts, the Third World Caucus shall promote and reflect the diversity of Third World student interests at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, and enhance their Third World educational, social, political and cultural experience."

According to Weinfeld the TWC represents "women, lesbians, gays, bisexuals, Jews, students of color and other minority groups." He said he

The local Amherst branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people wrote a letter last week to the national president condemning remarks made by Khalid Abdul Muhammad, and called for a rebuke of Farrakhan for his support of Muhammad's statements.

The letter was written to the national president, Ben Chavis, in response to Farrakhan's remarks at a press conference in Washington D.C. where Farrakhan demoted Muhammad for his anti-white and anti-Semitic statements in his recent book, The Secret Relationship Between Blacks and Jews.

Farrakhan denounced his aide, but supported the "hidden truths" in the book.

> "His remarks were against many different groups. That is not at all what the NAACP stands for."
> – Margot Parrot, Secretary Amherst Branch of NAACP

"We the Executive Committee of the Amherst area branch of the NAACP, were appalled at Louis Farrakhan's remarks on February 3, 1994," said the text of the letter in a press release. "It is time that Louis Farrakhan be rebuked by the NAACP publicly."

According to Reynolds Winslow, president of the Amherst NAACP, the letter was drafted by the executive committee because Farrakhan failed to rebuke his aide sufficiently, and that the NAACP should take a look into the actions made by Farrakhan.

"His remarks were against many different groups," said Margot Parrot, secretary of the Amherst branch of the NAACP. "That is not at all what the NAACP stands for."

"Together on this planet we are struggling for a oneness together," said Winslow. "We can only survive together. Louis Farrakhan is in his own struggle."

"His viewpoints have to be heard. But I do not agree with what he has to say," Parrot said.

Louis Farrakhan was scheduled to hold a press conference in Chicago yesterday relating to his call for a "black summit." Farrakhan will be speaking at the Fine Arts Center on Mar. 9.

Question of taste debated at Hillel

REBECCA PETERSON / COLLEGIAN

The latke vs. hamantashen debate at Hillel House.

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

The war raged on between the old stand-by latke and the fruit-filled hamantashen as Hillel House held another of its "nearly annual" debates on the topic.

About 40 people crowded into the standing room only Hillel House to listen to the fiery debate over whether latkes were better than hamantashen, or vice-versa.

Latkes are potato pancakes traditionally eaten with sour cream or apple sauce during Chanukah. Hamantashen are three-cornered cookies filled with fruit that are often eaten during Purim.

The debaters were introduced by University of Massachusetts Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, who was wearing a multi-colored clown wig. This set the tone of the debate, as children, students and other members of the community, cheered the debaters with loud applause and noise makers.

Barry Levy, of the history department, spoke first on "The Historical Latke: Columbus, America and the Jewish Search for a Holiday Food."

He explained that spurious new information had been unearthed claiming Jewish bakers were getting rich by selling expensive hamantashen to eat during holidays. Jews decided to finance Columbus' journey in order to find a new food source, possibly in China, but ended up discoverlng potatoes. As potatoes were cheap and easy to make into latkes at home, they were obviously better than hamantashen.

Jessica Korn, from the political science department, was the first speaker for the hamantashen. In her speech, "The Hamiltonian Hamantashen: A Sweet Vision of American Constitutionalism," she explained how hamantashen represented the American Constitutlon.

Korn said the three corners of the cookie represent the tripartite system used in the United States, while the potato pancake represents the ineffectual Articles of Confederation that were originally used. She

News Analysis by Jorge Matos

The Cambridge History of Latin America, states that many transnational companies were willing to accept the new government in Cuba of 1959, as long as Fidel Castro followed the path of all Latin American republics, which was to accept the economic austerity preached and imposed by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

These were some of the conditions suggested to the new government if they wanted to continue enjoying, what they called "one of the highest standards of living in Latin America," surpassing Venezuela, which was enduring the dictatorship of Marcos Perez Jimenez; or Paraguay, which under Stroessner was enjoying a poverty similar to Haiti and an illiteracy rate of 80 percent.

The fall of the old regime in Havana required the creation of new norms, rules and instutions, the old rules of the game no longer applied and the armed forces crumbled. According to the mentioned historic compilation, the history of Cuba during the next 30 years addressed the needs of revolutionary creativity, a commitment to create order out of revolution, the need to uphold a revolutionary faith in the implementation of that new order.

Most people in Latin America, have read and studied of the Cuban revolution and its failures, which are still been emphasized almost daily after 35 years (Boston Globe Feb. 27, 1994).

Puerto Ricans as well as Floridians and New Yorkers complained of the preferential treatment states' governments were giving Cuban refugees, while at the same time most Puerto Rican families became involved in helping them start a new life. Leftists around the world could understand that these "gusanos" (worms), as they called them, had to flee because Castro wanted them to respond to corruption charges during the Batista years.

Not all of them were corrupt; many of them had to leave for various reasons. But something strange must be happening inside Cuba when thousands of intellectuals, socialists, journalists, artists, etc. keep joining their counterparts in Miami, San Juan and Spain, since the first days of the revolution.

Cuban ways of escaping oppression may remind one of those utilized by their fellow Dominicans escaping poverty, they arrive daily in barges, or anything that floats, to Puerto Rican shores. On the other hand, a quarter of a million Colomblans have entered the United States illegally, according to the Colombian author Julio Oscar Vanegas' book Llueves Palos. Many Latin Americans dream of obtaining the famous "Green Card," because they also want to escape an oppression much worse in their countries of origin than the one awaiting them here. There is little media coverage of these events.

According to Argentinian journalist Jacobo Timerman, when a governmental bureaucracy depends on one man, Fidel Castro, in order to function, and that man has been the ruler for

The state of Cuba in 1957 viewed

This is the description found in the Cambridge History of Latin America, volumes III, V and VII of the economical and social status of Cuba during its most progressive and affluent year, 1957, one year before the Castro Revolution.

The population was expanding at an annual rate of 2.5 percent and of 50,000 young persons alone reaching working age every year, only 8,000 jobs were created. United States' capital controlled 90 percent of that country's utility services (telephone, water, electricity, etc); 50 percent of railroads and 40 percent of its agricultural production. Unemployment and underemployment increased, 17 percent of the labor force was unemployed, while another 13 percent had been reduced to underemployment. In the agricultural industry, one of that country's principal sources of employment, some 60 percent of the workers were employed for 6 months or less, with only 30 percent employed for more than 10 months.

The rural population did not enjoy the amenities and services that had come to characterize life in that country's cities. On the contrary, the one third which lived in the countryside suffered abject poverty and persistent neglect. Only 15 percent of rural inhabitants possessed running water as compared with 80 percent of the rural population. Medical and dental personnel as well as hospitals and clinics tended to concentrate in the cities while a combination of poverty and isolation served to exclude the countryside from virtually all access to educational services.

The national illiteracy rate of 20 percent concealed that of 40 percent in the countryside while in one province it was more than 50 percent. The peasantry lived at the margins of society and outside the body politic. Vast areas of the country were held in latifundia farms. Twenty-two large agro-industrial companies operated one-fifth of the agricultural land, much of this in reserve for the prospective periodic boom that planters so eagerly awaited. Cattle ranchers also accounted for vast acreage, from which large numbers of peasants were excluded as either workers or owners.

Repercussions of gaffes felt by White House staff

By THOMAS WAGNER
Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Casual comments by the Clinton administration have become the focus of a bitter dispute between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

If American diplomats remain embroiled in the conflict, it could set back recent improvements in Indo-U.S. relations and American efforts to prevent an Indo-Pakistani nuclear arms race.

An off-the-record remark by a senlor official and some ill-considered wordlng by a junior White House letter-writer are being blamed for the damage.

Some Indian officials suggest that Robin Raphel, the State Department's top diplomat on South Asia, be told that a visit here next month would be unwelcome, or that a black carpet should be rolled out if she does come.

India and Pakistan have fought three wars since gaining independence from Britain in 1947, and are believed to have been close to nuclear wars in 1986 and 1990.

India has long been sensitive to outside criticism, and its newspapers often print exaggerated pro-government reactions. But headlines and editorials about "Bill Clinton's verbal bombshells" and his administration's "tilt toward Pakistan" have been severe. The acting U.S. ambassador responded with an op-ed piece in a large newspaper about recent improvements in Indo-U.S. trade and military relations.

"India and Pakistan both fear that if one of them improves ties with the United States, the other will lose out. And their fears have been amplified by gaffes at the State Department and the White House," said Sumit Ganguly, a South Asia expert at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington.

the past 36 years, something is terribly wrong in the system. On the other hand, the PRI (Institutional Revolutionary Party) in Mexico has been in power for the past 60 years. In that context the Chiapas revolt seems like it had been brewing for sometime rather than an overnight event. The democracies that have been reinstated in all Latin American countries are strongly criticized.

According to the European Community, the kind of democratic system that exists in the United States is to be avoided at all costs. A "democratic sytem" di-guised under two political parties when in reality is one political party having a conservartive and a liberal factions, with no organized left parties and a low electoral participation from apathetic citizens is not the European idea of democracy. That kind of democratic system where absymal class differences fall along the lines of race and ethnicity, where Gays, Black, Hispanics, women and poor people of all races, who have yet to conquer basic human rights does not fit into the E.C. model.

U.S. transnational corporations want Cuba back in order to remain competitive in the world market. These transnational companies squeeze $22 billion a year from Puerto Rico. Cubans will not be entitled to the $2 billion in U.S. federal aid in food coupons (not welfare), medicare and other benefits Puerto Ricans are said to enjoy, since Cuba does not possess a good business atmosphere and Puerto Rico has remained productive. U.S. transnational corporations have not suffered in spite of the economic blockade imposed on Haiti. It would seem like Cuba, even if not entitled to the benefits of Puerto Rico, will have to match the U.S. standard for "free" and "productive."

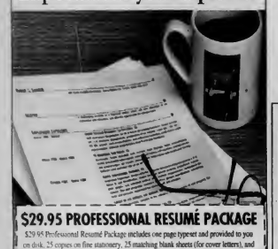
also rebutted Levy, by declaring that it is easier to make hamantashen and that she had been doing it since nursery school.

Shlomo Barnoon, of the public health department, spoke on "The Latke: A Public Health Threat?" He declared there was a devious campaign to discredit latkes, and intimated that Hamantashen supporters were behind it. He then showed various medical experiments in which people ate latkes, with no change in their amount of hair, eyesight or hearing.

David Bloome, from the department of education, spoke last on "The Great Reading Debate Revised: Potato Phonics vs. Hamantashen Whole Language." He talked about "Dr. Bottomup's" publication in the 1960s that showed latkes were a good way to teach children to read through phonics, as "potato" is an ideal word to break up into individual segments.

He then went on to explain how this report has come under fire lately, as people realized it is more important to eat the food than to spell it. He referred to former Vice- President Dan Quayle's problem with this when he was more concerned with spelling potatoes than eating them. He went on to say that as it is harder to concentrate on spelling hamantaShen than it is to eat them, they are obviously the better food.



When all the debaters had provided their points, Perlmutter took an informal vote to see which side had won. Although it appeared the crowd favored the hamantashen by a slight margin, Perlmutter declared a tie.

Deborah Stoloff, a graduate student in the department of education said she came in thinking the latke was the better food, but was persuaded that hamantashen are superior. She added this is "an issue I've been grappling with for a long time, and I can walk away from this debate with the issue resolved."

A journal for the mothertongue

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Poets and writers of all foreign languages now have a literary outlet through which to express themselves, thanks to a new journal produced and sponsored by the Comparative Literature Department here at the University of Massachusetts.

The journal is called mOthertongue, and is in its first year of publication. The idea behind mOthertongue is to reach out to students in the Five-College area whose native language is not English, who feel that self-expression is most creative and natural.

"I sense a need for a space for those whose first language is not English to express themselves and let others hear their voices," explained the journal's Faculty Advisor and Department Chair William Moebius. "If we acknowledge that this campus is comprised of many different linguistic communities, the journal produces a place for these communities to come together."

The four-person Board of Editors is seeking submissions of all forms of writing, including autobiographical anecdotes, letters, poetry, science fiction and short prose. The original text should be in a foreign language, accompanied by a rough translation into English to be published in the journal, which will be completed and available to students and faculty in May.

"No other journal on this campus has ever done anything like this," said Will Georgiades, one of the journal's editors. Georgiades also said that the journal serves as a counterpart to the Spectrum, a campus literary journal which prints submissions written exclusively in English.

"We recognize that a language is the stepping stone to understanding another culture," said Susan Leech, who is also a Comparative Literature major and journal editor. "We are trying to generate interest in other cultures and languages, and eliminate the limitations of language."

Students are encouraged to submit entries (2-4 pages, typed, double-spaced) by Mar. 7 to mOthertongue, Dept. of Comparative Literature, Box 7715, UMass. Submissions should include the author's name, address and phone number. All entries will be reviewed by the Board of Editors and authors will be notified of publication status.

Local cafe serves up hot jazz

Paradise City Jazz Band & Montenia
Cafe DiCarlo
Feb. 24, 1994

Upon entering the Amherst area, one is quick to notice the abundance of venues that range from clubs to basements, where live music can be found. In the majority of instances however, the most difficult type of music to track down, unless sponsored by Amherst College or the University of Massachusetts, has been jazz.

Special Program Contrasting Farrakhan & his (Nation of Islam) with the Religion of AL ISLAM
Date: Tues. 3/1/94
Time: 7:30 PM
Place: Campus Center
Room: 168C

However, Cafe DiCarlo in downtown Amherst has introduced a schedule of various jazz and blues artists, Wednesday through Friday nights, from 8-11 p.m., making it easier to catch live jazz in an intimate setting.

Last Thursday night was no exception, as the Paradise City Jazz Band performed a set that ranged in styles from bluegrass/ragtime to ballads and standards. Tuba and banjo were utilized to achieve a down-home feeling that even included a blues selection with bluegrass overtones.

The 12-year-old band, which has been through some lineup changes, consists now of Dave Pinardi on trumpet, Tim Atherton on trombone, Jay Messer on guitar and banjo, Tom McClung on piano, Phil Ori on drums and Richard Downs on bass and tuba.

Songstress Montenia possesses a beautiful voice, and she and the band complemented each other wonderfully.

The band ended the set with a highly energetic version of "It Don't Mean a Thing if it Ain't Got That Swing," which displayed well-played solos on top of very tight drumming from Ori. Even to an inexperienced jazz listener, these elements, combined with a relaxed approach make the style of the band easy to enjoy.

Yngwie on way

By PHILIP LEVASSEUR
Collegian Staff

So you think you can play a fast guitar scale? Get ready to take some notes from the man who is considered the world's fastest guitar player. Anyone who is serious about playing guitar will enjoy Tuesday night's Pearl Street performance of Yngwie Malmsteen with special guests Rapid Symphony.

Malmsteen is considered by many to be one of the world's few guitar virtuosos, and has received rave press from many top guitar magazines.

Malmsteen is a Swedish native who began playing at the age of five, and was inspired by a 1970 television special on Jimi Hendrix.

"It was a revelation...I started playing [seriously] the day Hendrix died," Malmsteen said. His inspirations go much further than that of just rock and roll. Classical artists also caught his imagination and became important inspirations, some of which are Bach, Vivaldi and violinist Nicolo Paganini.

His playing style is a combination of speed, grace, timing and a blend of impressive harmonic scales that in some songs reach marathon lengths.

One of Yngwie Malmsteen's biggest problems early on was the fact that singers drifted in and out of his band. Despite this fact, Malmsteen has recorded a total of 10 albums since 1983, and was instantly recognized as a creative genius as far back as 1984. Originally he was with the band Alcatrazz, and released No Parole for Rock and Roll in 1983, and Live Sentence that same year. In 1984 Malmsteen embarked on his solo career by producing Rising Force, followed by Marching Out in 1985.

1986 proved to be one of Yngwie Malmsteen's best years with the release of his Trilogy LP. During that year he brought his show to the masses as the opening act for Iron Maiden's Somewhere in Time world tour.

The tour with Iron Maiden ended in 1987 and Malmsteen was involved in a near-fatal car accident that caused him a year-long rehabilitation period. In 1988 he released his most popular LP to date Odyssey and was followed up by Trial by Fire in 1989; Eclipse in 1990 and Fire and Ice in 1992.

Last year Malmsteen made CNN news for being arrested in Florida for a domestic dispute with his girlfriend's mother. As of now he is no longer signed with Elektra Records, and the tour sponsor is unclear.

The Veldt
Afrodisiac
Mercury/Polygram

North Carolina's latest musical export, The Veldt, loves The Cocteau Twins, a lot. But even though much of its guitar sound is steeped in the Coc's dreamier-than-heaven aesthetic, the Veldt manages to sound fairly original and have made an enticing album.

Most of the songs on Afrodisiac lay these shimmery guitar textures on top of thick beats and grooves, making for a lovely pop sound thick with hooks. "Until You're Forever" is laden with melancholy while "Revolutionary Sister" and "Juicy Sandwich" are celebratory and danceable.

The one weakness on the album is the lead singer's voice. Most of the time, it borders on a baritone whine, and he very often sounds like he's straining. The music, however, overcomes the vocal weaknesses, and urges you to listen on. The Veldt has made a completely alluring album with a unique approach very welcome in this age of stale musical ideas. Something definitely worth indulging in. A- (B.B.).

King's X
Dogman
Atlantic Records

With the line that separates mainstream from everything else quickly dissipating, it seems as if a growing number of bands are coming dangerously close to crossing the threshold these days, usually to the dismay of their fans.

In the past few years, it seemed as if King's X was flirting with the line, and this no doubt, made loyal fans very nervous. However, with Dogman, the Houston based trio's fifth album, they take a giant leap back from the pop overtones that would have led some to believe that they were on the verge of selling out.

Dogman is an album of catchy, often bone-crunching guitar riffs from Ty Tabor, and straight ahead drumming from Jerry Gaskill. Bassist and lead vocalist Doug Pinnick displays vocal talent from the textured "Flies and Blue Skies" to hollers and screams on "Pretend."

Other highlights include "Complain" and "Pillow," both of which are up-tempo songs. The slower, more subdued songs are good, but become hard to distinguish from each other as they are all clumped in the middle of the album, and share similar tempos. These two factors make a beginning-to-end listen a little difficult, and make it clear that this band is at its best doing more up-tempo work. B (M.MacLean).

Beltbuckle
"Judas Suicide" EP 7"
Sonic Bubblegum Records

Beltbuckle is Lou Barlow's most recent side project away from Sebadoh. Overall, this EP displays the many styles of songwriting that Barlow has experimented with over the years. A decade ago, Barlow was in the legendary Dinosaur Jr. led by J.Mascis, but due to a difference in musical taste, Barlow left to form Sebadoh. Originally, Sebadoh was just an acoustic band, but since then they have evolved into a much heavier, noisier band. Barlow's songwriting techniques are constantly changing and Beltbuckle is an example of his love for experimentation.

The title track "Judas Suicide" sounds like nothing Barlow has ever done with Sebadoh. Unfortunately, the next track "Pocket Skylab Love" is a bad song with an even worse title. "Mary Hair," however, is the masterpiece of the whole EP, and is one of the most beautiful songs that Barlow has ever written.

This EP contains only one great song, but it does display Lou Barlow's diverse songwriting ability. A must for any real fan. B- (M.Burke).

Censorship in Springfield?

journalism n. the profession of collecting news for, writing for, editing or managing a newspaper or other periodical.

It is hard to believe that Michael Bigda was able to become the chairman of the West Springfield School Committee without knowing the definition of this elementary school word.

On Valentine's Day, four women who said that they were affiliated with the Northampton chapter of the Lesbian Avengers entered a school and distributed leaflets and candy to students without the knowledge of school officials. They were asked to leave after 15 minutes. It was not the best way for the Avengers to help their movement, and Les–Bi– Gay groups distanced themselves from the action.

Then that was that. An unpleasant incident, but certainly not enough to warrant what happened next.

The school district sent a letter to Springfield Union News reporter Jeanette DeForge, threatening her with arrest if she ever appeared in a school building. The grounds for this threat? The newspaper had assigned DeForge to the story after receiving a tip on Sunday, the day before the Avengers' event, and she did not contact school officials to try to stop it.

"She was in a position to stop it and she didn't," Bigda said. "She was more interested in getting her story than in the children."

Take your seat, Michael. It is time for your vocabulary lesson.

Because you see, Mr. Bigda, that is not what journalists do. True, objectivity is measured by an ever–decreasing standard in journalism today, but it is still the central tenet of the practice.

Objectivity means that it is not the responsibility of the journalist to intercede. More than that, to intercede is a direct violation of the journalist's purpose. A journalist is charged with seeking out the facts of an event, and reporting the plain, straight truth.

Michael Bigda, chairman of the West Springfield School Committee, has threatened to arrest a professional journalist if she ever appears in a public school building. But the First Amendment does not stop at West Springfield city limits.

Peter J. Orvetti

The Valentine's Day leafletting at the school most likely should not have taken place in the way that it did. But it is not the fault of the Union News. The Union News, like all newspapers, exists to pursue objective reports of events, not to throw itself into the stream of happenings.

It sounds like Mr. Bigda and his crew cannot handle running their schools so they want to lay the blame at someone else's feet. (Why did it take a full 15 minutes to realize that there was an incident, and to correct it?) The cost? Nothing short of constitutional freedoms.

Bigda's offense is far worse than anything that DeForge might have done. Bigda has threatened to arrest a professional journalist if she ever appears in a public school building. But the First Amendment does not stop at West Springfield city limits. He simply cannot do this.

DeForge poses a threat to no one, and cannot be banned simply because she dared to tell the community what was going on at a public school. If anyone is violating a law here, it is Bigda himself, by attempting to censor the news media.

The Union News has asked the Hampden Superior Court to block the ban on these same constitutional grounds. The court will hear the case on Wednesday.

In the meantime, perhaps Mr. Bigda should take a look at the course catalogs of the many fine academic institutions in the Pioneer Valley. I am sure that any of a number of these schools would offer an "Introduction to Journalism" course. And while you're at it, Mr. Bigda, sign up for "Constitutional Law" as well.

Taking travel for granted

I was on the runway of Bradley International Airport in Hartford, Conn., last Thursday morning preparing to write my first column on the other side of the coast. It never happened.

A few things got in the way when I took high–speed travel for granted.

Just because you're on the runway doesn't mean you're about to take off. My colleague and I were on the way to the runway at 6:25 a.m. when I broke out with my best Rain Man impersonation.

"Course, Quantus never crashed. Quantus definitely never crashed."

Michael Morrissey

It was pretty funny until the pilot informed us of a "minor" delay involving the plane's computer system. Forty– five minutes later, the pilot instructed us that a back–up hydraulic pump was not working and we had to get off the plane.

That's when the fun began.

"You can make the connecting flight from Newark at 10:30 a.m." After ascertaining that there was no way in hell we were taking off from Hartford, we bit the bullet and took a shuttle bus. It left at 8:30 a.m. Any physics majors want to tell me how you get from Hartford to Newark in two hours?

"All we guarantee is that you arrive at your final destination." We got to Newark's fine airport, brushed by a few of America's finest citizens and got in line for a connection.

Bad news: we missed three connecting flights to Los Angeles. More bad news: There was no guarantee the next flight, in two hours, would have room for us. But they did say they could get us on a 4:30 p.m. flight, which would get us to L.A. at about 4 a.m. EST.

Good news: since we asked for compensation, Continental Airlines was prepared to give us food vouchers for lunch, a $9.95 value. I felt that while the offer was generous, we had been sitting in a bus for three hours, cutting through the better parts of the Bronx, and I tried to get an automatic upgrade on the flight back. It worked.

Now all we had to do was get on the next plane.

On our way — or are we? We found out we could get on the next plane, but that one had problems as well. It took a good 20 minutes for something to get fixed and for us to get off the ground, and we had another layover. In Houston. For two hours.

At this time, I pretty much kissed my column good–bye for Friday, gawked at the Texans and bought a beer. It was 8 p.m. local time by now, and we were about to board the same plane that we landed in Houston on.

Third time's the charm. How does the same plane, by sitting for two hours on a runway, suddenly develop pressurized cabin problems which keep us stranded for another delay? I don't understand airplanes, never have, but this nightmare coast–to–coast trip seemed to baffle all laws of physics.

All hotel shuttle buses are not alike. We took a bus that took us to a chain hotel in El Segundo instead of Marina del Ray. Not a West Coast expert, I normally would not care whether I was in El Segundo or Marina del Ray, but I did want a hotel room. I got one after another hour.

We arrived at our hotel at 1 a.m. EST, 21 hours after we embarked on our journey. We were supposed to arrive in L.A. in time for lunch.

If you keep these travel hints in mind, you may be able to survive when your 7–hour trip turns into a 21–hour nightmare. It could've been worse. I could've left my wallet in El Segundo.

Letters to the Editor

'Psycho–garbage' not an explanation

To the editor:

I am writing in response to a column written by Michael Einhorn ["John Chaney not a monster," Collegian, Feb. 25]. Mr. Einhorn's topic was that John Chaney is not a monster. On this point I would like to agree.

But Mr. Einhorn's rhetoric in regards to Chaney being portrayed as "evil" is, at the least, a little enthusiastic. Mr. Einhorn then goes on to make his boldest statement. He says that characterizing Chaney as excessively violent is a way in which society is projecting their own "unspeakable evils."

My point is, stop the psycho–garbage and evaluate the situation for what it is. Chaney acted immaturely when he rampaged into that press conference and pushed Mike Williams in the face. Coach Chaney also pushed John Calipari a few years ago at another game. Mr. Einhorn fails to state this in his "society at fault" article.

No, John Chaney is not the great Satan, and I don't seriously think that there is much of a consensus belief that he is. I also don't think that anybody is using Chaney as a scapegoat for their own imperfections. People who have criticized him are just holding him accountable for his own. Also, the reporting of Chaney's own "inner evil," and subsequent recognition of it, says nothing about the readers of those criticisms.

Unfortunately, Mr. Einhorn's view is not atypical, it is reflective of a larger way of recognizing problems which is to take the blame of someone else's doing of it and place it on society. As to Mr. Einhorn's Psychology 101 analysis of all of us who think that John Chaney is not the classiest guy — please give us a break! As Sigmund Freud said, "Sometimes a cigar is just a cigar."

Joke in sports quote no laughing matter

To the editor:

Every time that I think that the Collegian cannot sink to a new low, I am proven wrong. The case in point is a "Say What?" quote that appeared on the sports page on Friday, Feb. 11, and was attributed to an anonymous student waiting in line for Temple tickets. The quote read, "I'd give Coach Cal my girlfriend for some tickets."

He may have been "just joking" and probably "didn't mean anything by it." But consider the following:

Would he have given himself to Coach Cal for the same price? What makes him think that this woman would accept being bartered away, even if UMass plays the Dream Team? On a more pragmatic level, does he really think that Coach Cal would risk his job and that big fat paycheck we give him for the pleasure of this woman's company? If UMass had lost to Temple (Heaven forbid!), was he likely to take his anger out on his girlfriend?

This statement, while apparently very funny, carries a lot of weight. My intention is not to place limits on speech; I suppose anyone is entitled to demonstrate one's stupidity, lack of sensitivity and values, and eagerness to engage in pimping in any way one sees fit. What troubles me, but perhaps I should be used to by now, is that the Collegian would perpetuate such harmful views of women being property by printing it.

I only hope that the woman in question is aware that she is considered property, dumps this loser and finds someone who values her as a human being.

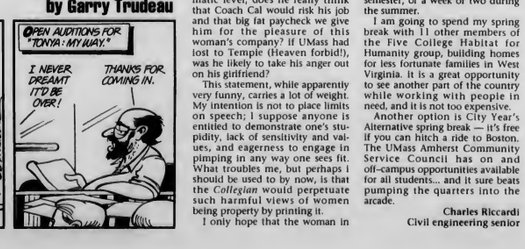
Suggests ways to spend spring break

To the editor:

Hey, Andrew Bryce, I have a couple of ideas for spring break. In your column ["Looking forward to break," Collegian, Feb. 23], you were trying to come up with some ideas for a low–budget spring break that wouldn't be a waste of time. Have you thought about community service? Many groups on and off campus need volunteers to help with various projects; you could help them make a difference in the community, while they help add an interesting and fun twist to your spring break.

As most graduates know, when you go to look for a job these days, you can't get one without experience, and you can't get experience without a job, right? Wrong! Community service programs offer you valuable experience. When you volunteer, you are not just helping other people, you are gaining the skills that employers want.



So how much will this valuable experience cost you? It doesn't have to cost you a dime! Just a little time — one spring break, or a few hours per week during the semester, or a week or two during the summer.

I am going to spend my spring break with 11 other members of the Five College Habitat for Humanity group, building homes for less fortunate families in West Virginia. It is a great opportunity to see another part of the country while working with people in need, and it is not too expensive.

Another option is City Year's Alternative spring break — it's free if you can hitch a ride to Boston. The UMass Amherst Community Service Council has on and off–campus opportunities available for all students... and it sure beats pumping the quarters into the arcade.

The Far Side By Gary Larson

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Seize an opportunity to improve your position at work. An important domestic decision may have to wait a bit longer. Be tactful when trying to persuade people to do your bidding.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Travel plans are the green light. A pass to be flexible when making airline reservations. A temporary cash shortage may lead you to draw on your reserves. Curb an urge to splurge tonight.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Go back to some old creative ideas and revive them, they could prove very profitable. You may want more independence in your private life. Stay in shape and you will feel better.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Being more realistic about your goals will put a relationship in proper perspective. Long–range career plans enjoy highly favorable influences. Look to a role model for inspiration.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Exceptional mental rapport will cement affectional ties. Your creative ideas make people sit up and take notice. Do not be afraid of change; it keeps things fresh and exciting! Crystal–ize partners.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Pace yourself and you will have enough energy to take care of all your projects. Be inventive when doing promotional work. Submit a manuscript for publication and see what happens. Banish self–doubts!

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Mingling with the right people will open up important doors. It is all right to be a bit unpredictable on occasion. Reawakening your work environment will boost everyone's spirits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Put on your thinking cap and you will come up with a lasting solution to a recurring problem. Your wit and wisdom are greatly admired by young people. Set a good example.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): A heavy workload could leave you weary. Take a five–minute break now and then. Your strong desire to do what is right serves you well. Keeping a secret is easier than expected.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Do not let vague fears lead to inactivity. Keep your eyes on the prize and you will reach a coveted goal. Good advice is worth its weight in gold. Be open to suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): A loved one may seem distant. Do not let this person's lack of enthusiasm throw you off–course. Your professional ship is very much afloat as you steer toward success and prestige.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): An authority figure could test your patience now. Stay calm in the face of a delay. Use of outside talent or resources will set things right. Balance your checkbook and limit spending.

Efforts to quell Arab anger are employed after massacre

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel's Cabinet ordered some Jewish extremists disarmed and up to 1,000 Palestinian prisoners freed in an effort Sunday to smother Arab fury over the Hebron mosque massacre. The violence did not abate. At least three Palestinians died as clashes between Arabs and Israeli troops spread across the occupied lands and the Jewish state itself, leaving the Middle East peace process still in jeopardy.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat dismissed the Israeli government crackdown on Jewish extremists opposed to peace talks as "hollow and superficial."

"These are empty decisions which have no relation with the seriousness of the crime or with the basis of resolving it," Arafat told The Associated Press at his headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia.

He charged Israeli troops were involved in the bloodbath at the mosque Friday, a claim Israel has denied. The government says a lone Jewish settler attacked the victims with an assault rifle while they prayed.

The Arab League voted Sunday night to ask the U.N. Security Council to investigate the massacre. Its 22 members urged the United States and Russia to provide protection for Palestinians in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

Arabs also played down the Cabinet's order for the release of Palestinian prisoners this week. Many of the inmates affected have served the bulk of their sentences and had been expected to be released next month as part of Israeli-PLO efforts to begin limited self-rule for Palestinians.

Despite criticisms of Israel's moves, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said he hoped talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization would resume.

"We expect that regardless of the tragic event that took place in Hebron on Friday, the Palestinians, the PLO, will ... realize that the only way to solve the problem is to accelerate the process, to find a solution," Rabin said at an international Jewish media conference.

In Tunis, Arafat assembled the PLO leadership Sunday to decide whether to respond to an invitation by President Clinton to resume peace talks in Washington on Wednesday. The Israelis have said they will go.

The Palestinians are demanding the removal of the 120,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, using the outcry over the massacre to force an issue Israel wants to defer until later in the peace process.

The army sealed off the occupied zones, with a population of 1 million Palestinians, for an indefinite period. Thousands of Arabs defied curfews to stone soldiers in rainswept streets and throw up barricades of burning tires.

The military said the operation launched late Saturday was to prevent Arab attacks in Israel and anti-Arab attacks by Israelis. But it blocked 80,000 Palestinians from their jobs in Israel. Hundreds of young people also rioted in Jaffa, Nazareth and other Arab towns inside Israel, setting vehicles on fire and blocking streets.

Thursday's win and despite yesterday's loss, have put themselves in an excellent position to win out the remainder of the season.

The win guaranteed Massachusetts the number one seed in the A-10 tourney, which means if they make it through the first two rounds in Philadelphia, the Minutemen will return to the William D. Mullins Center where their record is 17–0, for the championship game next Thursday.

Now the Minutemen have to rely on no one but themselves. A high seed in the East awaits Massachusetts should it win out. The number one seed traditionally goes to the Atlantic Coast Conference Champion and with both Duke and Carolina already ranked ahead of the Minutemen, it is unlikely they will leapfrog either team.

However, the Blue Devils and Tar Heels play this weekend before they begin play in the ACC tournament. Should the winner of that game lose in the tournament, Massachusetts is master of its own destiny and could possibly land the number one seed in the East.

The Minutemen are still in the catbird's seat. If they continue their strong play, they will force others — namely the tournament selection committee — to stand up and take notice.

The committee has treated Massachusetts rather kindly the past two years, rewarding the Minutemen with a number three seed in the East; if the Minutemen finish at 28–6, that trend should continue — unless they get snubbed.

Sean P. Hayden is a Collegian columnist.

Dare and Evans were too much; Evans, after an altercation with Williams in the first half which resulted in two technical fouls (one for each player), lit Massachusetts up in the second half, tallying all of his points (3–3 from three– point range, 7–9 from the field) to help bury the Minutemen for good.

"I tried to get involved in the offense, " said Evans. "The shots were there, so I just put them up."

"I would love to come back to the Mullins Center to play for the championship of the Atlantic 10, " said Jarvis, while Massachusetts won't have to return to D.C. again this season.

Minutemen fall to Colonials

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — You don't walk into someone else's home and leave with a victory very often, especially when it is Senior Day. After beating No. 8 Temple at McGonigie Hall last Thursday in the Owls' final home of the regular season, No. 11 Massachusetts failed to do the same in the nation's capital three days later, falling to George Washington 77–66 before a packed house in the Charles E. Smith Center.

ARAM CONKEN / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team were defeated by the George Washington Colonials 77–66 yesterday afternoon despite 18 points by sophomore Donta Bright (No. 4).

Sophomores Yinka Dare and Kwame Evans paced the Colonials (16–9, 8–7 in Atlantic 10) with 24 points apiece, avenging GW's last second defeat at the hands of the Minutemen in the William D. Mullins Center on Jan. 22.

"The Temple game drained us both mentally and physically," said Massachusetts coach John Calipari, "and we weren't able to do what we needed to do tonight [to win]."

Dare, a 7–foot–1 center from Nigeria, dominated Massachusetts in the paint, collecting a double–double (12 points, 11 rebounds) before halftime. He finished with 20 rebounds in 37 minutes of action.

In Dare's last three tries against the Minutemen, Massachusetts 7–foot–2–inch reserve center Jeff Meyer was able to combat his force inside by pushing him into foul trouble and into a seat on the Colonial bench — not yesterday.

GW's star, who has been up and down all year, averaging 15 points and 9.3 rebounds per game, started early, scoring six of the Colonial's first 11 points. Dare began the day matched up against Massachusetts freshman center Marcus Camby and, after the opening tip which Camby won, overpowered him on the blocks on GW's second offensive series, giving the Colonials a 5–4 lead.

Calipari turned to Meyer, who was hampered by a sprained ankle, with the Colonials ahead by one point, 7–6, and Dare had no trouble with him either, scoring once again on the blocks. Calipari was forced to put his star, Junior captain Lou Roe, on Dare, and on the next series, the defense proved fruitless: Dare got away from Roe on the baseline and jammed one home, giving GW an 11–9 lead, but more importantly sending a message that in this game, Dare would indeed be a factor.

"I knew [Dare] was going to have a good game tonight. He was ready for UMass," said GW coach Mike Jarvis.

"They are very physical, and tonight, we just outphysicalled them," Dare said.

With the loss, Massachusetts falls to 23–6 (13–2 in A–10) heading into a Senior Day of its own this Wednesday night in the Mullins Center when Duquesne comes to Amherst in the regular season finale.

The Minutemen trailed 26–21 at halftime, shooting a miserable 8–28 from the field (29 percent). Massachusetts started the second half with a scoring flurry from sophomore Donta Bright (18 points) and Roe (12 points) as the duo combined for the Minutemen's first 12 points. That was followed by two straight Mike Williams buckets, one a three–pointer.

Massachusetts faced one problem, though — it couldn't afford to trade baskets, which is exactly what the Minutemen did. GW matched every hoop by Bright, Roe and Williams; when the Williams' trey dropped in, the Minutemen trailed by more than they did at the half, 45–38.

They got snubbed

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The University of Massachusetts basketball team visited the White House Saturday for a tour of the Oval Office and a potential meeting with the President himself, but were told he was too busy — golfing.

The No. 11 Minutemen, who should be higher when the Associated Press Top 25 poll comes out today, have been getting the thumb to the nose quite often this season.

The Boston Globe and USA Today have the peculiar habit of putting Massachusetts' losses on the front page, but the victories somehow find their way to page eight.

Sean P. Hayden

They got snubbed by ESPN Thursday night after their first ever $1–$0 last–second win over No. 8 Temple in McGonigle Hall. The Total Sports Network hyped the game ever since L'affaire Chaney took place following Massachusetts' 56–55 win over the Owls Feb. 13, but deemed the exciting finish unworthy of any substantial coverage on SportsCenter.

They got snubbed by their own conference. Forget about the whole Calipari–Chaney–Bertovich thing. Through last week, only two Minutemen have been honored by the Atlantic 10 for their play — Lou Roe and Marcus Camby — on a team that has two losses in the conference and just made A–10 history by becoming the only team to win three consecutive regular season titles.

They got snubbed by the national media. The AP is constantly dropping the 23–6 Minutemen after tough losses, while keeping them pat after an undefeated week. In comparison, North Carolina (23–5), deemed the media darlings that they are, know that there is nothing they can do so horrific that they will fall out of the Top 5.

A road loss to Georgia Tech — forget about it. A home loss to Tech — don't worry about it, fellas. A loss to Clemson — it was an off night. Subpar performances against powerhouses Notre Dame and Florida State — we still love you, Deano.

Maybe the Minutemen have to beat a team of Carolina's caliber to finally earn some respect and attention.

They got snubbed by some major publications, like The Boston Globe and USA Today, who have the peculiar habit of putting Massachusetts' losses on the front pages of the sports section but the victories (and there are 23 of them) somehow find their way to page eight.

None of this matters, however, as the Minutemen, following

Player of the Game

Yinka Dare

Dare completely dominated the Massachusetts frontline throughout the game enroute to his 24 points and 20 rebounds. Marcus Camby, Jeff Meyer and Lou Roe were thrown in to stop the 7–foot–1–inch sophomore, but none were able to succeed. Dare shot 10–21 from the floor.

Why the Minutemen lost

Coming off a huge win at No. 8 Temple on Thursday, the Minutemen were outplayed by the George Washington Colonials on Sunday afternoon. The last time the two teams played, the Colonials led the whole game until a Marcus Camby dunk gave the Minutemen a win. Neither Camby nor any other UMass player could do the same yesterday afternoon at the Charles E. Smith Center.

Dare and Kwame Evans combined for 48 points and 27 rebounds as the Colonials out–rebounded the highly–touted Minutemen frontcourt 48–37.

Women fall short in D.C.

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, down by 16 at halftime, never got closer than eight the rest of the way and fell to Atlantic 10 rival George Washington, 70–53, Saturday at the Charles E. Smith Center.

The Minutewomen cut the GW lead to eight on three occasions and appeared ready to make a serious run, but each time the Colonial Women pounded the ball inside for an easy bucket to stop the momentum.

Massachusetts (11–11 overall, 5–7 in the A–10) was led by the double–double effort of sophomore center Melissa Gurile, who finished with game highs in points and rebounds (17 points, 12 boards). Freshman Tajama Abraham led GW with 15 points and 10 rebounds.

A 16–8 run to begin the second half helped the Minutewomen get to within 43–35 at 13:05 on a Kim Gregory lay–up, before a Martha Williams baseline turnaround pushed the lead back to 10.

Moments later, an Octavia Thomas (16 points) putback cut the deficit to eight again before two Darlene Saar (14 points, eight rebounds) buckets increased the GW lead to 12, 49–37, at 10:34.

Thomas spearheaded the Massachusetts run with six points, while freshman Crystal Carroll (eight points, 11 boards) chipped in with five.

"I was happy with Mel and Crystal in the second half," said Minutewomen Coach Joanie O'Brien. "I thought they played as hard as they've played in a long time and they did a lot of positive things."

Gurile scored the next 10 for Massachusetts (six from the charity stripe) to again cut the lead to eight, 55–47, on an offensive rebound and a putback with 5:24 left. But the Colonial women went on a 15–6 run to pull away at the end.

"There's no reason why we shouldn't have played that way in the first half," O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen played lackadaisical in the first half, with sloppy passes leading to nine turnovers and easy buckets for GW, who were up by as many as 19.

O'Brien said she was not pleased with the first half performance, particularly off the boards, as the Minutewomen failed to box out and were out–rebounded 22– 14 in the first half.

"First half, I think came down to the fact we didn't even come close to trying to box out," O'Brien said. "They got every rebound and (if) you give a team four shots, it's not hard to beat them.

"If we didn't give them easy buckets, who knows what would've happened."

The Minutewomen shot 30.5 percent from the field compared to the Colonial Women's 43.3 percent, and were upended at the free throw line as well (81.3 to 43.3).

Massachusetts continues its road trip tonight at conference leader Rutgers, who lost its first A–10 game Saturday at the hands of St. Joseph's, 78–71.

Hockey drops season finale to RIT Tigers

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Despite a valiant third–period effort, the University of Massachusetts hockey team lost its season finale Friday night at the William D. Mullins Center to the Rochester Institute of Technology, 5–3.

The Minutemen (20–9) sliced deficits of 3–0 and 4–1 due to a relentless offensive attack in the second half of the contest, but RIT held on to a 4–3 lead for the last seven minutes of the game and netted an empty net goal in the last minute.

It was obviously not the outcome UMass wanted.

"We've got our next game Nov. 11 (against Providence). We're gonna be saying 'RIT' every night until then," Captain Jaynen Rissling said.

Down 4–1 at the start of the third, the Minutemen played like the contest was the last of their lives, not the season. RIT, on the other hand, inexplicably began icing the puck and playing ultra–conservative.

Rissling beat goalie Derrick Barnett at 6:01 of the third on assists from Warren Norris and Rob Bonneau. The Mullins crowd of 3,120 was as loud as any the team has had this season.

Blair Manning made it a one–goal game when his shot from just inside the blue line tied up Barnett and made it 4– 3 with six and a half minutes left. UMass took its attack to another level for the game but couldn't break through.

With 1:04 left, UMass lost control, despite six attackers, when the puck danced over defenseman Brian Corcoran's stick on the left side. The Tigers' John Pallante took control and dumped the puck into the empty UMass net for the 5–3 final.

"I don't think they're a better club than we are; I know they're not," Steve Corradi said. "We came up a little short tonight but I think we're the better team."

Dave Kilduff came up big when he was in net for the Minutemen. He relieved Rich Moriarty halfway into the game and after allowing a goal on the first shot he faced, buckled down and turned away 16 shots in the last period.

"Coach [Joe] Mallen said there was a really good chance he'd split time with me and Rich but didn't give any guarantees," Kilduff said. "Rich was not the reason we lost tonight. How many posts did we hit? I can't remember hitting three this year."

After two periods, the Minutemen goalies had saved only six of 10 shots. Moriarty gave up goals to Andrew Sherman and Jason Wise in the first period, at 7:35 and 11:24, respectively, and Jay Murphy beat him on a rebound just 26 seconds into the second to put the visitors up 3–0.

"It would've been nice to win for myself and the program, but you can't sit around and think about that," said Corradi, the team's only senior who was honored before the game. "We've had the problem of starting slow quite a bit this year, but the team has definitely matured throughout the season."

The Minutemen finally woke up after the third RIT goal, with Norris taking a feed from Dennis Wright and scoring at 10:04 to shave the lead to 3–1.

Kilduff relieved Moriarty after the goal, a pre–arranged move by Mallen, and gave up a goal on a break–in slapper by Murphy in the last minute of the period to put RIT ahead 4–1. During the second intermission, the Minutemen calmly realized in the locker room that the effort was there but the results were not.

"We want UMass teams that work hard, that are going to compete and are going to hate losing," said Mallen. "I'm not ashamed or embarrassed; we played hard tonight. It was a do–or–die game for [RIT] and they knew that coming in.

"I think we're going to learn from this. But we took a group of hockey players nobody knew anything about, put them on the ice and won 20 games, more than any other UMass team. When they look back on this season a year from now, a day from now or 20 years from now, they're gonna know they put UMass hockey back on the map."

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts hockey team completed its season on a sour note, losing at home to Rochester Institute of Technology 5–3. The Minutemen finished the season at 20–9.

Israel calls for peace in Gaza

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel agreed Monday to disarm settlers in parts of the occupied lands as part of a concession package aimed at coaxing the PLO back to the peace talks following the mosque massacre, diplomats said.

Just hours after Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said he would allow international observers in parts of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, diplomats in Tunis, Tunisia, said Rabin also had agreed to other concessions.

Those included disarming some Jewish settlers and an expansion of the proposed Palestinian police force, the diplomats said, speaking on condition of anonymity. Disarming settlers and an expanded police force were both PLO demands.

However, Rabin rejected PLO demands to dismantle Jewish settlements in the occupied territories.

Spokesmen for Rabin and the Israeli Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem said Monday night they had no information on any package from Israel.

Two Palestinians were killed Monday in clashes with soldiers in the occupied territories, bringing the Arab death toll to 64 since a Jewish gunman opened fire Friday at worshipers in a mosque in Hebron, killing 39 men and boys.

Israel began cracking down on Jewish extremists Sunday and announced plans to release up to 1,000 Palestinian prisoners in the wake of the attack, which badly hurt the already faltering Middle East peace process.

But PLO chairman Yasser Arafat said those measures were not enough. He demanded all Jewish settlements be removed from the occupied territories.

Mideast peace talks in Washington were suspended Sunday after Syria, Lebanon and Jordan walked out in support of the PLO. The Israel-PLO autonomy accord was to take effect more than two months ago, beginning with Israel's withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and Jericho, but has been delayed because of disagreement over security matters.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Palestinian youths run away from Israeli security forces during clashes in the occupied West Bank town of Hebron, Monday. The disturbances followed the mosque massacre Friday which sparked clashes throughout Israel and the occupied territories.

In a speech Monday to Israel's parliament, Rabin entreated the PLO to be less adamant.

"We can see the finish line. Another effort, some more goodwill by you, the Palestinians, and by us, and we will win," he said. "There is no other way."

But he declared that Israel will make no compromises on its security, including the 120,000 Jewish settlers in the occupied lands.

Despite his tough line, some in his 14-member Cabinet indicated they were prepared to move on the settlements and crush the Jewish extremists.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres stressed the extremists "are capable of causing a horrendous catastrophe. Woe unto us if we don't deal with them now. Israel must search its soul and see what settlements are really needed."

Grant to help new company & technology

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Computer Science department helped develop the technology which enables computers to understand images. The research is being funded in part by President Clinton's Technology Reinvestment Program.

On Feb. 23, Clinton's TRP awarded a $9 million grant to a consortuim consisting of ACSIOM INC., a non–profit technology transfer agent for UMass, Amerinex Artificial Intelligence Inc. of Amherst, Mass., Hughes Research Labratories of Malibu California and CSPI of Billerca, Mass.

The University's Computer Science department has been working with Hughes and Amerinex on protypes of the new computer which was being funded by the Defense Department's Advanced Research Projects Agency.

The consortuim will match the grant with an investment of their own. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts will also contribute to the funding, which make the program worth more than $18 million.

The consortuim is planning to start a new company, based in Amherst, that will design a computer using technology developed by the Computer Science Department at UMass. The TRP grant enables the new company to build a low cost commercial version of the "seeing" computer for the use of civilian applications.

Delay expected for Farrakhan speech

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

When Khalid Abdul Muhammad spoke at Kent State in Ohio last month, the program was delayed one hour and fifteen minutes because of metal detectors coupled with the complications of 3,000 people trying to squeeze into a 1,000 capacity ballroom.

The expected delay for the Louis Farrakhan speech is about the same, and strict security measures are on hand for the minister's visit on March 9 in the Fine Arts Center to avoid delays and problems.

The Fine Arts Center will open at 5:30 p.m. People attending the lecture will be subject to metal detectors and search by University of Massachusetts Public Safety Officials. Recorders of any kind and cameras are prohibited, except for approved media. Microphones are also prohibited.

Farrakhan will be bringing his own security force with him called "The Fruit of Islam" that consists of his own personal body guards.

All protestors will be restricted to a designated area adjacent to the reflecting pools at Haigis Mall and will be videotaped by police. Protestors who do not stay within the marked area may be charged with trespassing.

Tickets went on sale Feb. 23 at the Fine Arts Center box office. Tickets are $7 for students and $5 for a student ID is required. There is a limit of four tickets per student, and general public seating will go on sale March 2.

Farrakhan was invited to speak at UMass by the Black Student Union and Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity. Farrakhan's visit will cost $15,000 for a speaker's fee, and $5,000 for his security organization. Another $5,000 is being used for University of Massachusetts police security and other expenses.

The University of Massachusetts News Office refused comment on extra security precautions for what was described as "security reasons."

Farrakhan, who was recently chastised by the local branch of the NAACP for supporting anti-semitic remarks made by top aide Khalid Abdul Muhammad, has been in the national spotlight a lot recently, including the cover of last week's Time magazine and a guest appearance on "The Arsenio Hall Show".

SGA candidates facing the issues

•Vozza hopes to inform students

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Junior Joseph Vozza will take the experience he has gained as president of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity and as president of the Interfraternity Council to help build the University from the "ground up" if he is elected president of the Student Government Association, according to the candidate.

Vozza said the University is full of resources that most students do not take advantage of. He said as president, he would educate students about the options offered at UMass.

"Most students don't understand how many resources there are at the University, there are people who don't know what the SGA is," Vozza said. "Does everyone know how to use the tools at the Mather Career Center? Students should be educated about all of the tools on campus. It's not their fault, because no one has ever taught them."

Vozza said freshman orientation should be used as a time to educate incoming students about all of the different groups and services the campus has to offer. He said students who get involved with campus activities get much more out of their time at UMass.

"If students take advantage of the opportunities at UMass then it will make the University a better place and students would get a lot more out of their college experience," he said.

Arresting tuition and fee hikes is another one of Vozza's priorities. He said he plans to continue the fight for increased public funding for the University and for a zero percent tuition and fee increase that has started with the current leadership of the SGA.

"Tuition and fees have increased 167 percent since 1988, but the quality of the University has not increased that much," Vozza said. "We have to lobby the state legislature and continue the campaign that has been started."

Vozza said a number of students have told him they are unsatisfied with campus housing. He said he will work with students and the Administration to find ways to improve Housing Services.

"It seems like a lot of students are not happy with the housing facilities. I am going to find out what students want done, and I am going to talk with Housing Services," he said. "Housing Services wants to help us. And once we establish a good working relationship between students and the Administration we can start to improve the housing conditions."

Vozza said his experience combined with his desire to serve the students makes him strong a candidate for SGA president.

"I want to use my knowledge and my experience to help other students," he said. "There are so many problems in the University that really need to be addressed."

•Bearse sees problems, aims high

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Junior Jamie D. Bearse is fed up with the conditions here at the University of Massachusetts, and that is why he said he is running for president of the Student Government Association.

Bearse said because he lives in a dormitory, he sees the problems UMass students face first–hand.

"There are so many things that still need to be looked at," Bearse said. "I am the only one of the five candidates [for president] that sees the problems that everyone has to deal with, from the horrible food to the broken shower head when you wake up in the morning."

Bearse said the University should offer students an on– campus ambulance to transfer students to Health Services just as it offers an escort service.

"North Adams is a much smaller school but they have an on–campus ambulance," he said. "What if somebody slips on the ice in Southwest and breaks a leg, how are they going to get to Health Services? It costs $200 to get a town ambulance."

Making the University more handicapped accessible is another issue Bearse plans to accomplish if elected.

"There are only four dorms on campus that are fully handicapped accessible. And in one of them, Brooks, [in Central] handicapped women can't take a shower. They have to go to Brett to take their showers," Bearse said. "I'd like to invite Chancellor [David] Scott to get in a wheel chair and see how easy it is for handicapped people to get around campus."

Bearse said he plans to form a committee with the SGA president and the residential area governments so that the area governments will be more effective.

"We need to form a committee to bridge the gap between the area governments and the SGA, there is a pretty huge one right now," he said. "Some senators would rather ignore area governments, but I think they can still be useful."

Bearse also said Housing Services should realize students of all ages drink alcohol and smoke marijuana. He said as long as students who do these things are not injuring others, the Administration should focus on preventing violent behavior and vandalism on campus. He said the cracking down on marijuana users only creates undue tension in the dormitories.

Bearse said all five candidates agree on what the problems with UMass are, but he said he is the only candidate who is offering solutions to these problems.

"Many of the candidates say whoever you elect is going to work on Health Services or the food or housing, but they don't go into specifics on what the problems are because they don't know about them because they don't live on campus" he said.

Farrakhan remarks spark debate

Claims black and white leaders united against him

By PAUL A. DRISCOLL
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan blamed Jews for Christ's death and said Sunday that white people were created by God for a special, evil purpose.

Farrakhan also attacked leaders, black and white, who had sided against him in his recent battles with the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, a group that monitors anti-Semitism.

"This is an attempt to unite all of America against the Nation of Islam and Louis Farrakhan," he told about 14,000 followers at a Savior's Day celebration honoring the birthday of the founder of the Nation of Islam.

Earlier Sunday, in an appearance on "Lead Story," a news program on Black Entertainment Television, the ADL's national director, Abraham Foxman, said his group is not out to destroy Farrakhan, but added, "We will not sit together with a bigot to fight bigotry."

Farrakhan is slated to participate for the first time with mainstream black activists at the NAACP's proposed national summit of black leaders. He said, however, that he has no interest in working with other black leaders if it means pulling his punches. "These demons like to throw stones then hide their hands," he said. "If I have to compromise the truth for your friendship, then to hell with you."

Whites, Farrakhan said, were created by God for an evil purpose - to torment blacks.

"Your history is written in the blood of the human family," he said of whites. "It comes out of you like a web comes out of a spider."

"Like a refiner's fire, it gets us ready to meet with God," he said.

Farrakhan drew his most enthusiastic cheers when he spoke of the debt he said whites owe blacks.

"White people, you are made in our image," he said. "Out of us you've come ... .

"We are your fathers, and we are your mothers, and you should honor your fathers and mothers."

Of Jews, Farrakhan said they trumped up lies and killed Jesus. He belittled people who buy Christmas trees and Christmas presents, saying much of the money goes to Jewish merchants.

"Right to this day they don't believe in Jesus, but you believe in them," he said.

In 1992, the Roman Catholic Church unveiled a new catechism encoding a 30-year-old decision by the Vatican II Council that absolved Jews of blame for the crucifixion of Jesus, a teaching that spread virulent anti-Semitism.

Farrakhan said his ministry is not one of hatred or bigotry, but one of love. He pointed to the work the Nation of Islam has done reforming convicts, drunks, drug addicts and others.

Foxman praised the Nation of Islam's efforts to combat crime and drug abuse.

But he asked: "How does it serve his purpose to achieve these goals by scapegoating Jews?"

named, should be in place by the summer," said Charles Weems, professor in the Computer Science department. "Manufacturing of the computers will start roughly in two years."

The new company will produce a computer system which brings the sense of sight to robots and computers. The new computer will be used in many different areas, including as medical diagnostic instruments, robotic assembly, automobile collision avoidance.

"We are working on software for machines that understand images and pictures and can interpret or tell what is in them," said Allen Hanson the Associate Director of the Computer Vision Lab.

The University's Computer Research group developed the design for a computer for Image Understanding Architecture. The Computer Visions Lab is developing the software.

"The computer can be used in cancer treatment," Weems said. "If a person has lung cancer, when they undergo radiation therapy doctors have to radiate a large portion of the lungs, which can do damage. The new computer can position the tumor and follow it as the person breathes, causing less damage to the lungs."

Evening discussion aims to curb stereotype

In order to dispel what they see as inaccurate associations between al-Islam and Louis Farrakhan's Nation of Islam, the Muslim Students Association is coordinating a discussion tonight in Campus Center room 168C at 7:30.

"The media uses the word 'islam' a lot, and it can get really confusing," said Khaleelah Abdul-Kareem, tonight's guest speaker, who, as a UMass student, was an advisor for the MSA in 1990 and '91.

According to Abdul-Kareem, this evening's discussion is intended to curb the stereotyping of Muslims that can stem from such confusion.

To Abdul Kanaan, the vice president of the MSA, it is important that people do not associate al-Islam with Farrakhan or his religion.

"We are not co-sponsors of Minister Farrakhan's [UMass visit], and his teaching does not represent al-islam," he said.

UMass grad remembered fondly

By GERI SAHN
and TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Joanna D. "Jody" Gabin was described by a friend as "a unique person with lots of interests."

Gabin, 23, a former University of Massachusetts student, died yesterday morning at the Seacoast Nursing and Retirement Center in Gloucester, after a long illness.

Gabin, an English major, held many positions at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian during her time at UMass. She was an arts and living editor, copy editor and managing editor.

"She loved to be around people and she used the Collegian as a vehicle to be around people," said Meredith O'Brien, former editor-in-chief of the Collegian. "She viewed the Collegian people as family."

According to O'Brien, her interests ranged from movies to alternative rock bands to television. She was an avid "Twin Peaks" fan and got everyone at the Collegian into the show.

"She did a lot of work for the arts and living desk," O'Brien said.

Gayle Long, another colleague of Gabin's, said she was definitely someone who loved to be at the Collegian.

"You really liked knowing you'd see her there," Long said.

Dan Wetzel, currently a student at the University, was associate sports editor when he knew Gabin. He said he learned a lot from her.

"She was someone who gave everything to the Collegian," Wetzel said. "Undoubtedly she was a motivation."

He said she was a reminder of what it's all about and used the Collegian as her education, as opposed to relying on academics.

She attended the University until December of 1992.

Gabin worked at the Daily Hampshire Gazette as a news reporter from 1991-1993.

Steve Szkotak, the region editor at the Daily Hampshire Gazette, said Gabin was an "incredibly talented, surprisingly good, young journalist."

"Jody was a wonderfully vivacious person and truly loved by everyone in the newsroom. Everyone was charmed by her presence. She moved around the newsroom and got to know and worked with the many other editors," Szkotak said.

"She was very dynamic and open. She'd talk to anybody — it was a real shock for a lot of people from the newsroom," said E. Douglass Banks, a colleague from the Gazette who became a correspondent at the same time as Gabin.

She was also an editorial assistant for the Off Campus magazine and an office manager for the Amherst Bulletin.

Between 1990-1991 Gabin was a promotions/editorial assistant for Musician Magazine in Gloucester and also worked as a marketing/promotions assistant at WFNX-FM in Lynn. She was also a promotions assistant for Rykodisc in Salem.

Gabin was from Rockport and is survived by her parents, Eilen and George, and two sisters, Nancy and Carol.

A private graveside service will be held in Beach Grove Cemetery in Rockport and, in lieu of flowers, contributions can be made in her memory to the Hospice of North Shore, Inc., 10 Elm Street, Danvers, Mass. 01923.

Natural nuts & organic oils

Amherst shop sells myriad of earth-friendly products

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

Rainforests worldwide are disappearing at an alarming rate. In response to this environmental threat, two local businesswomen are trying to help prevent further destruction.

Barbara Bandy and Edwina Sperling are co-owners of Bandywinkle, a store located in the Carriage Shops in Amherst that sell a myriad of environmentally safe products ranging from cosmetics, to t-shirts, to chocolates, to theraputic natural oils.

For Bandy and Sperling, who have been friends since childhood, the opening of the store last October was a decision stemming from concern for the welfare of the planet.

"Both Edwina and I had been concerned about the state of the environment for a number of years," said Bandy.

"There's nothing wrong with making a profit, but why not do it in an eco-friendly way."

Many of the products sold in the store, which donates 10 percent of its profits to environmental organizations, contain ingredients such as oils and nuts which can be harvested from rainforests without damaging the forests themselves.

One such product is "Rainforest Crunch" candy, which contains nuts grown naturally in the rainforest.

None of the cosmetics sold in the store are tested on animals or contain any animal products.

Another product sold in the store are t-shirts manufactured by the "One Planet" company, which buys 50 square feet of rainforest for the purpose of conservation every time that one of its t-shirts are sold.

Bandy and Sperling both feel that responsibility for the environment rests with both the government and industry. Both women also believe that the issue deserves immediate attention.

"If we don't make this our top priority, we will see the results. I know that the spirit of man has the capability, but there is not the political will to address the issues. It has to start with the individual telling the government that this is what we want," said Bandy.

An increase in awareness regarding environmental issues is necessary, according to Sperling.

"There's not enough information in the media because someone's making money by not having it appear," said Sperling.

Environmentalism is nothing new for Bandy or Sperling. In 1988, along with her late husband, Bandy helped to sponsor and organize the "Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders for Human Survival" in Oxford, England. The forum has met subsequently in Moscow, Tokyo and Rio de Jeniero at the "Earth Summit" in 1992.

Bandy and Sperling felt that the diversity of the Amherst area and the size of UMass made the Amherst area an ideal location for a store appealing to environmentally-oriented consumers.

"We're trying to create a concept that would fit a niche that had not been filled. We picked this town with the UMass population being as big as it is," said Bandy.

Hijackers force landing in Spain

By CIARAN GILES
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Three Algerian policemen hijacked a domestic flight with 131 people aboard Monday and forced it to land in southern Spain. They surrendered hours later, but were denied political asylum.

It wasn't clear whether the hijackers were fleeing political violence in Algeria, where Muslim radicals have targeted soldiers, police, intellectuals and foreigners in a two-year campaign against the army-backed regime.

The Air Algerie plane was en route from Oran, in western Algeria, to Annaba, near the Tunisian border, when the three forced the crew to divert the jet across the Mediterranean to the southern Spanish town of Alicante, authorities said.

The Boeing 727, carrying 124 passengers and seven crew members, landed without seeking permission from air traffic controllers, and paramilitary Civil Guards surrounded it, authorities said.

The hijackers released eight women, two men and two children unharmed, then surrendered several hours later.

The hijackers carried handguns throughout the five-hour ordeal that was prolonged by language problems between Spanish negotiators and the Arabic-and French-speaking hijackers.

Opinion

A different version of war

Andrew Davidson

When I heard over the radio that Clinton finally decided to strike Bosnian planes, it made me think about the impact war has played on civilization. War has a long and storied history.

The American Civil War exacerbated the distinction between the North and the South. The brutal civil war in Bosnia has destroyed the masterful mix of cultures that Tito orchestrated in the mid-1940s.

War has also brought countries together. After Napoleon ravaged Western Europe and Russia, the Congress of Vienna in 1815 created a balance of power in Europe which lasted until the start of the first World War. The collective mobilization during World War II is what brought our country out of the worst economic slowdown we have ever seen.

War has also evolved over time. The first wars were fought by slaves and mercenaries hired by princes who fought almost exclusively for territory. With the advent of alliances, war became increasingly political. Conflicts became not a matter of direct national interests but of long- term security. When the French developed conscription, war became an increasingly patriotic issue. Soldiers were no longer drawn from the ranks of mercenaries but instead were the sons of citizens of a country. People's interest in the conflicts became much more acute when they knew that their sons' lives would be at stake.

War affects a country's spirit and character. The 1950s were so radically different from today partly because such a large number of people had just returned from military service. The structure of the military fosters a cooperative attitude and was responsible for the political consensus that Dwight Eisenhower enjoyed through much of the decade. When else has someone like Adlai Stevenson been considered a radical? The reason for the recent attention to the Korean peninsula is that the North Koreans have been born and raised on war.

When I look back to January 1991 I am amazed at how much uproar was created over Desert Storm, which is a drop in the bucket compared to mobilizations throughout history.

The last full-scale mobilization, something we could call a war, not just an "armed conflict" or a "skirmish", was the Vietnam war, from which we officially detached ourselves in 1975. The United States has not sent soldiers against its will to any armed conflicts since then.

There is little question that the draft is over as we know it. We as a nation have evolved to the point where compulsory military service is a thing of the past. We have become pacified, detached from the concept of war. Why is this? As Americans, we are now above the barbaric practice of war. We have much better ways of settling our conflicts.

When Japan refuses to let us pry open its consumer markets, Bill Clinton responds with a retaliatory cannon shot of trade sanctions. When we have national security problems nowadays, they concern not our military security but our economic security. Our new wars are trade wars, and our tariffs are our tanks.

But is this really a step forward? The editors of the New Republic have noticed a problem with our new type of foreign policy. "This administration is transforming the only superpower in the world into the only abdicating superpower. Poor Bosnia, it should have found itself in a trade war. Trade wars we fight. Wars of genocide we watch."

What this type of thinking fails to take into account is that the pacification of this country is not something that can be simply pinned on the current administration. This country has been moving toward more peaceful settlements of its international goals for almost a generation. Finding more concrete solutions to international crises requires a more stern sense of national character.

The reason we are moving away from the mentality of conflict is that we shun the travesties that wars create. But when an economic sanction leads to massive starvation in Cuba or Haiti, we must analyze what it is we are giving up and what we are gaining with pacification. Only when these questions are confronted can we truly have a sensible foreign policy agenda.

Where are family values?

Problems, problems, problems. There seems to be a problem for every problem. You turn on the news and you see the same, sad stories. You read the newspaper and the headlines never cease to shock us. Is it because the media magnifies its stories? Of course not! If society wasn't so bad, then there wouldn't be anything bad to report. But this is not my point.

My point is, most of society's problems stem from the gradual decay of family values. Family values? Where have I heard that before? Well, it may sound familiar because it was George Bush's slogan during his 1992 presidential campaign against Bill Clinton. It's a shame that Bush's "family values" didn't get much respect.

David Chan

Whatever happened to the basic family? People always talk about how great the 1950s were. Well, the '50s were better because families weren't as screwed up as they are now. Just look at the shows and movies that were played during the '50s and compare them to today's. There's a big difference.

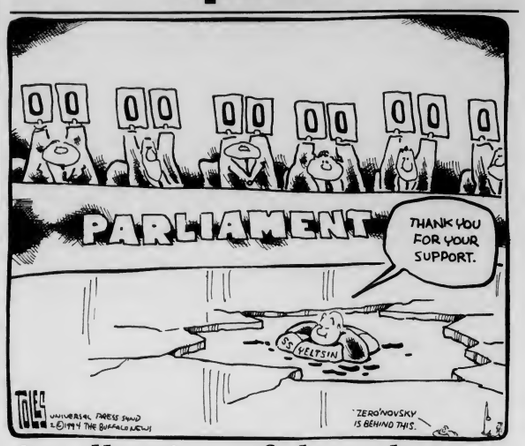
Now, don't think that I'm blaming society's problems on television sitcoms (like what Dan Quayle did with Murphy Brown). Today's sitcoms are merely representing (with a little exaggeration) today's society. What I'm getting at is that the basic family is breaking down. Families are not the same as they used to be — and it's a problem.

The decay of family values has led to the improper upbringing of America's young children. Kids are simply not brought up the way they used to be. Children always had someone at home (usually their mother) to take care of them. Today, children usually go home after school to an empty house, or are sent to babysitters or day care centers. Don't parents want the best for their children? Children want their family; they need a happy home. Take it from me because I'm speaking from experience.

I used to go to babysitters when I was between the ages of three and five. I stopped going because I started school. I was miserable during those babysitter years. I went through about 10 different babysitters and I won't even go into what they taught me and what they did to me — I'd probably make my mother cry. I'm not saying that all babysitters are bad, it's just that children want to be with their family.

Young children have to be properly taught by their family. Parents have to be there for their children's needs. If this was so, maybe society wouldn't be as awful as it is now. Teen pregnancy, drug abuse, and gang violence are as high as they've ever been. Kids shouldn't turn to street gangs to feel secure and tough.

My friends and I got jumped by a street gang once. They had their guns, knives, chains, etc. They even called themselves the "Bulls gang." I'm sure Michael Jordan must have been proud. I've never seen a more pathetic bunch of losers — It was really sad. The whole institution of a "street gang" is just a way of covering these kids' low self-esteem. They wind up contributing to street violence, drugs and teen homicides. It's hard to imagine that gangs were practically non-existant a few decades ago.



Divorces and single parenting creates more problems for the family. If a mother has to single-handedly raise her children, she has to work and sacrifice time which should be spent with her kids. Deadbeat dads are another problem. Kids need their parents to be there for them, otherwise they will seek alternatives. Unfortunately, they are usually negative alternatives. Someone has to be there for the kids, whether it's the mother or the father.

Now I know life isn't a bowl of cherries. I also know that the Brady Bunch isn't for real. But things today can be better, because things were better. Families just have to try harder. If both the parents are going to work, then they should examine themselves before having children. Ask questions like, who's going to take care of the kids? Are we going to be there to provide for them? Are we going to raise them properly?

Do you remember the scene in the movie Boyz N The Hood when Doughboy picked up the crack addict's little kid from where he was sitting in the street? Do you remember what Doughboy said to the kid's mother? He said, "Keep your damn babies off the street!"

Children are our most precious commodity, and they should be treated that way. Before blaming the youth for today's problems, why not take a look at where those problems are coming from first?

A collection of thoughts

Martin Brown

This column is going to be a medley of thoughts on a bunch of different subjects that I've been thinking about lately. Some are opinions, some are just funny anecdotes.

Why do I always seem to sit near someone who can't keep his/her mouth shut at the movies? It never fails — I saw In the Name of the Father (good flic!) and some guy in the row behind me gave his loud commentary on how the Daniel Day-Lewis character was treated unfairly; like we couldn't come to that conclusion ourselves. I guess my suggestion would be to turn around and give him a look like you were a disenchanted postal worker, it usually works.

On a totally different note, have you ever wondered what it would be like if all your ex-girlfriends (or boyfriends) and people you dated were put in a room together to talk about you, how they would describe you? What they would say? I think it would be really interesting and probably pretty funny... Think about it.

By the way, is it just me, or does it bug you that there is no real word to describe a group of females? If a few males are sitting together you can just say, "What are you guys up to?" You can't really say, "What are you girls up to?" without sounding condescending.

I hate saying, "What are you ladies/women up to?" — It makes me feel like my parents. I guess I could say "What are y'all up to?", but then I feel like I should be wearing a cowboy hat or something. Then you could just go back to where I started and say, "What are you guys up to?", but some women get really offended by that. You can't win.

Here's some good simple advice — never mistake incompetence for malice. If you can realize this, it will make your stay at UMass less stressful.

I had a discussion with a friend of mine the other day. She put forth the proposition that positive thinking is the best way to motivate yourself. She's probably right, in that it's certainly the healthiest way, but I still think that pain is what motivates a lot of people. It has to do with harnessing your pain and mistakes into making yourself stronger. This reminds me of something I heard once... Two hundred years of war, plague and chaos in Italy created such greats as Michelangelo and Da Vinci... two hundred years of peace and brotherly love and the only thing to come out of Switzerland is the cococo clock.

Finally, last Thursday I wrote an article on the Words and Pictures museum in Northampton. To be honest, I wasn't very happy with it; I feel I really didn't convey my love for comic books very well (if at all). Well, this is my chance to make amends with that mistake. I would just like to point out to everyone that comics are not just for kids anymore.. I would like to go on the record as stating that certain comics are as good if not better than 99 percent of the normal books coming out now. We're talking masterpieces, folks.

Admittedly, 90 percent of comic books are crap, but when you think about it, 90 percent of almost anything is crap... TV, movies, and records. It's the 10 percent left that makes life worth living. Anyway, don't judge comics from what you remember as a kid, check out the latest art form to really emerge. Here's some titles to look for... The Watchmen, V for Vendetta, Violent Cases, Yummy Fur, and The Dark Knight Returns. In one of these titles there's sure to be something for you.

That's about it for this week, by the way, am I coming off like Larry King? I hope not!

Letters to the Editor

Says Mike Williams deserves spotlight

To the editor:

On Thursday night, two good coaches with evenly matched teams met in Philadelphia. Neither coach won the game. Mike Williams did. The way Mike won the game couldn't be coached. Once again, Mike Williams came through in the clutch.

It was just last fall when everyone from the coach to the media was calling Mike a "head case," and reporting that once again, Mike Williams was in the doghouse. Calipari said on the radio, "If Mike leaves, we'll win without him."

Well, without Mike, we didn't win the Cincinnati or Kentucky games. When Mike didn't have the ball in the final seconds, we didn't beat DePaul. Most likely, we wouldn't have won either Temple game, the George Washington game or the Atlantic 10 regular season championship without Mike.

Why was Mike in the doghouse? He had to come through in the clutch for academics. This time Mike Williams had to come through for himself. He was up late one night writing papers and there was an early practice. Mike stayed in bed. Coach, I might get hurt. Coach, I have to do what I came here for. "I had to go to the coach and clarify some things," is what he was quoted as saying.

I have known and worked with Mike for a long time. He has his own way of doing things and his own temperament. He will tell you no one kicked him in the butt more than me. We fought sometimes. We always had respect for each other, and that was never questioned.

I have heard many bad things said about Mike Williams. I am writing this to tell you Mike is not only a good ball player, he is a good person.

No fingers need to be pointed. It is nice to see that the situation between Williams and Calipari have been improved. Sometimes it takes time to work things out. We need to do a better job of bridging worlds up here at UMass.

UMass is paying for hate speech

To the editor:

I think that America is the best country in the world; only in this country do we as citizens have the right to vote, think freely and speak freely.

Now as many of you may know, our campus will soon be visited by Rev. Louis Farrakhan. He is the leader of the Islamic National Organization, and is said to be a very intense speaker. However, his name is also linked to the words "controversy" and "anti-Semitism."

As I am a practicing Jewish woman, I do have a personal problem with Mr. Farrakhan's anti-Semitic remarks. However, since the First Amendment is still in working order, he has the right to speak his mind freely. But, the issue of free speech is not what this letter is meant to address. What I have an even larger problem with is how Mr. Farrakhan is being brought here.

Two black interest groups are paying in part for Mr. Farrakhan's visit. The rest of his bill is being paid for by the Student Government Association (SGA) with the fees that the students at the University of Massachusetts pay each and every semester.

Considering the fact that a substantial part of Farrakhan's paycheck is being provided by the students themselves, I do not think that it is ethical that a man who is known to have anti-Semitic views be paid to speak at a university with such a large Jewish population.

Some people may say that if I don't want to be offended by his views, don't attend his performance. I will be more than happy to comply. But, as a Jewish student attending this University, I cannot sit by while the fees that my parents work so hard to pay are used to sponsor a speaker that I find personally offensive.

I think that it is the duty of the Jewish community at this University to voice our concerns to the SGA and Chancellor Scott on this issue before Mr. Farrakhan's visit.

Members of the SGA and the Chancellor himself have made many administrative decisions so far this semester, but this time I feel that they have made a grave mistake.

What do you think?

Rev. Louis Farrakhan will be speaking on the University of Massachusetts campus on March 9. Farrakhan, his aide Khallid Abdul Muhammed and the Nation of Islam have been the subject of intense media scrutiny for the past several weeks, from the cover of Time magazine to the Arsenio Hall show.

Members of the University community are encouraged to make their opinions known on this matter by writing short letters to the editor and sending them to the Opinion page at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass.

The first EZLN uprising... March 1993

We are doing well here. Helicopters come and go, they come close, they see us, they leave, they come back, and like that day and night. The mountain protects us, the mountain has been a comrade for many years now.

I would like to talk to you about some things that take place in these lands, that for sure will never be reported in newspapers and magazines.

And there is, believe me, a daily heroism that makes possible the existence of highlights, that from time to time, illuminate the apparent mediocrity of our national history. I have just met with some members of the Comite Clandestino Revolucionario Indigena.

They discussed how they are going to name the delegates for the coming dialogue with the Comisionado para la Paz y la Reconciliacion en Chiapas. They looked at some newspapers (old of course). The news and commentaries created diverse reactions in all of us.

Javier, a soft spoken Tzotzil that is always searching for the word of truth, read about what happened in Tlamanalco. Enraged, he came to me and said "We have to invite these people to come here."

I explained to him that we can't invite them, because they are part of a political party and we cannot intervene in the thinking of other political organizations, because this place is too far away, because they won't let them in here.

Javier awaits patiently for me to finish. Now he says very seriously: "I tell you, the people from the PRD." And he adds: "I tell you, the policemen that beat them."

Squatting he directs, sentences, mandates: "Invite these policemen to come here. Tell them that they can fight us. We will see if it's the same thing to hit innocent people and pacifists and to fight us. Tell them, write to them that we are going to teach them to respect the humble people."

Now Angel is here. His biggest prowess is to have read the entire Wormack book about Zapata ("It took me three years. I suffered but I finished it," he says when someone tries to cast a doubt on it). He comes to me with a journal in his left hand (in his right he's got an M-1 rifle).

"I don't understand the words of this man," he protests. "He uses hard words and you can't know his route. It seems like he understands our fight but it also seems like he doesn't understand our fight." I look at the paper and Angel signals the article of columnist "X."

I explain to him that this man says that it is true that there is poverty in Chiapas, but it is not possible that the indigenous people can prepare themselves so well, that they have a plan; that the indigenous people always rise without a plan, just like that, suddenly.

Angel starts to walk in circles. Infuriated, he can hardly speak in order, he rapidly mixes words in dialect and Spanish. "Why do they always look at us like small children?...Why do they think that we can't think for ourselves and at the same time have good thinking with a good plan and a good fight?"

Invite these policemen to come here. Tell them they can fight us. We will see if it's the same thing to hit innocent people and pacifists and to fight us.
Subc. Insurgent Marcos

We know both of us, Angel and me, that these and other questions will never be answered. "Is there intelligence only in the mind of the white man? Didn't our grandparents have a good thinking when they were alive?" Angel asks and asks, no one anwers, and no one will...

Susuna, a Tzotzil, is angry. For some time they had been making fun of her, because the others in the Commitee say she was responsible for the first EZLN uprising in March of 1993.

"I'm angry," she tells me. I'm protecting myself behind a rock while I try to find out what she means. "The comrades say that it was the uprising last year was my fault." I try to get closer. After some time I find out what it's all about: in March of 1993, the comrades were discusing what will later become "The Revolutionary Laws."

Susana had to travel to many communities to talk with groups of women and to extract from their thinking the "Women's Laws."

Susana was in charge of reading the proposals that embodied the thinking from thousands of indeginous women...."We don't want to be forced to marry someone we don't like. We want to have as many children as we want and we can take care of.

We want to have the right to hold a post in the community. We want the right to say what we please and this is respected. We want the right to study and even to be drivers." The "Women's" laws that Susana read signified, for the indigenous populations, a true revolution.

Towards midnight Pedro comes in. He sits by my side,"we have to go to Mexico....The Mexicans say that Chiapas is different from the rest, that Chiapas is doing poorly but that the rest of Mexico is doing well," he says. Pedro brings the newspaper and shows me the article saying that our struggle is destined to fail because it is not a national struggle.

"Their thinking is poor," he says, "Even poorer than us because we want justice but also liberty and democracy. They pity us." Pedro understands, I understand, the night understands..."The Mexicans can't understand. We have to go to Mexico," says Pedro.

Jewish Fundamentalism?

AP PHOTO

This is one of the only pictures of incidents occuring in Israel and the Occupied Territories available from the Associate Press today. As is often the case, the photographs depicted in the American media that come from this region are usually of Palestinians in uproar and violent situations. Unfortunately, we were unable to run a picture of the Israeli protestors mourning the death of Jewish terrorist, Dr. Baruch Goldstein, and calling for his death to be avenged.

Palestinians are not usually portrayed as victims of terrorism, although the United Nations has repeatedly ordered Israel to end its historically violent occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. Upon review of a brief historical survey published in last Saturday's New York Times, it is clear that Saturday's massacre is not an exception in terrorism by any means. Neither Muslims nor Jews have been historically exempt from the role of terrorist or victim.

For sheer equity, will the media now monolithically associate "Jewish fundamentalism" with the same kind of violence that is frequently associated with "Islamic fundamentalism?"

Future of Costa Rica discussed

Former president Carazo speaks on economic issues

By JUAN J. CHACON QUIROS and GLADYS McCORMICK
Collegian Staff

The following interview took place in San Jose, Costa Rica, during the month of January. Rodrigo Carazo was President of the Republic of Costa Rica between 1978 and 1982. He later became the President of the United Nations University for Peace.

What was the IMF version of adjustment used?

"The adjustment that I talk about, was to create a general impoverishment, not a selective empoverishment, which is what it is happening now. I was playing with a general impoverishment, thinking that the country as a whole could respond...but not to direct the economic recovery to a group of people. All the Structural Adjustment Programs of the IMF and the World Bank have the objective of resolving the problems using "human medicine." To resolve the production problems they wanted two things: money available for investment and people willing to take advantage of the economic activities. This can only be achieved by taking away from the people that eat and to give it to the people that invest.

"If I'm a big exporter, in addition to the money I make from exporting, they also give me a money rebate. Those rebates come from the national budget, but at the same time that they give me a rebate they say that we have to shrink the size of the government when that same rebate is part of the government. We are speaking in a language for idiots! The export rebate is not considered part of the government, when the government is the one paying for it and it's part of the size of the government. But the subsidized elementary school cafeteria is considered part of the government and they talk of the size of the government when the cafeteria gives a little nutrition to the children in need that attend school.

Therefore all we have lived during these years, is to talk about the crisis to reduce the size of the government. Reduce the size of the government through the reduction of the social programs. The social programs have been sacrificed and that's the reason for the increase in poverty in this country."

Did the development model fail?

"They say that the development model failed but, in fact, they tried to make it fail and it's so strong they haven't been able to kill it. The Costarican model of development took us out of the traditional poverty of Latin America. Costa Rica was a country with almost no social programs. The life expectancy was 43 years in 1940. Today it's 75 years. This little Costarican model, created in the 1940s, completely transformed Costa Rica to such extreme that a country without electrical power, no telephones, becomes what Costa Rica is today; we're still at a quite superior level. Did the Costarican model fail? No, they made it fail. The Costarican model was enough to build peace in this country, because before 1948 it was not in peace. This country began to be peaceful in 1948, after the abolishment of the Armed Forces. This country was transformed. It is very easy to forget!"

What about the economic crisis of the early '80s?

"The crisis of the '80s was confronted without blood, thanks to the institutional reserve that served as a cushion. This country has the potential to prosper but not to make some people prosper. That's why instead of looking for an adjustment in our own road, that perhaps could have been more painful but not as long. Look at all the people that have prospered with the Adjustment Programs — people that prospered at the expense of the majority of the people of Costa Rica. That is not adjustment, it can show up in the national accounts, in per capita income and in the number of poor people."

What do you think of the future of Costa Rica?

"We are setting the stage for a big problem like the one they have lived in Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela and now in Mexico. They are the microcosm proof of the IMF programs. Of course people get tired, they give them gifts so they can endure what they are doing to them. They give the loin to a few and the rest receive the bones. Costa Rica has a commodity that doesn't exist anywhere else in the world and that we are ruining. There is social peace in Costa Rica but the eruption is going to take place soon."

JUAN J. CHACON QUIROS/COLLEGIAN

Jose Maria Figueres was elected President of Costa Rica last February by a margin of only 30,000 votes. For many Costa Ricans, like this "campesino," the elections were another example of the lack of an alternative.

Ryder not enough to save Reality Bites

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

At the very heart of Reality Bites lies a tangled mass of contradictions. Here is a wholly commercial movie about a generation who shuns its own commercialization but embraces its pop culture past. Here is a generation who wants more than their parents, but doesn't want to sacrifice in order to get it. Here is a generation who wants all the trappings of adulthood without any of the real responsibilities. And here is a movie that wants all the glory of a generational pop culture tag, while appropriating romanticism leftover from '40s melodrama.

Got that? In shorter terms, the new Ben Stiller Generation X (oops, can't call them that; they don't like it) comedy is both a sly cinema mirror and a frustratingly conventional movie love story. Stiller has delivered a movie that not only validates a generation's collective narcissism but lets them eat their cake, too.

Lelaina Pierce (Winona Ryder) is a twentysomething college grad who has dreams of filmmaking glory. At the moment though, she's working as a production assistant to a boorish talk-show host (John Mahoney) and making a documentary on her friends. They include Vickie (Janeane Garofalo), a GAP salesclerk who is simultaneously celebrating her promotion to manager while sweating out the results of an AIDS test; Sam, a gay celibate who just kind of sits around; and Troy (Ethan Hawke), a slacker to the nth degree, garage-band member and general moocher.

Lelaina then meets Michael (Ben Stiller), a yuppie exec who works for in Your Face TV, an MTV-type cable channel who not only falls in love with her, but wants to air Lelaina's work on his network. Lelaina is now torn between the sweet-natured Michael and the stinging affections of best pal Troy, whose jealousy is hiding a desire to move past the platonic with Lelaina.

This love triangle eventually takes over, and in my opinion, ruins it. Stiller's Michael is a nice guy who not only loves Lelaina but also respects her. Even after her tapes get turned into a hideous "Real World"-esque sound bite on TV, Michael still wants to fight not only for Lelaina's work, but her trust and respect.

Hawke's Troy, on the other hand, is a perpetual user, a downright mean guy whose emotional immaturity stretches over the line to cruelty more than once. Troy's pointed sarcasm and crappy attitude is, of course, masking his own insecurities, but this doesn't excuse him from being a jerk the entire film. Even his pseudo-tearful confession scene is riddled with a dishonest undercurrent. He's a poster boy for all the terrible men that women constantly bitch about — but still continue to go out with. (This could possibly be attributed to Hawke's one-note performance; he may not have been good enough to show us shadings).

Written by 24-year-old Helen Childress, Reality Bites does capture the moment, if only in a superficial way. The characters are all searching for emotional and economic stability in a time that cannot offer it. In a way, the characters resent their generation because it cannot offer them the free love of the '60s or the material and economic wealth of the '70s and '80s. Payback is a bitch, life sucks, reality bites, we know, but at times, you just want to tell them to get over it and deal with it.

And yet, Reality Bites has its charms and small pleasures. There's a dead-on evaluation of "Melrose Place," securing its position in pop culture heaven, as well as some genuinely funny moments. But they're sparks in a film that ultimately fizzles out.

Winona Ryder is mostly excellent as Lelaina, although, like most of the characters, she's never more than the sum of her neuroses. While presented as intelligent, hard-working and talented, she throws this all away and falls for Troy, and even when Michael presents her with an opportunity to fight for her documentary, she instead chases after Troy.

The supporting cast does well, but I kept wishing Reality Bites would spend more time with these entertaining slackers, instead of a tired (and frustrating) love triangle. Janeane Garofalo's Vickie is a great character who, like Steve Zahn's Zack gets thrust into the background (when he comes out to everyone, it comes and goes out of nowhere).

As Lelaina's battling suitors, Ethan Hawke is just okay, as he remains a villain Ryder (as well as most of the audience) loves to love, while Stiller makes the most of a role that, in more conventional movies, would've made him out to be the bad guy. However, director Stiller leaves his own character hanging in a script already riddled with one too many loose ends.

Ultimately, the biggest theme in both Generation X and Reality Bites turns out to be its fatal flaw: a dependence on instant gratification. The characters chain smoke incessantly (there hasn't been this much smoke on the screen since The Towering Inferno), use casual sex as a brief respite from their own private nowheres, live off credit cards and pop culture as well as cling to each other as if trapped in collective state of fraternal fear.

in the end, Hawke and Ryder leave reality behind (because, you know, it like, bites), in favor of dewy-eyed romanticism. After all, this is a movie — and a Hollywood one at that — not the real world. in this way, Reality Bites is a comedy that evolves, no, stumbles into an acutely depressing commentary on a generation. While Reality Bites is labeled a comedy, i found it harder to shake off the sadness. C+ (Mountain Farms)

New talk show is Caleb's hope

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

I've been thinking about all the late night talk shows that are currently running, and how boring some of the guests are. If you are a good host, like David Letterman, or even a so-so host, like Jay Leno, the quality of the guests doesn't matter all that much. But I have to admit, if I were a talk show host, the guests would have to be pretty good, because I know I would be a sucky host.

So my idea for this week is this: If I had my very own late night talk show, who would I like to have for guests? I know you are all very curious, so here they are. The guests I would pick to interview on "Too Late with Caleb Cochran," coming soon to SCOLA.

My first guest on my premiere episode would have to be the ace of late night comedy, Chevy Chase. If he can do self-mocking Dorito's ads, he certainly has the time to stop over to UMass for an evening of grilling from yours truly. I think the guy is such a sport for having the sense of humor to suck it up and make fun of himself after the rapid demise of his awful show. I don't think Conan O' Brien would have the jewels to pull off a stunt like that. But then again, if Conan O' Brien was in a commercial, would half of America even know who he was?

The second guest I would have on would be former Boston Red Sox outfielder Phil Plantier. If I were Plantier, I would love the chance to blast the BoSox management for sending me off to San Diego in exchange for Jose Melendez. Who? Exactly. I would also love the chance to remind Red Sox fans that I cracked 34 home runs and drove in 100 runs last year while Melendez pitched how many innings? Zero? Exactly.

If Phil couldn't make it for some reason, I would invite my other favorite former Red Sox player, Ellis Burks. Not available? How about Brady Anderson?

I love Drew Barrymore, and I would love to have her on my new show. I mean, it is a pretty good story. She played the little cutie in E.T. at age eight, and did a pretty good job considering she was hammered the whole time. Oh, simmer down. I'm only joking. She didn't start drinking until she was 10.

Anyway, I've got some tough questions for her. I want to ask her if she really accepted a date with Billy Idol, for instance. I also want to compliment her on her work in those marvelous Guess? jeans ads. I think she would be a fun guest, and since she went on Conan's first show, I think it's only fair that she make an appearance on my debut. And just think, if she is dating Idol, maybe he can come on the show too. If I'm really lucky, he'll bust into that 80-minute version of "Flesh for Fantasy" that is found on Vital Idol.

Finally, since I don't have a band, I should at least have a musical guest. I know my show would be a big springboard for up-and-coming artists, so I think I'll invite South Carolina's favorite college band, Hootie and the Blowfish. Never heard of them? I hadn't either, until I spent a semester in South Carolina and was exposed to these guys first-hand. I got a chance to see them play when I was in Atlanta, and I was very impressed.

Apparently they recently signed a deal with Atlantic records, so they're on their way to big things. If you ever get the chance to see these guys, GO. In five years when they're a household name, remember, you read it here first.

Concert heats blustery night

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

Last Sunday night, the Smith College Chamber Orchestra performed its winter concert to a relatively small, but extremely receptive audience at Sweeney Concert Hall in Northampton.

On what began as a bone-chilling, blustery night, the music hall was filled with the soul warming tones of musical pieces selected from 17th century German and English composers. Entitled "Morning, Noon, and Night, ca. 1650; Through the day with Music and Poetry from the 17th Century," the musical program was intermingled with poetry readings from lead soprano Jane Bryden.

However, as the rhythm and feel of the orchestra began to take my thoughts away, the somewhat unemotional renditions of poems from English writer Robert Herrick came to me as slight interruptions through the course of the evening.

The vocal talent Bryden possesses came to light in pieces that showcased the pre-Scientific Revolution mindset of Lord and Christ shining. Also, the cohesion and power of the orchestra itself, under the direction of violinist Philipp Naegele, proved its eminence over other segments of the program.

Clinton plays funky show at FAC

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

What happens when you combine a guy in a diaper, a guitarist in a wedding dress, another guitarist in a full indian headdress, 15-plus various performers, a brass trio, the king of funk, a concert hall full of college students and a large variety of illegal substances? You get the Fine Arts Center all funked up.

On Friday night, George Clinton and the P-Funk All-Stars came to UMass FAC and jammed for four hours, lighting up the stage and the night with their own unique brand of funkiness and flavor.

Clinton, founder of Parliament, Parliament-Funkadelic and the current P-Funk All-Stars, is one of the fathers of the funk-rock movement. Funk is the art of combining different styles of music including Hendrix noise, classic rock guitar, rhythm, blues and jazz.

Even though the performance started a half hour late, the crowd was treated to what can only be described as an evening of the hottest jam of funk and rock in 15 years, when Clinton was here last.

The first half hour of the show was absent of any sign of George Clinton, and already the band proved that it believed in the theory that more bass and volume is better. The band kicked off the show with the ever-popular "Make my Funk the P-Funk," featuring the horn trio which consisted of a trumpet, sax and trombone. Clinton's entrance onstage was the highlight of the set.

While there was no real distinction between the different sets, Clinton and the All-Stars moved into a cool jam of "Rhythm and Rhyme" and the ever sampled "Give up the Funk."

The second half of the show began with a jam of "Sanctify My Love," and "Sentimental Journey," featuring the vocals of the only female singer in the All-Stars. They then moved into a slow jam of "Tear the Roof off the Sucker," and another jam of "Rhythm and Rhyme" featuring a member of the road crew.

The final part of the show consisted of "Starchild," better known as the sampled Snoop Doggy Dog version, "Let me ride," and featured again the incredible horn trio.

George Clinton and the P-Funk All-Stars funked up FAC and left UMass never the same. As one student commented, "If you've got funk, you've got style, and he had it tonight. It was just like a four hour wave of sound."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not count on things continuing the way they are. Your position could change suddenly. An optimistic approach helps you take things in stride. A dream could prove prophetic. Put romance on hold.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Activities conducted during early hours hold an element of risk. Be very careful with tools, weapons and appliances. Friends may drop in unexpectedly tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New developments in the career area give you a chance for advancement. Be alert for unexpected opportunities. Your willingness to help others will then problems turn into a new trend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Creative talent and specialized skills are always in demand. Emphasize your exposure to influential people. Original ideas developed now will prove highly profitable later on. Distant romantic events hold more interest than usual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Financial transactions are favored today. Stock up on necessities. Store owners should give serious thought to carrying new lines of merchandise. Do that extra mile to attract walk-in customers or clients.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep on schedule. There is a chance for delays. Money is abundant supposedly so. Even if you feel set for the future you owe time in a way that will bring honor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Both business and romance enjoy highly favorable vibrations. Long-range planning is essential. Balance your service to humanity with devotion to your family. Children need special guidance as well as financial support.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Jobs you handle alone should stand as shining examples of efficiency and ability. Develop your skills as a writer or public speaker if hoping to make it to the top. Be convincing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good evening to take care of odd jobs or balance your checkbook. Once you learn more about money management you can watch your assets grow. Romance has you floating on cloud nine. Ask questions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What to believe could be the big question today. If no satisfactory answer is forthcoming, take a wait-and-see approach. Regulate jobs as well as new projects should be pushed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When a job has an artistic angle you find it easier to tackle. Take greater pride in your accomplishments. Continued diligence on the work front will lead to fame or future. Believable your efforts!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Unexpected bills or obligations may leave you short of cash. Wait until tomorrow to try to retrieve what has been lost. Listening to others for input will help resolve your significant tonight.

DJ brings new show to WMUA

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Correspondent

On Sunday mornings between 10 a.m. and 12 p.m., WMUA blesses the airwaves with a radio show called "Zamir." Music of the Jewish diaspora is played, which mostly includes Israeli folk and contemporary. Loosely translated from Hebrew, Zamir is "a beautiful singing bird."

Charles Lenchner, Zamir's disc jockey, targets his show towards the "thousands of Jews, hundreds of Israelis" within the Pioneer Valley. Lenchner prides his show on being unique and as "the only Jewish radio show in the Valley. It's a good way of keeping our community together. It's also a good way to be in touch with back home," he added.

Lenchner mostly plays classical '70s music, which in Israel exists as pop. He claimed that this dated music sometimes makes it difficult to incorporate modern events to inform the viewing audience as to what's happening in Israel. He listed Arik Einstein, whose album is entitled Israel; The Good and The Old, as being what consistently gets him positive responses. This is a collection of classic poetry transposed into music. Other musicians featured include Corin Elal, Chava Albenshtein and Yehudit Ravitz.

"I would love to expand my show. I've considered bringing in guests or reading short articles from The Jerusalem Post [a prominent newspaper from the Israeli capital]," said Lenchner.

Lenchner stated that in comparison to American music, his selection is "almost a poppy-folk, but it is not considered to be so in Israel. I also play a lot of Yiddish music, which I can best describe as a mixture of dixieland jazz and religious Hasidic. It's very joyous," he said.

Lenchner commented that Hillel House has pledged $200 in support of his efforts. He plans to use this funding to help upgrade his collection.

"This show maintains a close relationship with Hillel House," asserted Lenchner. "It more so belongs to the Jewish Community than the DJ. It's targeted towards israelis and Jews in the area." Lenchner also said he's looking for some assistance running his show.

"We're always looking for DJs. Anyone who wants to work their up and get a good start, come on down," he said.

Hockey impresses in return

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

After 15 years in hibernation, ice hockey returned to the University of Massachusetts and its first season was bigger and better than ever before.

The Minutemen went 20–9 in their return campaign, playing a mixture of Division I, II and III teams.

Coach Joe Mallen was excited at his predominantly freshman team's first year's success.

"We met and exceeded our team goals in a very big way," said Mallen. "We've done absolutely over and above anything that I ever thought was possible. The amount of playing time these guys got as freshmen was much more than the average freshmen would get on a Hockey East team. We learned a million valuable lessons."

"Nobody would have thought 20 victories," said Athletic Director Bob Marcum. "They've carved themselves a special place in the history of UMass hockey."

After an impressive first campaign, Mallen and the Minutemen will focus on improving all areas of the team to be prepared for next year's jump to Hockey East.

Goaltending: With highly recruited Brian Reagan joining the two returning netminders, Mallen will have a potential three-way battle for the top goalie job. Dave Kilduff was the workhorse for the Minutemen, posting a 14–4 record on the season. Rich Moriarty played well in the final stretch of the season, including solid performances in UMass' only win against a Division I opponent (4–3 over Army) and a 4–1 loss to Hockey East rival Merrimack.

"We showed a lot of promise in the goal," said Mallen. "We think that both guys did a pretty good job for us over all. We think that the goalie situation is going to be a great situation and a very competitive situation."

Defense: The Minuteman point men sorely missed Captain Jaynen Rissling during his five–week absence, but improved as a unit throughout the season.

Mallen is recruiting a couple of defensemen that will be competing with this year's unit to help make the transition into Hockey East.

Offense: The Minuteman offense was potent all season, netting 176 goals in their 29 games. The nucleus of Rob Bonneau, Blair Wagar, Mike Evans, Blair Manning, Warren Norris, Dennis Wright and Tom Perry will be counted on to build on their impressive first seasons to contribute next year.

"Our players have to get stronger, quicker, and more explosive," said Mallen. "They're going to have to learn to move and shoot the puck quicker when they have time to do so."

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts hockey team made a triumphant return to competitive action, posting a school–record 20–9 season.

Mallen hopes to surprise some people when the Minutemen make the jump to big time.

"We're hoping for great things," said Mallen. "We hope to take a Florida Panthers approach. I would really like to be competitive in Hockey East in the next two or three years. We're not going to get to a national championship until we're competitive in Hockey East."

Hockey East Commissioner Bob DeGregorio warns UMass fans not to get over anxious.

"People at UMass have to be patient," said DeGregorio. "If they think they're going to be skating around with a Hockey East Cup in two years, they're mistaken."

If the future goes as well as the first season, Mallen hopes to be a mainstay at UMass.

"This is definitely not a stepping stone job. I would like to be here for a long, long time. I've been given the resources necessary to make the program grow," said Mallen. "It's going to take a while to get this program going. I would like to raise my children in this town. I would like to make a name for UMass hockey and put my imprint on the program for a long time to come."

After less than a year here, Mallen has indeed made his mark.

"I have a great sense of pride and accomplishment with this team," said Mallen. "This is going to be a special year when I look back, because it's the year we put UMass hockey back on the map."

Minutewomen rebound with big victory

ARAM COMERAN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutewoman gymnastics team bounced back from a sluggish performance two weeks ago and trounced Springfield College this past weekend.

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

A great rebound performance coupled with an excited home crowd made for the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team impressive victory over Springfield College last Saturday night.

UMass picked up 187.95 points, over seven points higher than its previous meet, far ahead of Springfield at 174.075.

"The score will help us out a lot. Everyone was real consistent, we're pretty pleased," said UMass assistant coach Rene Lyst.

Freshmen Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz topped the all– around for the Minutewomen with combined scores of 37.95 and 37.725. Senior Magaret Furtado picked up a 37.425 as UMass picked up the top three spots in the all–around.

"Lianne was great, she had a beautiful floor routine, she did a real good job overall," Lyst said.

"Resting the freshmen (Laing and Swartz) from the all– around last week proved to be a good move. Besides being physically ready, it made them mentally ready. They wanted it more, and their performances in all four events were good," Lyst said.

Laing won the floor routine with a 9.825, with Furtado scoring a 9.675, and Shaheda Keels at 9.55. UMass picked up a team score of 47.575 in the floor exercises.

The Minutewomen set the tone for the meet with a strong showing on the beam. Furtado led the squad with a 9.6, Swartz second at 9.575. UMass had struggled in the Northeastern meet (Feb. 19) on the beam.

"We hit five of six routines on the beam, compared to last weekend (NU) when we missed on all six," Lyst said.

Keels, still nursing an injury, won the bars at 9.5. Angela Jent was second with a 9.35 with Swartz third at 9.3. Coach David Kuzara held Keels back from the vault with the injury and difficulties in practice with the event.

Laing took the vault on the way to her first place finish in the all–around with a score of 9.675. Jent recorded a 9.625 and Swartz picked up a 9.525.

"We are really looking forward to Saturday's meet against the University of New Hampshire. They are a scary team, but it'll be our last home meet, and our seniors should look to go out strong," Lyst said.

UMass figures to creep back into the Top 25 this week coming off the strong competition. Now teams can start dropping some of their lower performances for regional scoring.

"Coach Kuzara and I really made this a team meet, and we will focus on UNH as a team practicing this week," Lyst said.

Veremey, UMass primed to fly into ECAC weekend

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Julie Veremey has an abundance of pride when it comes to competing in the swimming pool. Once she gracefully enters the water, it is the beginning of a mission to touch the far wall before all others.

A key member of this year's University of Massachusetts women's swimming team, Veremey will close out her collegiate career this weekend at the ECAC tournament at Rutgers University.

Veremey has been brought up around the sport of swimming. After attending high school at the Peddie School in New Jersey, which Massachusetts Coach Bob Newcomb calls a "swimming factory," she went to Brown University. After a two–year stay there, she then transferred to UMass.

"This program is a lot different from Brown," said Veremey, noting she enjoyed swimming at both schools. "It's more laid back [at UMass]. We're serious about our swimming but we have a lot of fun."

"When she gets in the water she swims hard," said Newcomb. "She's very focused on what she has to get done, yet she can still stop in the middle of a workout and laugh."

Veremey specializes in the 200–butterfly, a race that many people shy away from due to its rigorous demands. She holds the school record in the race.

"It's hard to swim. I know how to pace myself," said Veremey. "It's an event most people don't enjoy swimming, but I enjoy it."

In the race, Veremey doesn't have the pure speed most of her opponents possess. She makes up for it in her remarkable endurance, which shows in her strong second halves of the races.

"It's an experience just getting to watch her swim it," said Newcomb. "That to me is Julie Veremey. Then she'll get out of the water, sit with the team and laugh."

Veremey will also swim in the 200 IM and 400 IM at the ECACs. In dual meets, she normally swims the 200–fly, 400 IM (second fastest time ever at UMass) and 1,000–free, a triple Newcomb refers to as the "iron triangle".

In practice, the distance swimmers and sprinters are separated so both can focus on getting better in their respective events. The distance swimmers, which includes Veremey, form the "D–lane".

"They wear the D–lane label with pride. They know they work hard," said Newcomb. "The D–lane has evolved in the past few years as something special."

Volunteer Assistant Coach Ed Melanson works with the distance swimmers, and according to Newcomb, "has fostered a great atmosphere with them."

Veremey's versatility has been a crucial asset to the team, as she frees up other swimmers to perform in their best events.

"Athletes like her are hard to find," said Newcomb. "In this day and age of specialization in sports, an athlete of her versatility is hard to replace."

Veremey, along with 12 other swimmers and two divers, will head to the ECACs tomorrow with three specific goals. The squad is striving to finish in the top eight places in the five relays. They will also be looking to swim strong and smart in the morning.

"In order to get back and swim at nights, you've got to swim well in the morning," explained Newcomb. Finally, the team will be looking to have fun.

"A lot of people get so wrapped up in the competition of the meet, they forget to have fun," said Newcomb.

The other swimmers for the Minutewomen are Kristin Schambach, Sarah Baker, Trish Evers, Jodi Walters, Jessica Griffith, Kristen Chapelle, Jessica Farley, Kerrie Hodge, Carolyn Curran, Kim Broad, Barbara Banks and Michelle Munyon. The two divers are Allison White and Dede May.

"The team has evolved a lot as a group," said Veremey. "When you work that hard as a group, it makes people come together. You know you'll always have 25 close friends when you're around the team.

"Being a women's sport, sometimes we don't always get the credit we deserve," continued Veremey. "We work as hard, if not harder, than any team on campus."

Men's gym heads home for So. Conn

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team returns home for a meet tonight against Southern Connecticut after dropping a meet this past weekend at Syracuse, 272.45–269.10.

In the meet, UMass won three of the six events, breaking two school records and scoring its second highest point total of the season; however, they still fell to Syracuse by 3.35 points. A major factor in the loss was the pommel horse event where the Minutemen dropped 5.55 points.

UMass Coach Roy Johnson pointed to some gymnasts having "bad days," including Joseph Santos and Lorenzo Macaluso, who had good scores, but scores lower than they are capable of as "two of the best pommel horse" competitors in the league.

In addition, Johnson indicated that a "different" horse was used than the one the Minutemen are used to competing on. Johnson said that Kiat Oiber's set was really starting to come around and would be a "key routine [for the team]."

UMass set new school records for floor exercise with 46.3 points and on parallel bars with 45.2 points. Ten of the 30 team scores were personal bests for the gymnasts.

Some of these bests included Ruslan Shupak with a 9.55 on floor exercise and a 9.2 on parallel bars, Chris Funk with a 9.65 on still rings to win the event, Jason Braud tied his personal best to take first with a 9.4 on parallel bars and Andy Fulmer scored his best on the high bar with an 8.9.

Freshman Gabe Columbus contributed four personal bests to the Minutemen with an 8.45 on pommel horse, 8.9 on parallel bar, 9.4 on high bar and a 9.0 on still rings.

These scores helped propel Anderson to his best overall total to date as well, but the 53.65 was only good enough for second in the all–around, with first place honors going to Orangeman Shane Garaghty with 55.50 total points.

The Minutemen look to turn things around when they host Southern Conn., led by Coach Abie Grossfeld, tonight in their last home dual meet. Grossfeld led the 1984 Olympic team to gold and just so happens to be celebrating his birthday today.

The Minutemen will look to avoid presenting Grossfeld with a win, though, as UMass has not lost to So. Conn. since 1988. The home meet will be Senior Day for UMass who will recognize the numerous accomplishments of lone senior Jason Braud.

Among Braud's many accomplishments are being an NCAA qualifier in 1991, 1992, and 1993, and an NCAA championship qualifier in the floor exercise, placing 16th in the event.

Braud was the 1993 EIGL floor exercise champion and 1993 New England floor exercise and vault champion.

With UMass posting its second highest total of the season with 269.1, the Minutemen will be looking to break the school record of 269.6 set earlier this season.

"We're looking forward to trying to break the record and hit a 270," said UMass Coach Roy Johnson.

The Minutemen take on Southern Connecticut tonight at 7 p.m. at the Boyden Gymnastics Center.

Men's track places 8th at NECs

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track and field team placed 8th among 32 teams at last weekend's New England Championships held at Boston University.

The Minutemen scored 17 points and were beaten by some familiar foes. The University of Connecticut proved it's the class of the region as the Huskies dwarfed all challengers. They tallied 129 points, 40 more than Immanuel BU's 89.

Also finishing ahead of UMass were Northeastern (74), Boston College (65), Southern Connecticut State (42), Providence (35) and Rhode island (34).

"You'd have to consider the whole event a success," O'Brien said. "When you've been working real hard for eight or ten weeks, [such a finish] is a natural outcome."

UMass tasted its sweetest success in the 4 x 800 meter relay as the Minutemen placed third. Jason Brewer (1:58.5), Steve Paris (1:58.6), Brian King (1:56.5) and Rick Copley (1:56.5) got it done in 7:50.54, qualifying the quartet for next weekend's IC4A (Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America) Championships at Princeton University.

Also qualifying for the IC4A meet was the distance medley team of King, Rob Pedowitz, Chris Povolny and Copley, whose time of 10:17.05 was sixth best on the day. Going to Princeton will be especially satisfying for Pedowitz, who hails from there.

"It's a big experience," said the 400 meter specialist. "Running in front of the home crowd, so my family will see me."

O'Brien hoped that on Saturday all three relay teams would be heading to the IC4As and, although the 4 x 400 recorded its best time of the year by nearly two seconds (3:26.00), it didn't make the cut.

Also earning places at the New England Championships were Paul Doyle, whose 3,258 pentathlon points put him fourth; Mark Lefebvre took fifth in the shotput (49'7.25"); Tom Galligani came in fourth in the triple jump (45'5.75") and Rob Tauro's 7.92 in the 55 meter hurdles placed him fifth.

"The majority [of UMass participants] had their best performances of the year," O'Brien said.

The top 15 teams in The Associated Press college basketball poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, records through Feb. 27, total points based on 25 points for a first-place vote through one point for a 25th-place vote, and previous rankings

Israel offers to free prisoners this week

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel will release 500 Palestinian prisoners Tuesday and 300 more by the end of the week, the Israeli army said, in an effort to coax the PLO back to peace talks after the massacre at a West Bank mosque.

Earlier Tuesday, the PLO had rejected the release and other Israeli concessions, saying the package did not go far enough in protecting Palestinians in the occupied lands. It was not immediately clear if Israel had informed the PLO before announcing the release.

A prisoner release had been planned as a gesture on the occasion of Ramadan, the Muslim holy month of fasting, but had been postponed after a pregnant Israel woman was killed in the West Bank earlier this month.

Army sources said, however, that the number planned for release on Ramadan was far lower than the 800 that Israel is now freeing. The army said the Palestinian prisoners were not involved in violent attacks or in terrorist activities since the signing of the peace plan on Sept. 13, and did not belong to organizations opposed to the plan.

Israeli radio said many of them were near the end of their sentence.

The PLO had earlier rejected the Israeli concessions.

As part of the package, Israel had offered to disarm settlers in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho and expand the proposed Palestinian police force in those areas, according to PLO officials meeting in Tunis.

But the major stumbling block was an offer announced by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to allow unarmed international observers in the occupied territories.

"We still insist on military and armed peacekeeping forces to protect our people," PLO Executive Committee member Ali Ishak said in Tunis, Tunisia, after the committee rejected the offer early Tuesday. "What has been proposed is insufficient."

Rabin made the offer for international observers in Jerusalem on Monday. Later, spokesmen for the prime minister and the Israeli Foreign Ministry said they had no information on a package of concessions, although they did not deny that one existed.

Such a package would mean that Israel had agreed to most demands put by the PLO following Friday's shooting of worshipers at a mosque in Hebron.

Two Palestinians were killed Monday in clashes with soldiers in the occupied territories, bringing the Arab death toll to 64 since a Jewish gunman opened fire at the Muslims, killing 39 men and boys.

In New York, diplomats from the United States, Russia, the PLO and Egypt said they were close to agreeing on a U.N. resolution condemning the massacre.

Mideast peace talks in Washington were suspended Sunday after Syria, Lebanon and Jordan walked out in support of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Tuition and respect are top issues

• Hardy brings experience to SGA

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

If elected president of the UMass Student Government Association, junior George Hardy said he will establish a relationship between the students, the SGA and the administration that is founded on respect.

Hardy, who graduated from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture last semester, said he can use the business experience he gained as district manager for a nation–wide lawn care company to work with the administration on a professional level. Hardy is an SGA senator who represents commuters.

"What I'm going to try to do is talk one on one with the administration and tell them we're done with goofy publicity stunts," Hardy said. "I am going to sit down with them and come away with a mutual understanding that both sides can be happy with, and I think that is possible with the right person."

Hardy said University tuition and financial aid are two issues that go hand in hand in turning UMass back into a school for working class people. He said tuition will probably increase this year or the year after. He also said that to counter tuition hikes, the University needs more financial aid. And he advocates the return of merit scholarships.

"If we win the national championship in basketball we should win the national championship in academics," he said. "We should reward our scholars. The money for merit scholarships could come from institutional financial aid, from state funds or from parking tickets."

Hardy said he will work with Housing Services to find a better way to deal with residents cited for violations. He said under the present system, students are guilty until proven otherwise. He also said he will look into having less of a "fast–food" atmosphere at the Dining Commons in order to accomplish any of this, Hardy said students must unite with professors, the campus unions and the administration to lobby the state legislature for more money for the University system.

Hardy said his experience in negotiating with upper–level management makes him "the only candidate" for president.

"I have been involved with negotiations with upper–level people the same age and demeanor as the [UMass] administration ," he said. "We're at a time when we can finally be with the administration, and students need a professional voice. There is no other candidate that has the business or professional experience of negotiating and dealing with the upper–level management of corporations and universities."

"When students vote for me, they are really voting for themselves, they are putting their voice where it should be," he said.

• Lenchner running out of protest

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Senior Charles Lenchner is not running for UMass Student Government Association president to win; he wanrs to voice his opinion that the University should be a school for the working class.

Lenchner, an SGA senator who represents commuters, said he represents people who otherwise would not participate in student government elections because of their disdain for other candidates.

"I represent many people who are looking for a lot more meaningful than a paid discussion," Lenchner said. "The future of the SGA has nothing to do with individuals or inane slogans. It's about a larger political issues that almost never get raised."

Lenchner, president of the Radical Student Union, said the University should not have to charge tuition.

"Why is there tuition? Other countries don't have tuition," he said. "California did not have tuition for its state schools until Reagan became governor. We need to demand that we be able to finish school without owing an arm and a leg."

Lenchner said going to UMass should be like going to public high school, and he advocates more taxes to cover the costs. He said the people who graduate from UMass and make the most money should pay the highest taxes to cover public higher education.

Lenchner said UMass could cut its costs by letting students run the University instead of paying high salaries to administrators.

"Management salaries have risen out of the roof. President [Michael K.] Hooker's secretary gets close to $96,000, and her job is to organize his date book and to look pretty," he said. "Think of all of the co–ops and internships that would open up for students if we got rid of the high–paid administrators who don't do anything sophisticated."

Lenchner said the University could replace the administrators who run Food Services with hotel, restaurant and travel administration students and it would save money and still get even more accomplished. He also said the Textbook Annex should be a student–run, non–profit business.

Lenchner said UMass should rise to the level where it can compete with top schools in the nation and still not have to charge tuition.

"I have a vision for this campus," he said. "Schools like the University of Virginia and Berklee compete with Harvard and they serve the citizens of their states.

"UMass should be just as good as those schools and not have to charge tuition. We should make it so even the poorest students can come here. This should be a first choice school and not a second or third choice school."

Calipari honored for his donations to library

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Head coach of the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team John Calipari has contributed to UMass by not only building a nationally–ranked basketball program but by supporting academics.

Calipari was honored for his contributions to the University Library at a luncheon yesterday in the Campus Center. Calipari contributed over $10,000 last year.

"I want to give back to the students," Calipari said. "What area can I give back that touches all the students? I looked at it and I said it's the library."I think the library is one of the central points on this campus, because it is higher education," he said.

The luncheon also brought attention to the need for increased library funding. The University is listed 90th in an index of 108 members of American Research Libraries.

The rating has fallen 61 points over the past five years, according to Daniel Martin, a professor of French or Italian who serves on the Faculty Senate Research Library Council.

"We want to be a world class university and it all starts with the library. If we first make sure that the library is world class, that it is the focal point on this campus, then it just filters down to the rest of us," Calipari said.

Chancellor David K. Scott was in attendance as Calipari was given an award containing the bookplate for the books purchased with his donation. The plate was designed by Elizabeth Wilda, a design illustrator from the library's audio–visual department.

The University Library is part of the administration's plan to better equip students with the resources they need to be successful

"What John does, what the basketball team does, is a good metaphor for how we need to work for connecting the whole University internally and externally," Scott said. "Because [Calipari] and your basketball program does just that."

Irish women's life examined in documentary

By KRISTEN ROUNTREE
Collegian Correspondent

While Rosemary Mahoney was in Ireland, she would sit down every night and gather the events of the day in a notebook, the way people everywhere write daily in their diaries.

But unlike most people, she did not keep her recollections to herself. She had them published into a book.

This book, Whoredom in Kimmage: Irish Women Coming of Age, was the topic of her lecture Monday night at Amherst College.

Originally from Milton, Mass., Mahoney first travelled to Ireland at the age of 17 then again in 1991, shortly after Mary Robinson was elected first female president of Ireland.

Although the book often focuses on women's issues, Mahoney said she realizes it is about men as well, and does not care much for the subtitle.

"You can't write about women and not write about men," she said.

Mahoney spent much of her lecture reading from "J.J. Smythe's," a chapter about her visit to a gay bar in Dublin. She chose to go to the pub, she said, because "people who lived on the margins of society," or those who lived differently, fascinated her.

"I felt as if I were being scrutinized," she said of the visit, adding that many of the women she met guessed right away that she was American, and not always with admiration. "The Irish think Irish–Americans are ridiculous," she said.

What about American attitudes toward the Irish? "Americans have this absurd image of Ireland, of leprechauns and the like," she said. "They don't realize that it's a country living in the twentieth century."

Some images are correct, though, she said, like that of alcohol.

"Drinking is a way of life in Ireland; I was only writing the truth," Mahoney said. She also said some people were angry she wrote about alcoholism.

Part of the reason for the alcohol problem, she said, were the many problems faced by the people today, particularly the Catholic Church and its "anti–sex campaign."

"There are many problems with sex in Ireland," she said. "Divorce and abortion are still illegal there, and women are not trained for careers or to support themselves. Their husband was their livelihood."

Mahoney said that is why many of them voted against legalization of divorce, for fear that their husbands would leave them in favor of someone else.

Mahoney said that many of the women in Ireland resented her presence and weren't very friendly to her. "The men were much easier to talk to," she said. "Women see other women as competition."

During her stay, Mahoney said she encountered many negative reactions about her writing the book. They didn't like her, she said, because she was an outsider writing about their lives.

"I think some people were unhappy that they didn't write the book," she said.

Whoredom in Kimmage has not yet been published in Ireland, but she should be available there this summer.

"I'm sure some people there will not be happy about it," she said.

New program trains tutors

By JESSICA TAVERNA

A new tutor–training program is being initiated at the University.

According to Humberto Segura, the program's director, it will offer students who are presently tutoring — and those who would like to in the future — the opportunity to take a comprehensive class designed to enhance their ability to break down information.

It will also help them deal with a diverse agenda of material and individuals, and effectively work with students with learning disabilities.

Segura said a "retention task force" was orchestrated after the University recognized

Women's movement influenced by Communists

By KARA MATSON
Collegian Correspondent

Although the Communist Party in the United States during the 1940s and 1950s did not associate themselves with feminism, they greatly influenced the women's movement of the 1960s and 1970s.

"Communist women were more advanced and far–reaching in terms of women's rights," said Kate Weigand, a historian and doctoral candidate at Ohio State University.

Weigand spoke at Mount Holyoke College last night on "Bringing the Revolution Home: The Sources of Women's Liberation in the American Communist Movement of the 1940s and 1950s."

According to Weigand, women in the Communist Party prior to the 1940s believed their oppression was almost entirely a result of economic roots. In the 1940s and '50s, this thinking expanded to include male supremacy, as well as cultural and social roots.

This change in thinking was due in part to a woman named Betty Millard, who wrote a pamphlet explaining that all women suffer from oppression, extending its bounds beyond class. Some members of the Communist Party thought this pamphlet was "too feminist," but many agreed with the ideas.

"Although women's issues weren't getting a lot of attention, they were getting more," Weigand said.

The Communist Party began to take action to improve relations for women at first just in the women's branches, then extended that idea to mixed–gender parties. Women were encouraged to gain leadership positions in local, state, and national parties, and the stereotype of women as clerical workers began to wane.

Communist newspapers that printed sexist pictures and articles were flooded with letters from women complaining about their representation.

"The Communist Party was not immune to male supremacy. Women were emboldened by sexist articles and took action," Weigand said.

An important aspect in the Communist Party's ideology on women's rights was their inclusion of women of color, as compared to early American feminist thought that included only White, middle–class women.

"What made the Communist Party unique," said Weigand, "was that it attempted to address the problems of African- American women. After 1948, it was rare to find articles on women's oppression without mention of the problems of Black women.

"It was the Communist Party's understanding that there was no separation between race, class, and gender struggles. Their attributes could bring them together to fight for real liberation for everybody."

The Communist Party provided a legacy for young women in the 1960s, particularly for "red-diaper babies" who grew up with strong women as role models, as their parents were members of the Communist Party.

"The Communist Party refused to claim themselves as feminists, but their emphasis on the pervasiveness of problems of race and class prefigured in the Women's Liberation Movement of the 1960s and 1970s," said Weigand.

that 23 percent of its first year students were not returning.

The response was to formulate the program in an attempt to increase resources and provide the University with students equipped to handle problems and challenges that arise when tutoring such an assorted student body.

"I'm a tutor, but I've never taken any classes in education so I think it would definitely help me," Chantal Gerety, a junior economics major, said. "I've never been trained to tutor and I think that it would be beneficial for me to fine tune my skills and see if I've been taking the right approach."

Segura said students are adding the class right now in anticipation for the opening of a resource center on the tenth floor of the library where the class will be held.

The class will start today and it is open to all students and faculty.

Those who complete the course will receive certification accredited by a national organization.

The program was elicited by a suggestion from Deputy Provost Norman Aitken, who could not be reached to comment.

"Tutoring is more than just transferring of knowledge," Segura said. "We want to have the tutors ask themselves 'Who is it that we are tutoring? How do they learn? What backgrounds do they have?'"

Push to balance budget falls short by four votes

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Falling four votes shy of a two-thirds majority, the Senate on Tuesday rejected a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution that supporters said would end the government's staggering run-up of red ink.

The 63-37 vote capped a debate that blended Constitutional and economic arguments on an issue that Congress has wrestled with for more than a decade.

"We must not feed the nation this poison pill," Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said shortly before the final vote. He said the amendment would damage the Constitution's balance of powers and undermine majority rule without necessarily erasing deficits. But Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., countered that for "25 years in a row we have had deficits," and said the national debt has grown steadily in his two decades in Congress. Sooner or later, he warned, the government would resort to printing "funny money" to sustain that debt. "We ought to stop this before we get to the edge of the cliff."

Forty-one Republicans and 22 Democrats voted in favor of the amendment. Thirty-four Democrats and three Republicans were opposed.

There was one surprise: Sen. Harlan Mathews, D-Tenn., who was appointed to fill Vice President Al Gore's seat and is not a candidate for re-election. Although he was a co-sponsor of the amendment, he voted against, saying he was fearful of its possible impact on Social Security.

The House is expected to vote on an identical amendment at mid-month, and supporters there are within striking distance of a two-thirds majority. Regardless of the outcome, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said the issue would "absolutely not" return to the Senate floor this year.

Although close, the final Senate vote was largely drained of suspense. Sponsors said in advance they were likely to lose, despite a $4.5 trillion debt, to opposition that included the White House, Mitchell and Byrd, the 76-year-old chairman of the Appropriations Committee who patrolled the Senate floor for a week countering each argument made by supporters.

On a vote of 78-22, the Senate earlier brushed aside a milder version of the amendment, sponsored by Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., that would have sheltered Social Security from budget-cutters and permitted borrowing for permanent government projects such as highways and buildings. It also would have made it easier to run a deficit in a time of recession.

Many Republicans scorned it as a loophole-ridden proposal that would do little to rein in deficits, and charged it was designed to siphon off support from their own proposal. "It is not a serious balanced budget amendment," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. Seven Democrats voted for Reid's alternative and then opposed the other version.

Islam official visits N.J.

In midst of protests, Muhammad changes tack

By CHARLES HUTZLER
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — The Nation of Islam official who called Jews bloodsuckers and said some whites should be killed offered a more subdued message Monday in a speech that had prompted anti-bigotry gatherings around the state.

Khallid Abdul Muhammad told an audience of about 350 people at Trenton State College that "whites have taught us that we are black because we are cursed." But he said he did not come to teach black people how to hate whites.

"This is going to be a love black-unity cheer tonight," Muhammad said.

He accused the media of being racist and, pointing to TV cameras in the room, said, "Sorry to disappoint you guys — this is a black history celebration."

But he went on to say that in many black communities, Jews run businesses that prey on blacks, operating substandard housing or selling "poison liquor that's tearing down the minds of the black community."

"We experience this on a daily basis," he said. "If you condemn me for my words why don't you condemn those in the community who do evil deeds?"

Still, the speech was a far cry from his Nov. 29 speech at Kean College in Union when he called Jews "bloodsuckers" of the black community and said the pope was a "no-good cracker." He also urged blacks to kill all whites in South Africa, including women, children and the disabled.

He had been invited to speak on the legacy of Marcus Garvey, an early black nationalist who founded the Universal Negro improvement Association in the 1920s. Muhammad, who was the Nation of Islam's national spokesman until he was demoted after the November speech, is also a member of the Garvey-founded group.

His appearance at Trenton prompted politicians from Republican Gov. Christie Whitman and Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley on down to attend panel discussions and prayer vigils and make speeches condemning Muhammad's earlier remarks. The state Assembly convened a special session to allow members to speak out against hate speech.

Bradley defended Muhammad's right to speak, but defended his own right to counter Muhammad's attacks on other groups.

"We cannot accept racially abusive language, and my guess is we've got to break these barriers," Bradley told 600 students at Ewing High School.

Whitman appeared in Edison with survivors of Nazi concentration camps and American internment camps for Japanese in a panel discussion on tolerance.

Mexican democracy to undergo reforms

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico — The Mexican government hailed on Tuesday a nine-party agreement on electoral reforms that appeared to signal a major advance toward answering demands by armed rebels for greater democracy.

The reforms call for changes ranging from independent Mexican observers at the polls and an audit of voter registration rolls. The government hints it also is considering allowing foreign observers for the first time.

An overhaul of the fraud-ridden political system was approved by the Federal Election Institute and the nine main political parties Monday night.

Interior Secretary Jorge Carpizo called the changes an "extraordinary step" toward assuring a fair presidential vote on Aug. 21.

No immediate response came from masked insurgents in this town who have been negotiating peace with the government for more than a week.

The Zapatista National Liberation Army demands that either President Carlos Salinas de Gortari resign or the electoral process undergo meaningful reform.

The Zapatistas took over several towns in southern Chiapas state in a New Year's Day uprising that continues. The rebels called it a fight for democracy and for the rights of impoverished Indian peasants.

"The accords begin a new era . . . in the search for the cleanest and most transparent elections in our nation's history," Carpizo told Mexico City reporters hours after the agreement was reached. Rebel spokesman Subcomandante Macros — a code name — reiterated Tuesday that any deal to end the conflict that has killed at least 145 people must include real political change or "there will be no peace."

Bishop Samuel Ruiz, who has been mediating the talks, said an announcement on a tentative agreement could come by Wednesday. Salinas' election in 1988, for a single six-year term, was tainted by widespread charges of fraud. His Institutional Revolutionary Party has routinely won every national election since it was founded in 1929, often by alleged fraud and other misdeeds. On Monday the parties agreed to:

- Have a commission of 10 unaffiliated citizens hire auditors to check voter rolls and report by May 11.
- Establish an independent counsel within the attorney general's office to hear complaints and prosecute wrongdoing at election time.
- Open all polling stations to independent observers.
- Change the format of voter identification cards, increase campaign financing for the parties and increase penalties for vote fraud.

Lorena Bobbitt to begin the 'healing process'

By ANNE GEARAN
Associated Press

MANASSAS, Va. — A confident and smiling Lorena Bobbitt celebrated her first day of freedom and began planning her new life without the man whose penis she cut off with a kitchen knife.

Mrs. Bobbitt walked out of the same courthouse Monday where jurors heard two versions of the night she attacked her husband. "I'm looking forward to my healing process," Mrs. Bobbitt said after a hearing in which she was freed from a state mental hospital.

Mrs. Bobbitt was acquitted by reason of insanity Jan. 21 for mutilating John Bobbitt and ordered to undergo psychiatric evaluation. State doctors said she no longer suffers from mental problems that led to the attack.

Mrs. Bobbitt spent Monday afternoon celebrating with lawyers and friends, and sandwiched in meetings about how to handle the intense media and public scrutiny on her case.

Her media agent, Alan Hauge, said Mrs. Bobbitt will probably sell rights to her story soon. "We still have a lot of talking to do," he said.

The Ecuador-born Mrs. Bobbitt told reporters her first task is to recover from the effects of domestic abuse, and she made a plea for other battered women to get help. Her husband denies he abused her and was acquitted in November of sexual abuse.

"I realize there are many abused women in this country — not only in this country. I would like to in some way help them, encourage them to reach out for help. I would like them to call the closest hot line," she said.

Despite recommending her release, doctors said Mrs. Bobbitt is not completely well. She reacts inappropriately to stress and has difficulty accepting her role in the attack, one psychologist said in a sealed report to the judge. Portions of the report were discussed in court Monday.

"There's a risk factor there and I think the court has got to address it," said prosecutor Paul B. Ebert.

At her trial experts said Mrs. Bobbitt suffers from depression and other problems.

State Dems help kill budget amendment

By MELISSA B. ROBINSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The six U.S. senators from southern New England split along party lines to help kill the proposed balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Five Democrats — Sens. Christopher Dodd and Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, Edward Kennedy and John Kerry of Massachusetts, and Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island — voted against it.

And Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., was less than enthusiastic in voting for the amendment, which failed 63-37 on Tuesday night. The amendment fell four votes shy of the two-thirds majority necessary for passage.

"It is not with a great deal of pride that I throw my support to this amendment but rather with a sense of chagrin," said Chafee, adding that he backed the amendment only because all other efforts to bring the nation's $4.5 trillion deficit under control have failed.

"I deplore the fact that the United States, once the largest creditor nation in the world, is now the largest debtor nation," Chafee said. "Embedding a balanced-budget requirement in the Constitution just might help us make the difficult choices necessary to reduce the deficit."

Opponents, however, were convinced the amendment would either fail to produce results, or lead to drastic cuts in Social Security, defense and other programs when Americans need them the most.

"Writing this kind of a straitjacket into the nation's founding charter could jeopardize our economy, diminish the Constitution, distort its system of checks and balances, and undermine the principle of majority rule that is at the core of our democracy," said Kennedy.

Cuba may receive aid

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An American religious group announced plans Tuesday to send its third convoy of humanitarian aid to Cuba in defiance of a U.S. trade embargo.

Minneapolis-based Pastors for Peace, a coalition of more than 600 North American religious groups, said it is trying to win U.S. public support for ending the more than 30-year-old embargo. At a news conference in the Mexican capital, spokesman Errol Edwards said some 250 volunteers, traveling in 60 cars and buses, would transport more than 150 tons of schoolbooks, vitamins, computers, medicine, seeds, farm tools and other humanitarian aid to the island nation.

He said the caravan would leave Vancouver, British Columbia, in a few days, join American participants in Detroit and head south to Laredo, Texas, where the attempt to enter Mexico will be made on March 9.

Last July, caravan members were blocked for 15 days from sending a schoolbus through the Customs post at Laredo and went on a hunger strike until the U.S. government relented.

Schoolbuses fall into a category of motor vehicles banned for delivery to Cuba under the blockade.

The group's first caravan was in 1992. Once in Mexico, the goods are loaded on a ship for Cuba in the port of Tampico.

All I need is some sleep

Andrew Bryce

I'm tired.

I guess regularly going to bed damn near when the sun is coming up would do that to anyone. The morning routine is basically the same each day. It does not involve breakfast, because it'd mean to get up that much earlier. It does not involve hanging around before I go to my classes, because it is impossible for me to get up for recreational time after getting four-some-odd hours of sleep.

What it does involve is pushing the snooze button after being awakened by the annoying sound. The only reason it does involve pushing the snooze is not because I have to get up or because I have class, but because I will do anything to terminate the hellish chatter of that alarm.

Nine minutes later, this action re-occurs. It may be altered a bit. What I mean is sometimes I'll let the alarm go off for about five minutes before I push the snooze button. Or my roommate will have to turn it off because I am so conked out. Or I'll push the wrong button like, say, the hour button, so when I pull my eyes open, I have a conniption fit because I think it is really an hour later than the regular time.

Sometimes I even set the alarm for the p.m. instead of the a.m., and the other way around. No one has ever mistaken me for being brilliant.

Mornings basically suck for me here at school. It is the hardest work of the day to get my ass in gear.

. . . And then I get to class. I will try to explain my situation in class as best as I can. I lose control of my bodily functions. I go limp. I begin to bob and sway, and my head jerks as I fall asleep and wake up in a matter of seconds. I accidently plant my head on the shoulder of my neighboring classmate, with drool slowly creeping down my chin.

I sit there, amidst the lost bodily control, the bobbing, swaying, jerking, snuggling, and drooling, trying my best to keep my eyes open. It is a true struggle, with all of these nuisances occurring at once, to maintain any composure at all while sitting in the middle of the classroom.

I'm such a hypocrite, though, when it comes to the tiring- in-class-bit. When I see someone else falling asleep, and I am completely awake, I shake my head in disgust. i look at them as if they are a total disgrace to mankind. Or, I laugh at them. Laughing as if they are the scum of the earth, chuckling to myself thinking about how the person is wasting away the thousands of dollars they spend on the education they should be receiving. . . and yet they are sleeping it away. i get appalled.

Then. . . well. . . i go do the same thing. I'm convinced it's impossible to get some decent sleep around here. The days are filled with hours of consumption. The consumption of class time all day. The consumption of food at lunch and dinner. The consumption of writing for this illustrious newspaper. The consumption of homework. And, of course, the consumption of leisure time. All of this is part of my average day, and it usually consumes about 20 hours.

When I was little, I was not a night person. I can remember the days when I'd never be able to stay up through "Saturday Night Live." I can remember when I used to be one of the first ones to go to sleep when I slept over my friends' houses. Man, I miss those days.

My normal sleeping days are over, at least for the time being. I feel like I have a sickness, a problem. Some sort of rehab may be needed in my future. I can just see myself in a circle with others who are college students that get little sleep: "My name is Andrew, and i drool all over my classmates after falling asleep."

For the time being, I will try some remedies. I will try to budget my time better. I will try to drink coffee before each of my classes. I will try to cut down on the number of hours I spend for leisure time. I will try to cut down the number of times I push the snooze button each morning. I will try whatever it takes to get some needed sleep.

No rehab needed just yet.

I'm goin' back to Philly...

"For we are always what our situation hands us; it's either sadness or euphoria."

— Billy Joel, "Summer, Highland Falls"

These past few weeks have been very euphoric and some of the best in my life, which doesn't say much. It seems as though everything has been falling into place rather nicely. My 21st birthday, Massachusetts basketball, a weekend in our nation's capital.

If I had to write a diary (a journal, if you will), the following would be my first entries. Actually, I got a journal for Christmas. It's about time I put it to use.

Just when you thought life was tough. . .

• Uptown on my 21st: For anyone who saw me, thanks for the kicks. I learned that you can scream at the top of your lungs, "I hope I'm that drunk when I turn 21!" in the middle of a fine establishment uptown and not get thrown out. My apologies to the bouncer who wanted to fight two of my friends, along with me, for tooling on a sign that hung above the entrance while saying "Play like champions today."

• Waiting three and a half hours to cross the George Washington Bridge in New York City: Okay, before anyone criticizes me, it was a group decision to stay on I-95 thru New York City instead of taking three other highways over the Tappan Zee Bridge just to get back to I-95. Sound confusing?

Pretty much. Who knew that the upper level would be closed because of "falling ice?" The simple fact is we moved three miles in three hours — and that was at 8 p.m. Let me remind you of some other simple facts: Philadelphia is 101 miles from NYC, it was 8:15 when we finally got across the GWB, and the Temple game started at 9:30 p.m. A game we were supposed to be covering for this newspaper.

Ahhhh, I guess we were a wee bit late — we did get to listen to the first 10 minutes of the game on the radio while driving through Philly.

• Driving through Washington, D.C., at 3 a.m. after the victory by the Minutemen: Half-asleep I got to see the Washington Monument and the Capitol Building with the moonlit sky as a backdrop.

It was so romantic, I was glad to be with. . . nobody. Really, it was amazing. It brought back memories of my eighth grade class trip to D.C., even though I knew I wouldn't be going rollerskating later that night.

I remember when I went to the White House and saw all of the dust. I remember watching my friend Jeff in all of his splendor hit on high school women. Okay, enough reminiscing on eighth grade; this is college. We are much more socially advanced.

• Drinking for free at the Embassy Suites' manager's reception: Fine. The only difference between now and eighth grade is that beer is involved. This hotel is great; from 5 to 7 p.m., drinks on the house. So I sat there, beer in hand, in the lobby of the damn hotel. I did nothing for two hours.

At least it was better than sitting in a parked caravan for three hours on the George Washington Bridge.

• Watching the Olympic figure skating long programs: I was so tired I couldn't leave the hotel, so I watched the Tonya, Nancy and Oksana show. Honestly, I almost shed a tear when Harding ran to the judges bawling her eyes out asking for a do-over. Hey, I'm glad she got another chance.

I've had trouble tying my shoelaces. That's why I buy Velcro. And just if you are wondering, asthma can affect you enough to get you upset. I almost wasn't able to write this column.

In my opinion, Kerrigan got screwed. Baiul skated a great program, but so did Nancy. I think maybe the judges felt they couldn't give Nancy the gold medal because of what had happened. Oh, well, now Kerrigan will only make $10 million instead of 30.

• Madhatter's in downtown D.C.: What a bar. It was pretty cool when my roommate and I were the only ones who knew the words to Pearl Jam's "Daughter". We figured it was because they were all from Catholic University.

I met a kid who said he had applied to UMass and wanted to come here to Amherst. Hmm, he was 18 years old and in a bar. He's definitely creative. And intelligent — at least he didn't let the bartender know he wasn't underage like my friend did.

• Massachusetts versus GW: We lost. So everything doesn't smell like roses. Then I spent 37 hours reading my story over the phone so it could appear in the Collegian last Monday morning. Uh-oh, it's getting worse.

• Missing deadline on Tuesday: I'm back in Amherst. I normally run on Tuesdays, but I missed deadline because I had two papers due. Oh, well, the vacation's over. There's always this weekend and the trip to the Atlantic 10 tournament. Philly, here I come.

Who's really narrow-minded?

Diana D'Avanzo

Welcome to UMass 101. An institution which, like many others, would love to somehow eradicate the existent dominant powers. The question for the day: Is the United States, or more specifically UMass, a predominantly Christian society? The answer comes in two distinct forms.

Answer no. 1 is attributed to a variety of people. These people may differ as much in thought as they do in appearance. They may appear as your common student freedom fighter, your learned professor, your feminist neighbor or humble grandmother.

From all walks of life, individuals will incessantly argue that Christianity is, in fact, dominant. Some would even go on to say that all life's evils can be traced back to those arrogant, narrow-minded Christians

From all walks of life, these unique individuals will incessantly argue that Christianity is, in fact, dominant. Some would even go on to say that all life's evils can be traced back to those arrogant, narrow-minded Christians.

Then, of course, there is answer no. 2. Interestingly, these people also differ in dress, opinion and political views. Some of them believe they should stay away from the government, while others view it as an agency for positive change. Some do not think much about the environment, while others diligently recycle. Some are introverts, others extroverts.

Again, from all walks of life, these unique individuals will incessantly argue that Christianity is not, in any way, dominant. Some would go on to say that Christians are a group of people who are not well-liked and ridiculed while their beliefs must constantly take cheap shots from society in general.

Figured it out? Answer no. 1 comes from people who are not Christians. Answer no. 2 comes from people who are Christians. Why don't their responses agree? The part about wanting to eradicate dominant powers mentioned earlier will help in understanding the disagreement.

For society in general, Christianity has acted in an oppressive manner on several occasions and, to this day, still does. The Crusades are often mentioned, as are the inquisitions and witch trials. More recently, the hot issue to face is the Christian stance on abortion. All of these events and stands, along with countless others, would be cited in arguing that Christianity is the cruel, dominant force of the day.

Joe Christian must, of course, answer for all such ills and explain an association with such a crushing world force. After getting through the "just because it was done in the name of God does not mean God approved" response, poor Joe is told he is copping out. It is a no-win situation. Then, despite a plea to preserve life and the argument that abortion actually harms women, Joe is neatly crushed with hisses, boos and shouts of "narrow-mindedness."

Surely your ordinary Christian would not feel very dominant and probably be wondering if, after attaining a college degree, the narrow-minded accusations will cease.

After getting through all the issues, debates and tongue-twisters, the basic message of the gospel is lost and muddled. Jesus and the Bible in general become so closely associated with historical evil or an "unlavorable" political stance that Christianity itself is unrecognizable. People will become so defensive that any hope for reason is lost.

Usually a little scripture is stated in hopes of unveiling biblical inconsistencies and hypocrisy. Of course, should your average Christian have a response from personal Bible knowledge, more than likely he will be accused of making excuses. It is a cruel, vicious cycle.

In the end, there is too much anger, cultural bias, historical confusion and hate for anyone to even know what the gospel message is, never mind pick up a Bible.

Oh, I'm sorry. I forgot — I'm supposed to be the narrow- minded one.

Letters to the Editor

NATO air strikes won't end suffering

To the editor:

Even as the horrific pictures of 66 civilians slaughtered by one bomb landing squarely in a Sarajevo marketplace have galvanized public opinion in support of NATO air strikes, many questions remain unanswered — and unasked. For example, why has it taken this long for the United States and other Western countries to intensify diplomatic pressures on all sides to settle the war? Are we all such creatures of the televised age that only prime-time carnage can move us?

The siege of Sarajevo, only one of the Muslim enclaves under assault, has had a devastating impact on the life of residents there for over two years. And even if the siege is lifted there, is there any evolving plan to expand the peace throughout this war-wracked land? Meanwhile, the rush to arms by NATO risks causing the Serbs to escalate their attacks elsewhere while making UN peacekeepers their new targets.

During the Revolutionary War period, Thomas Paine spoke of the mechanism by which armed conflict developed. "Man is not the enemy of man," he noted, "but through the medium of a false system of government." Muslims, Serbs and Croats have intermingled for generations. Yet, now whipped into genocidal frenzy by power politicians, they kill and we threaten more slaughter.

In this, the bloodiest of centuries, killing is still sold as the solution. We scoff at apostles of nonviolence like Mohandas Gandhi who warned, "An eye for an eye only makes the whole world blind." Again we are prepared to unleash the dogs of war; again their savage logic is seen as eminently reasonable. It seems for many of us now, our hope and our imagination goes no further.

Loosen up — it was just a joke

To the editor:

This letter is in regards to Liliana Casañeda Rossman and her letter to the editor ("Joke in sports quote no laughing matter," Collegian, Feb. 28), I want her to realize the quote was strictly a joke, and nothing more.

Do you honestly believe that the guy who made the statement would seriously think about trading his girlfriend for a ticket? How can you possibly be upset over that comment? Only a stiff feminist would react like you did to a joke. Where is your logic?

You did have one valid point, when you said everyone is entitled to "demonstrate their stupidity. . . in any way one sees fit." You obviously just did.

You can't comprehend that society is not as bad as the feminists view it. I believe that if you would loosen up a bit, all these views of women you see as being harmful would be nothing more than an overreaction to a humorous statement.

Speak out on Farrakhan

Minister Louis Farrakhan will be speaking on the University of Massachusetts campus on March 9. Farrakhan, his senior aide Khalilid Abdul Muhammed, and the Nation of Islam have been the subject of intense media scrutiny over the past several weeks. Farrakhan himself appeared on the cover of Time magazine last week and was recently a guest on "The Arsenio Hall Show."

As the date for Farrakhan's visit nears, the spotlight will be on the UMass community to see how we will prepare for and react to the presence of such a controversial speaker on our campus.

What do you think of Farrakhan? Will his visit be beneficial to this campus, or will it do more harm than good? Members of the University community are encouraged to make their voices heard on this issue by writing brief letters to the editor and sending them to the Opinion page at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center Basement, UMass.

Kohrman's rousing exhibit gives viewer an intriguing perspective

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Correspondent

God Creates the Animals and Other Paintings
Jonathan Kohrman
Student Union Gallery

The University of Massachusetts Arts Council is partially funding an exhibit at the Student Union Gallery. The work of Jonathan Kohrman, a Jewish art student, is currently being displayed. The 18 oil paintings are collectively entitled God Creates the Animals and Other Paintings.

The paintings are upon either wood or canvas surfaces, and each is appropriately spaced from the next, which gives the viewer proper perspective. it takes a bit of time and focussed attention to really understand the deep, profound meaning and nature of each painting.

In the upper-right corner of the "Elders of Zion – Ashes" there is the profile of a man looking upon the rest of this painting. He seems to be asking the viewer "Do you see?" You can't miss the big white structure, undoubtedly symbolic of the tablets which contain the Ten Commandments. The background, which is a black sky, is disrupted by purple and brown clouds. The only written words are "building on the past," which appears directly above geese being led to an ominous destination.

What stands out the most in "Ceiling Fragment" is the bold red paint which dripped, providing for a realistic effect. There is aiso the outline of a canine, along with two men, one of which is toting a rifle.

"Selirot," which appears on wood, is broken into three circled segments. In the first, the face of a girl is tipped to the side, seemingly jubilant, and leading into the next. This circle is an image of the same girl, yet the expression has changed. It's more stoic, more vague, and the head is otf- center, which adds to the confusion. It seems as if she's misunderstanding what she's watching happen. The last image of this girl, the most charged of the three, is of her glaring straight at the viewer.

In "The Assumption of Reb Meshulam Moskat," the presence of a man in the lower left cannot be ignored. He is fully-bearded, with black-rounded spectacles, wearing a black top hat and a black trench coat. The mood portrayed is very somber, as his perplexed expression stares straight back.

In the painting entitled "God Creates the Animals", the most writing appears. It reads "now nothing could ever happen good and pure enough to rub out our past, and that the scars of the outrage would remain in us forever and in the memory of those who saw it and in the places where it occurred..." The rest of the writing is overtly present, yet illegible, and reminds us it is there, but not understood. A fiercely gazing individual is vaguely apparent, colored in blue.

On the whole, the exhibit is rousing. It displays a bitter awareness, defying any nihilistic alibis. As stated, it takes more than a glance for this to prove its point.

The Student Union Gallery is open Monday–Friday, 11 a.m.–4 p.m. This exhibit will be on display through March 11.

Pavement delivers pop potential

By MATT AUDETTE

Pavement
Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain
Matador Records

There has always been an underlying pop sensibility to Pavement's music. From their early days on the underground label Drag City to 1991's alternative smash Slanted And Enchanted one could not help but feel that beneath all the noise and clever obscuring tricks was a pop band just screaming to be heard. This is why it is hard not to notice the irony when lead singer Steve Malkmus softly croons "It's a brand new era/ it feels great" on "Newark Wilder" the fifth track from the band's newest release Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain. It just may be that after four years of being alternative music's poster boys for "slackerness," the band has finally decided to reluctantly follow its counter-

Shopping highs & woes

He said: divine revenge for remote control crimes

By CUTTER GARCIA
Collegian Staff

When I was a boy and began getting involved in common youthful mischiefs such as fireworks, smoking cigarettes or abandoning my seven-year-old sister on an elevator while yelling through the door that she was going to fall and die (God, that's a good one. The folks on the seventh floor of Framingham Union Hospital still to this day talk about the blood curdling screams!), my mother always had the perfect punishment ready.

She'd take me shopping.

This is a castigation inflicted upon men by women since the beginning of time which the men have never been smart enough to figure a way out of (the closest we've come is to design food courts in the mall with convenient news stands nearby). It's the ultimate revenge, this shopping thing, for the power we have over the remote control. So the whole time we're sitting around channel surfing in the hopes of finding a great tractor pull on TNN or a double shot of "Acapulco H.E.A.T." and "Babewatch," they're leafing through the Sunday supplements and smiling every time they see the magical words: White Sale.

With men shopping is a simple event. If we need a new shirt and a pair of pants we have a very economical process which we use to obtain these items. We drive to the mall, go into a store we like; a store which we've visited many times before and have developed a very satisfying and mutually beneficial relationship with, we pick out what we want, we pay for it and then we're done — leaving us more than enough time to stop off at Taco Bell and order some soft chicken tacos for the ride home.

But with women this simple act of commerce becomes more of an art form than anything. A sick, twisted, self- mutilating practice in which the more important objective is to survive than to actually achieve purchase.

When a woman enters the mecca so affectionately known to her kind as The Mall, she undergoes an interesting metamorphosis which sociologists have been trying to explain for years. At first her eyes glaze over and she gets that thousand-yard stare so commonly associated with heroin addicts. Then her mouth becomes slick with a glistening sheen of saliva

She said: Social studies in a creative environment

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

I remember a time when the mall was not only a place to shop; it was a social outlet — a way of life. I admit, abashedly, that I was no stranger to the mall scene; heck, it was old hat to me before I could even drive myself there.

Shopping then was not simply a matter of buying albums, chewing gum, shirts and shoes, but an activity for the pre– pubescent masses that granted interaction amongst peers otherwise restricted to the Junior High School cafeteria.

As time went on, shopping evolved into an art form, of sorts, and less of a bonding experience. Mall rats surfaced as annoying little jerks who had nothing better to do than play the dating game by the plastic plants outside of the GAP, and the word "sale" became a trigger for major credit card usage.

Since my arrival on the "poor college student" scene three years ago, my urge to shop has been curbed significantly. I can't even entirely blame this lack of inspiration to spend on lack of funds; the art of shopping has definitely lost its appeal, regardless. My usual mind frame when shopping is relatively pleasant; I can appreciate the nice displays and slick coordinated outfits on the walls of stores and on the plastic models, but in terms of actually putting something on my body, my appreciation pretty much ends.

There are, however, a few lessons I have learned from lots of experience from before my anti–shopping days that goes to show what a complex phenomenon consumerism is.

First of all, it's important to carefully select the people with whom you are going to shop, if you're feeling courageous and pretty good about your physical appearance, you shop with honest friends. I have been lucky in that my friends are usually tactful, opting to say things like, "Well, maybe that look is not the most flattering for your lack of height," rather than, "Oh man, that sweater makes you look like a DWARF, take it off before someone sees you!"

If you are feeling decidedly unappealing, it's probably not smart to venture out on a shopping crusade with someone with a better disposition than you. I can recall a few instances that friends of mine have pranced around the dressing room, loving whatever it was that they were trying on, while I slumped in the corner of the stall in grimy jeans and a tee shirt, holding myself back from making some obnoxious comment about them looking like a dwarf.

I'm not claiming that shopping is like this for all women, but I would agree that selecting clothes and other personal items is often a thought/time consuming process, as we use these things to express and present to others the way we feel on a given day.

Creative license is one of our greatest gifts (for men and women) and despite what he may say, we all care about the way we look and feel. Shopping is a great way to utilize this creativity and experiment with different looks and modes of expression.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Accept a challenge that could improve your relationship with a co–worker. Socialize only with those who are cheerful and constructive. A quiet supper at home can be as romantic as dining out.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Getting rid of certain possessions now would be a mistake. Try to think of another way to achieve your aims. Facing a problem head–on will help you solve it in record time.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Facts can smooth out the kinks in a difficult work relationship. Amiable and creative efforts are favored. Keep your own counsel in money and business matters.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Your natural confidence zooms now. Thoughtful people everywhere are becoming aware of the need for reform. Groups and individuals will take positive action; you benefit.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Take your time today. Haste could make waste if you rush an important job. A close friend may need a sympathetic ear. A fast–minute dinner invitation will make you very popular.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Current limitations can be overcome if you make a bold move. Explain to someone in a position to help you exactly what needs to be done. Your daring do attracts new admirers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Money is on your mind. A flash of inspiration shows you how to put your ideas across forcefully and effectively. Friends and family members are supportive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A thorny financial problem should be discussed with a loved one. Legal commitments cannot be ignored. Avoid acting in haste. Negotiate from a position of strength when buying or selling.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Someone on the sidelines could let you in on a promising financial venture. Decisions given you additional bargaining power. Children add a special joy to your personal life. Let them know you care.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Been in a rut too long? Welcome an unexpected chance to break out of it. Your personal magnetism makes you a hit at parties. Socializing could play an important role in your business accounts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Someone may try to muddy the waters at work. Tracing a rumor to its source may be impossible. Do not let vague fears cause idleness.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Get an early start today if hoping to complete an assignment before the weekend. Certain people may be difficult to reach by phone. Send a short note asking for an immediate reply.

which will soon be replaced with the blood of rookie shoppers drawn forth from their virgin necks by the razor sharp fangs she keeps hidden for the occasion.

And after her day of tyranny is complete, she will be more than willing to travel for hours in order to get to another mall three states away due to the fact that she heard a rumor (communicated to her psychically from the other female raptors in attendance) about a one day sale at the Limited where she can save $1.25 on a top or bottom. The very same top or bottom which she'll wear once and then banish to the limbo land she calls, "the back of the closet", because she thinks it makes her butt look fat.

By the way, Emily's looking for an apartment with bigger closets. Heh, heh, heh.

■ Pavement

parts (i.e. The Breeders, R.E.M.) into the big time.

With Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain the band has finally ditched the "lo–fi" static sound that permeated their early releases. This in no way means the band has sold–out (though I'm sure indie–purists will turn their stodgy noses in the air), but rather have cleaned–up their sound, shedding some of the artsy gimmicks which once bogged the music down. Malkmus still sings like a nervous schoolboy, but while in the past his lyrics were somewhat obscured and nonsensical, they now sound more self–assured and confident. Tracks such as "Stop Breathin'" and "Gold Soundz" reveal a sensitive songwriter finally living up to his potential.

Because of this more direct approach to their music Pavement have created an album full of "pop" songs in the truest sense of the word. The lead track "Silent Kit" sputters and spurts along before kicking into high gear and taking us on a journey through the last forty years of rock n' roll. The first single "Cut Your Hair", which may be the silliest song the band has recorded, happily bounces along, complete with "doo doo doo" chorus and good–feeling lyrics, making it a sure contender for the coveted "Buzz Bin" slot on MTV.

The strangest moment on the album is when the band decides to abandon their trademark squealing guitars and takes a stab at a country–fried ballad on the track "Range Life." The song wistfully rambles on like Soul Asylum's evil twin brother, while Malkmus casually disses alternative mega–stars Smashing Pumpkins and Stone Temple Pilots.

While it may be to early to predict whether or not Pavement will be the next R.E.M. or Nirvana, it is obvious that they can no longer hide from the spotlight. By taking the best elements of alternative music the band has created a unique sound which challenges the listener but at the same time is accessible in its own right. While Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain may not be as interesting or mysterious as their previous releases and it does hit some rough spots towards the end, it is an excellent document of a band maturing and heading in new directions. Thus proving that whether they like it or not Pavement may just be rock's next reluctant heroes. A–

Home win streak on the line

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

March Madness will be on the minds of many in the William D. Mullins Center this evening, not the madness of the post–season, though, because tonight's men's basketball game between Duquesne and Massachusetts is of the regular season variety.

The No. 11 Minutemen (23–6, 13–2 Atlantic 10) have already sewn up the number one seed in the Atlantic 10 tournament after splitting their last two road contests — a victory in Philadelphia over then–No. 8 Temple and a loss down in the nation's capital against George Washington. Coach John Calipari's Massachusetts club clinched its third straight regular season A–10 crown with the win over the second–place Owls, making history as the first ever team to accomplish the feat.

But for the Dukes, who returned to the A–10 this season after a one–year departure, this regular season finale has major implications for their eventual seed in the conference tournament which begins this Saturday with the eighth–ninth place game.

Duquesne (15–10, 8–7 A–10) sits knotted in third place with West Virginia and GW; all teams that will be in action tonight (West Virginia hosts St. Joseph's and GW travels to Rhode Island) to decide who gets the crucial three seed and the right to face the number six seed, probably Rhode Island. The remaining two squads battle each other this Sunday in another quarterfinal.

The last time the Minutemen and the Dukes met was in January in Pittsburgh; Massachusetts won easily, 70–53, despite the Dukes' ability to get Minuteman forward Lou Roe in immediate foul trouble and force him to the bench for a majority of the first half. Roe had three fouls at both whistles, the one at halftime and the final one to end the game.

Freshman Marcus Camby was able to step up in Roe's absence, scoring 12 points, blocking three shots and grabbing five rebounds. His performance in the A.J. Palumbo Center was highlighted by a spectacular dunk from the foul line — off a lob on an inbounds play.

Tonight is Craig Berry Night for the Massachusetts men's basketball team in the Mullins Center as the Minutemen take on Duquesne at 7 p.m. Well, it's really Senior Night, but since Berry (pictured, No. 11) is the lone senior; you figure it out.

Duquesne's Derrick Alston, who leads the A–10 in scoring (21.6 points per game) and is one of the favorites to win the conference's player of the year honor, tallied 20 points the last time the two teams met on 8–of–15 shooting.

Speaking of the A–10 post–season awards, the freshman of the year award should come down to two players — Camby and Duquesne's Tom Pipkins. Pipkins averages 14.7 ppg to be listed among the league leaders; Camby leads the A–10 in blocked shots (91) and is listed among the conference leaders in rebounding (6.3 per game).

Tonight is Senior Night for the Minutemen and as usual, Calipari will honor his lone senior, Craig Berry, by starting the guard against the Dukes. He said he will play Berry as much as he can, which means if its close, it may not be much. Berry walked–on to the 1992–93 Minutemen and has been able to stick around ever since.

Minutewomen bow in NJ

Lady Knights' prevails with second–half surge

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, down by just 2 at halftime, was outscored by 20 points in losing to Rutgers 88–66 on Monday night.

The Minutewomen (11–12, 5–8 in Atlantic 10) dropped below the .500 mark for the first time since the season–opening loss to Ohio State.

Four Lady Knights finished in double–figures, led by senior Caroline DeRoose's 30 points. The scoring punch mainly came from the second half effort, as the Lady Knights shot an astounding 73.1 percent from the field on 19–26 shooting.

After the intermission, the Minutewomen tied the contest 38–38 on a basket by sophomore Octavia Thomas, who led UMass with 21 points and 9 rebounds.

From there, it was all Rutgers (17–6, 11–2 in A–10). The Lady Knights went on a 26–9 run to open a 64–47 lead midway through the second half and never looked back.

In the first half, Rutgers jumped out to a 14–4 advantage, yet the Minutewomen came roaring back, cutting the lead to five at 20–15 on a Thomas basket. The Lady Knights extended their lead to 10 points on two occasions, first at 25–15 and then at 30–20.

UMass then cut another Rutgers lead, this time to two points, 32–30 as freshman Crystal Carroll banked in a 75– foot shot at the buzzer. The long shot was Carroll's first three–pointer of her collegiate career.

Carroll was the only other Minutewomen in double– figures, as she finished with 13. For the Lady Knights, Liz Hanson scored 17 points and had 10 assists, Janell Williams had 12, and Amy Reynders chipped in with 10.

Turnovers have plagued the Minutewomen all season, and Monday night was no different, as they totaled 30. The Minutewomen did out rebound Rutgers 34–26, including 5 rebounds from senior reserve Francie Hansen.

The Minutewomen return to action on Thursday, Mar. 3 when they host St. Bonaventure in a 7 p.m. game at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Spanning the pre–Madness NCAA world

This is my last chance to hold court before Selection Sunday and I've got a lot on my mind:

• Do you think Michael Vega of The Boston Globe likes Boston College or what? When was the last time you saw a sports writer refer to a player by his nickname like Gerrod Abram ("G–Force") or Donya Abrams ("Baby Barkley")?

Last time I can remember, it was a player named Magic.

• When Wake Forest makes the Big Dance, I have the sneaky suspicion that the entire nation will find out who Randolph Childress is. Ask Mike Krzyzewski, he knows who he is.

• Vanderbilt's Heidi Gillingham was one of five finalists for Player of the Year honors. Excuse me, I saw her play here in Mullins and she's not that good. If there's any justice, Lisa Leslie of Southern Cal will win it hands down.

Holding Court NCAA
Sean P. Hayden on NCAA Basketball

• Pennsylvania has long been known as a factory for good college quarterbacks. Kelly, Montana, Namath.

It's about time people start saying the same thing about Massachusetts and point guards.

Let's see, Rumeal, Travis Best, Rick Brunson, our own Derek Kellogg and Edgar Padilla — I'll stack those five against any five another state could put out there.

And there's another one on the way — his name is Wayne Turner, write it down.

• With no post–season tournament, Michigan is a lock in the Big 10 and the No. 1 seed in the Midwest. They better do something this year or people may confuse them with the Buffalo Bills.

• I hear how all these small potato conferences are griping about how only the conference champion gets an invite to the tournament and how hard it is for the other schools to take their programs to the next level if they are constantly discriminated against.

When was the last time one of your schools won the whole thing or even made the Final Four? You're not there because you just ain't good enough. Oh yeah, I forgot about UNLV. But now that they have a halfway honest coach, look at them. The Santa Claras and Santa Barabaras of the world are getting their revenge against the one–time mighty Runnin' Rebs and lovin' every minute of it.

• March Madness means more games on TV, which means more games on CBS, which means more Al McGuire, which makes me happy.

There is no better basketball man on TV than Al McGuire. None.

• I'm a disgruntled Friar fan. Ho, ho, ho, Rick Barnes has got to go. And he probably will — to Clemson.

Barnes has the players in Abdullah, Smith, Brown and Williams. Flat out, he's just a lousy coach and anyone who watches them knows he absolutely blew the UConn game awhile back. A win there and they might at least be on the bubble.

• Classic late–season lapse by the Hoosiers. Coach Knight is going to moan and wail about how bad his team is heading into the tournament, and how they couldn't beat Roanoke Dog Grooming School and then they'll make the Final Eight.

I've seen it before, Coach.

Women's track outstanding at championships

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team had three Minutewomen place second and, as a team, finished fourth overall at the New England Championships this past weekend at the University of Rhode Island.

"I thought that the team did an outstanding job," said Coach Julie LaFreniere.

The Minutewomen scored a total of 46 points while the University of Connecticut won the meet with a total of 165 points. Northeastern came in second with 101 points and Boston College placed third with 89. UMass placed ahead of 15 other teams.

Freshman Anya Forrest came in a close second to BC's Andrea Melton in the 55m hurdles. Melton ran a time of 8.32 while Forrest ran a 8.34, just two one–hundredth of a second off. That finish, according to her coach, was unbelievable considering that this was only her second meet of the season.

"She shot out of those blocks like a cannonball," said LaFreniere. "She was the first one over the hurdles."

Junior Kristin Diggs also was competing in only her second meet of the season and performed superb. Diggs placed second overall in the 3000m with a time of 9:57.55. Freshman Erica Doyle was the third Minutewomen to place second. In the 400m she ran a time of 58.05 which was her best this season.

UMass also had two third–place finishes, one in the distance medley relay and the other by Megan O'Neill in the Pentathlon. O'Neill needed 3,200 points to qualify for ECACs but just missed it accumulating 3,108 total points.

The distant medley relay team finished behind BC (who set the New England Championship record with a time of 12:27.73) and Springfield.

"The distant medley relay did a really nice job," said LaFreniere. "I was very pleased with that group."

Another finisher for the Minutewomen was Katie Greenia in the 5000m who finished fourth with a time of 17:59.57 which was a personal record for her.

"She [Greenia] did a really nice job," said LaFreniere.

The 4x4 relay team, consisting of Kerry Aker, O'Neill, Doyle, and Janey Meeks; also placed fourth behind BC, UMass–Lowell, and Northeastern, but ahead of powerhouse UConn with a time of 4:02.21. Meeks also participated in the triple jump and ended up in fourth place with a jump of 38.9 feet. UMass had two fifth place finishers in Jen Waeger in the 1000m with a time of 2:56.83 and Kim Liljeblad in the Mile run with a time of 5:05.29. Liljeblad's time was also a personal record.

"The mile is always great competition in New England, its very tough, it's one of the toughest areas in the country for the mile. For her [Liljeblad] to place fifth was great," said LaFreniere.

Sophomore Christie Martin placed seventh in the 20lb weight but broke the school record.

For most of the Minutewomen the New Englands were the end of their season but for Diggs, Forrest, Hart, Martin, Meeks, Waeger and the distant medley relay team of Aker, Doyle, Waeger and Liljeblad; their season goes on. The ECACs are this weekend at Yale University.

Men's swim team goes after ECAC title tomorrow

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

The date on the calendar that has been highlighted since day one for the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team has been March 3, the start of the ECAC Championships.

The Minutemen have recorded an undefeated season and another New England Championship but would like nothing more than a strong showing this weekend.

"Everything builds to this meet," Yarworth said. "This is what swimming is all about. I'm ready to see us put it all together."

The ECAC Championships begin tomorrow at Rutgers University and run through Saturday.

New to the world of collegiate swimming, the ECAC Championships enter its third year. The past two years have seen the Minutemen neither improve or digress in the final team standings. They have finished third two consecutive years.

Yarworth said he expects his team to claim a position in the top five and though a victory may be stretching things, he won't rule it out.

"It's a long shot but anything can happen," Yarworth said. "You expect the kids to swim out of their heads."

There will be 36 teams competing in this year's championships, up from 21 a year ago. The front–runners for the team title figure to be James Madison and Lasalle but any number of teams, including UMass, could take the top spot. Included in that category are George Washington, Rutgers, Buffalo, and old UMass nemesis Connecticut.

The field for the championships will be the toughest field that the Minutemen have faced all season. Yarworth believes his team is ready to handle the competition.

"It will be our toughest competition all year," Yarworth said. "We're ready to compete at the next level."

Several times during the season the Minutemen have had to come from behind for victory and Yarworth doesn't see the competition as being intimidating.

"We find a way to do things," Yarworth said.

Whether the Minutemen are successful or not at the ECAC Championships will depend on the entire team performance. If UMass pins its hopes on the backs of a small group of swimmers, all the preparation for this meet will be for not. A strong performance from the entire team will be needed to achieve that top five finish.

"I expect the whole team to perform well," Yarworth said. "Our success hinges on team performance."

NCAA speaks with Black Coaches Assoc.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Black Coaches Association and the NCAA, with an assist from federal mediators, finally began talking to each other Tuesday night.

The two sides spoke by conference call for 2 1/2 hours, although none of the participants would say what was discussed.

"The parties had a frank exchange of views and planned to schedule another session to continue the talks," said Ron Tomalis of the Justice Department's Community Relations Service, which is mediating the dispute.

Taking part in the conference were four of the nation's top black coaches, five NCAA leaders and three mediators. The NCAA and the BCA twice tried to meet face to face but were unable to do so because of the Olympics and scheduling conflicts.

The coaches threatened in January to disrupt Division I–A games to protest higher academic eligibility standards and reduced scholarships. The NCAA's rules on academics, scholarships and other grievances by the coaches cannot be changed until its convention next January.

SGA considers plan for line item budget

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association discussed plans to propose that the University of Massachusetts budget be changed to a line item budget.

The proposal to change the structure of the budget came in reaction to comments made by UMass president Michael Hooker at a Faculty Senate meeting on Feb. 17.

Hooker said a three percent tuition and fee increase might be needed to offset costs from the current three percent rate of inflation, as was reported in the Chronicle. Hooker said this after Chancellor David K. Scott promised the students that he would work in the state legislature for a zero percent tuition and fee increase.

"I am very disheartened that Michael Hooker does not support us on a zero percent tuition and fee increase," said Matthew Pavesi, Undergraduate Student Speaker. "And I am especially disheartened that he is not going for a bigger increase than inflation in state appropriations for the five UMass colleges."

"What he is saying is that he is only going to ask for three percent from the state," Pavesi said. "That's great Mike, we are eight million dollars in the hole already."

The state budget for UMass Amherst is included with the budgets for Dartmouth, Worcester, Boston and Lowell. Last year, $311 million was given for the five UMass colleges. The money is not given directly to the campuses. The money goes to the President's office and to the Board of Trustees. Hooker's staff allocates it out to the campuses.

"Hooker took five percent for mission enhancement, he took some for his own initiatives, etc.," Pavesi said. "And by that time Amherst was eight million dollars in the hole when it was all said and done."

SGA wants to take Hooker out of the budget decision by changing it to a line item budget. As a line item the state would give money for the budget directly to the Chancellor David K. Scott, who would then allocate it to different areas on campus.

"Some members of the Statehouse don't like the fact that [Hooker] has control of their money," Pavesi said. "So if we go for a separate line item, meaning Amherst would get say $150 million, Lowell would get it's share separately, then the president's office won't control it."

Another of SGA's reasons for wanting to change the school's budget to a line item is that it feels that Hooker doesn't know what areas need money or even how much money is really needed, because he doesn't work on campus.

"[Hooker] doesn't know, he is not in touch with the campus." Pavesi said. "So he doesn't know what an individual campus needs. If he knew i would hope he wouldn't have taken the money for mission enhancement away from us last year."

SGA feels the University would benefit from a line item budget because the statehouse realizes that Amherst is the flagship of all the UMass campuses, according to Pavesi.

"The statehouse would know that Amherst is the flagship, the jewel of public education, the basketball team, Nobel Prize winners, etc.," Pavesi said. "They would give more money to Amherst."

Snow takes toll on campus

Another storm?

More snow further pushing back the arrival of spring. Television stations repeatedly interrupting the soap operas in order to give an update on the extra inch that has come down. And yet another day of dialing 545–3630 every minute with the hope that classes are cancelled.

Last year the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant used 1200 tons of sand during the winter season. This year, they have tripled that amount with over 2500 tons.

Albert Potter, from the ground services of the physical plant, said there has been ice all over the entire campus.

He also said fortunately there haven't been any major accidents or problems so far and that every area on campus has been equally icy. Potter said there are people working all over the campus to ensure safety.

"We have used a great deal of sand so far, and we are still buying. The winter is not over yet," he said.

The National Weather Service said there has been approximately 81.5 inches of snow at Logan Airport in Boston.

Between Thursday and Friday, Western Massachusetts is expecting up to 12 inches of snow. There are also warnings of strong winds, sleet and ice.

The impending storm will be a deja–vu experience for New Englanders.

Students protest to rename library

Petition to change title circulating

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

At a time when the issue of equality between the races is major concern, students are asking the University to name the Tower Library after educator and scholar W.E.B. DuBois.

Approximately 40 students were in attendance at a rally yesterday on the Student Union steps to listen to speakers talk about the life of DuBois, reasons why the Tower Library should be named after him, and the state of the quality of education on this campus.

W.E.B. DuBois was a leader of the African–American community, a Pan–Africanist, activist, organizer, writer, journalist, publisher and poet. The Tower Library hold 120,000 documents written by DuBois donated by his widow.

"We have an opportunity to name a building of significant importance after a man that did a lot of great things for people of color during his lifetime," said David Nunez, president of the Student Government Association.

The debate is centered around a policy decided on by the Board of Trustees late last semester. The policy said that a large donation of money would be a main qualification for naming a building after a person, but not the only one.

"I think that the trustees' policy on having to have a lot of money donated to name a building is racist and classist," said Nunez.

The tone of the rally was disappointment in the University about the lack of diversity on this campus.

"If this university is so dedicated to multiculturalism, wouldn't it just be simple to name that building the W.E.B. DuBois Library?" Nunez said.

The students voiced other concerns including asking the university to increase the availability of scholarships for economically disadvantaged students. The students are also asking that the university keeps the pledge made to the African American, Asian American and Native American students in the Fall of 1992 by increasing the enrollment of ALANA student to 20 percent.

SCERA coordinator hopes to empower

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

If junior Mirran Raphaely is elected to the position of University of Massachusetts Student Government Association president, he will make it her business to empower students by working on the problems that they see as most important.

Raphaely, an SGA senator who represents commuters, said she plans to take the SGA's efforts to empower students to the next level.

"The current [SGA] administration has redefined a notion of student empowerment on campus," Raphaely said. "I've been a part of it, and I'd like to take the notion of student empowerment to new heights."

Raphaely is the issues coordinator for a the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy, a group within the SGA responsible for planning grass roots campaigns and informing the campus about important issues. She said because of her work with SCERA, all of the candidates know that University tuition and fees have risen 167 percent since 1988.

Raphaely has been knocking on the doors of students for the past month for an average of four to five hours a night to find out what students are most concerned with. She said as president, she will continue to listen to the students' concerns.

"I feel strongly about not telling students what issues affect them but listening to them to find out what the issues are," she said. "Door knocking doesn't end when the election ends. I will certainly vow to continue to door knock so I can see how the students feel. I am determined to have consistent feedback from the people who elect me.

U.N. cease–fire broken; bombs provoke fear

By SRECKO LATAL
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs launched three rocket–propelled grenades Wednesday at government troops in Sarajevo, prompting a gunbattle that violated the U.N. cease–fire and raised fears that the city's recent calm will shatter. The skirmish around the Jewish cemetery in downtown Sarajevo ended after the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, threatened to send in British U.N. troops, said U.N. officials speaking on condition of anonymity. No casualties were immediately reported.

Elsewhere, Serbs pounded two Muslim enclaves and continued to block relief convoys — despite their encouraging promise a day earlier to open an airport in the region to relief flights. In the capital region, Serb artillery also fired Tuesday on the Muslim town of Breza, just north of Sarajevo, said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Bill Aikman.

While the Breza and Sarajevo attacks clearly breached the 3–week–old U.N. cease–fire, they were apparently not serious enough to trigger a NATO air strike under the alliance's Feb. 9 ultimatum. Grenade–launchers were not listed among the heavy weapons that had to be removed from a 13–mile radius around Sarajevo, and Breza is outside the zone.

U.N. officials quoted Serbs as saying they fired the grenades because Musiim–led government forces were violating the cease–fire themselves by reinforcing their trenches. The United Nations had reported government forces were doing so last week.

Russian troops are in the Jewish Cemetery on the Serb side, french soldiers are on the Bosnian side, and "tensions are certainly increased in that area," Aikman said.

Problems with aid convoys also continued. Serb, Muslim and Croat leaders all have signed accords pledging free passage for aid convoys, but they have been ignored repeatedly, especially by Serb commanders.

U.N. officials had suggested they would get tough with Serbs to ensure smooth movement of relief convoys, but two of them remained stranded Wednesday.

Kris Janowski, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Sarajevo, said a convoy for Sarajevo, blocked since Monday by Serb women, was still stuck at Hadzici, 10 miles from the capital.

Nancy Kerrigan is old news

The Olympics are finally over. To me, that says no more Nancy Kerrigan, no more Tonya Harding, no more injuries at Wounded Knee. Maybe we can get on with our lives and maybe the ice queens can become a faded memory.

But I doubt that. I had enough with the Olympics when the New York Times ran a picture the size of Manhattan of Nancy Kerrigan on the front page with a picture of Bonnie Blair alongside that I could fit into my wallet.

The Boston Globe did the same thing, but Bonnie Blair got a little note that said she'd become the first woman from the United States to win five gold medals.

Bonnie Blair is on a U.S. stamp.

Is it me, or would coverage of someone making Olympic history with a record number of medals supersede someone else just placing first in the technical trials? Kerrigan hadn't even won a medal yet, but Blair had made history. If I were Bonnie Blair, I would not be amused right now. At least Sports Illustrated had her on the cover last week. The woman deserves more recognition than what she has been getting.

I am not Bonnie Blair, and I am not amused. Kerrigan displayed the worst sportsmanship on the front page of the Globe after the medal ceremony. "I skated clean, Oksana didn't skate clean," she said. She sounded like a whining sixth grader when she didn't win first prize in the science fair.

Obviously, Kerrigan knows more than an expert panel from around the world, handpicked for the job, and Nancy's parents know more than all of them — they have been talking about their skating expertise to every major paper in the United States for the past week.

So Kerrigan is upset about winning the silver. She overcame an Incredible injury that she recovered from in 48 hours. I am sure after the $750,000 contract with Revlon and the multi-million dollar contracts with Campbell Soup and Disney, Kerrigan can pat her knee and cry all the way to the bank.

It seems like the media needs to have a play toy. First it was Lorena Bobbitt, then it became Kerrigan and Harding.

Catherine B. Pulley

And poor Tonya Harding. That woman was convicted long before she was even tried, and still no formal charges have been made against her. If I see one more tabloid program or magazine with statements like "I forgive her" on the front, I think I am going to get sick. I am sure Tonya is crying over that "broken skate" all the way to the bank, too. She has a book coming out, and a layout in Playboy. I'll bet that she sent a thank-you note to her ex-husband for making her a rich woman, too.

It seems like the media needs to have a play toy. First it was Lorena Bobbitt, then it became Kerrigan and Harding. Bosnia and Whitewater were placed on the back burner so two catty women could fight it out on the ice.

A grand jury was convened to investigate the Whitewater scandal, and the six o'clock news highlights Kerrigan and Harding's practice to see if they exchanged words. Do we have our priorities straight? You know something is blown out of proportion when David Letterman comments on it.

Let's all get back to our normal lives. Supermarket tabloids are no longer comparable to major newspapers as we settle back into the mainstream. I am going to find it difficult to boycott Disney, though...

Fighting lewd phone calls

I've been violated. I wasn't raped, I wasn't beaten, but I was taken advantage of and I couldn't avoid it. On Sunday morning, I woke to the sound of my phone ringing. I picked up and the conversation sounded something like this:

Hello?
Hello, is this Marni?
Yes it is — may I ask who is calling?
I'm sorry I'm calling so early, but are you going away for spring break?
Yes, I am, who is calling?
So you're going away for spring break?
Yes, of course I am — are you calling from a travel agency?
Would you like to make some extra cash?
Who is this? Where did you get my number?
Would you like to have some extra cash for spring break?
Yes, who wouldn't — wait a minute, how would I earn the money?
You want to earn some extra cash?
Yes, I guess so.
Well that's good.
Who is this? How did you get my number?
It was completely random — my name is Barry. You do want to make some money, right?
How would I earn it?
That's better, relax, don't be so eager to condemn me.
How would I earn it?
You would just have to talk to me for a while.
Nope. Click. (That's when I hung up.)

I was scared. I was cool on the phone; I only answered the questions because I thought it was someone trying to sell me a trip for vacation, and then I thought it was someone soliciting me to telemarket. I started to get more and more scared as the call went along, and when he said I had to talk to him I knew that the call was not legitimate.

After i hung up the phone, fear finally hit me and I started to cry. I was hysterical, and I couldn't stop thinking, "This creep knows my name and my phone number and, for that matter, he probably knows where I live." The fear of attack, the fear of a stranger, wound its way around me like a chest cold, stifling me and making me uncomfortable.

Through the tears I managed to think long enough to realize that I needed to call someone and report it. I didn't know who to call, so I just dialed zero for the operator, and she said she would have the police call me. About two minutes later, my phone rang, and I was actually afraid to pick up the phone. I thought it was that slimeball again.

It was the police, though, and the dispatcher asked me what happened, told me to relax and calm down; she said that I would need to file a report. She then asked me if I would rather have a police officer come to my room or go to the station myself. I said I would come down to the station. I just didn't feel safe with a man at that moment — even if the man was a police officer.

I was still crying, and I started shaking as I got changed out of my PJ's. I felt like I was being watched by someone who knew who I was, but that I didn't know. I woke up a friend and asked him to go down to the police station with me. He asked me what was wrong, and I said I didn't want to talk about it. Thank goodness he understood, and didn't take offense at it.

He drove me to the police station. A policewoman came and took a report of what happened. She reassured me that it was rare for anything else to happen in these cases, and explained that if I continued to get phone calls from this man, they could place a trace on my phone. She also said I could change my phone number and get it unlisted if I wanted. She stressed that I not let this change my life.

Marni E. Helfner

Unfortunately, it was too late. I already felt violated. All I wanted to do was either crawl into my bed and be alone, or be around lots of people where I could feel safe. It's hard to explain, but I kind of feel dirty. After this and other things, I just don't feel safe anymore. I won't live in fear, but it's hard not to. I'm not going to change my phone number, or make it unlisted. I'm going to take action. I'm going to enroll in a self-defense class, and I'm going to buy a stun-gun. It sounds extreme, but it's the way I feel.

I asked around, and it seems that the guy who called me has done it to others. One of the women I lived with over intersession got a similar phone call, and hung up when he told her that he was wheelchair-bound. She said he sounded creepy. When she told me, I thought nothing of it. Now it sounds all too familiar. A classmate said she got four or five calls almost identical to my housemate's before he stopped.

I tried to think about what kind of man would call a woman up and offer her money to talk to him. The image I got was of someone who is so in need of attention and power that he would take advantage of unsuspecting women over the phone. Any man who does that is not a real man.

I urge everyone who reads this to recognize the effects that prank or obscene phone calls have on the victim. It makes you feel unsafe, that someone is watching you. They can steal away your safety — even if you're perfectly safe. To anyone who has been a victim of this man or receives any prank phone call, do not hesitate to call and make a report, even if it's only one. The people who make these calls are the worst kind of people. They know that you're afraid, and they hope you won't do anything. Prove them wrong. Call the police, take a course in self defense, tell that prank caller exactly what you're going to do to him.

Please, I urge you. No one, I mean no one, should have to walk around afraid. I know I am, and I don't want anyone else to feel the way I do.

Revelation in the deep South

A few weeks ago I took a trip to the land of ladies and gentlemen, chivalry and sexism. A friend who I hadn't seen in two years goes to school down there. I felt like I had entered the equivalent of the Twilight Zone. It was a reflection of my immersion in "liberal" thought, my "Northerness," my attempt to deny the existence of ultra-conservatives. I had been to the deep South before, but this particular trip had a profound impact on me.

Like most people who have not lived outside of New England for any length of time, I have my preconceived notions about the rest of the United States. However, I was not prepared to meet those stereotypes head on. My vision of the South was similar to that of Gone with the Wind — Southern belles, blatant racism and extreme class divisions. I had expected to have my stereotypes challenged, blasted away, but my experiences only confirmed them.

Joy Collins

I have always felt relatively free to voice my opinion, especially to people my own age. It gets more complicated with generation gaps and the like. For example, I never felt free to discuss politics with my grandparents, or abortion rights with my cousin, who's a priest. However, I'd never felt uncomfortable speaking with other college students or people who were forming or reforming their ideas about the world, until my little adventure.

It did not take long for me to begin a political discussion with my friend's roommate. We had similar majors, both related to political economy. She, like me, was amazed that no one had organized protest rallies on her campus when David Duke was running for governor. I assumed our views would be similar. I assumed her political status. I was mistaken. I had generalized, used the word conservative in a way that offended her. Perhaps what I meant to say was ultra-conservative, she said.

It was important for me to have been reminded that not all college students think alike. It tends to get very ideologically comfortable around here. I do not mean to imply that dissent does not exist on this campus — surely that is a farce. But, there is a sense of support on this campus for "liberal" and progressive ideology, a support I do not think would have been found on this Southern campus.

My next encounter with my friend's acquaintances was just downright disturbing. I had been forewarned not to discuss "issues" with these people, but I could not help myself. In a matter of minutes, I had become the token "liberal," a communist, a feminist, a Democrat. Apparently, they were as surprised by my ideas as I was by theirs.

One guy started to explain to me that he had grown up in a small town of about 4,000 people where his family was one of three white families. He could not understand why people kept talking about race — what's the big deal, he said, why does it matter? Later on, I saw his car — a brand new, cherry red sportscar, the fruits of a racist mentality.

I never thought of New England as a unique place. It never really occurred to me that other parts of the country would feel so entirely foreign to me. I was "New England-centric." But I have never felt more categorized and isolated as I did for those few days in the South.

My friend was in a sorority at her school. We began to discuss the rush process. She told me about how some of the sororities still want to know how much money your father makes, what kind of organizations your mother belongs to and how many generations your wealth extends through. I was baffled by the blatancy, being so used to the more covert forms of racism, sexism and classism in the North.

It was an experience, this trip into the deep South. It was a wake-up call for me. I have found people here at UMass who have values similar to mine, people who will support my ideas as I support theirs. Granted, there are plenty of people on this campus who are racist, sexist, heterosexist and classist — no argument there. But, there are also people here who fight against such things, who make some effort not to accept these ideas as truth.

I have been cushioned by these voices of dissent. I had forgotten that there are campuses where the overwhelming majority will not fight against or even flinch about covert or blatant racism, sexism, hetero-sexism or classism. It was a frightening realization for me, but a great reminder that there is an enormous amount of work left to do before this country can even fathom any notion of true equality.

Angered by hypocrisy of UMass Hillel

Due to what I see as a terrible hypocrisy characterizing the current activities of UMass Hillel and much of the campus Jewish community regarding the upcoming visit of Minister Louis Farrakhan, I hereby resign from the Black/ Jewish Relations Committee at Hillel. Furthermore, I am severing all existing ties with and support for the Jewish community.

Although the response of the Jewish community to Minister Farrakhan's visit has been "severe and soon," their response to the bloody massacre that took place in the West Bank last week has been "slow and silent."

On March 1, I attended my last meeting of the Black/Jewish Relations Committee where I expressed my concern regarding their handling of Farrakhan's visit. Despite their hands-off approach to an open dialogue about Minister Farrakhan, backed by their claim that the issue would be addressed by a separate committee called "The Farrakhan Committee," I was appalled to find that most of the members of the so-called Black/Jewish Relations Committee were also active participants in the "Farrakhan Committee," and have not been in active contact with the Black community on this issue.

I attended the "Farrakhan Committee" meeting with a member of the Black Agenda group which is sponsoring Minister Farrakhan's visit. At this meeting we voiced our concern about the planned protest and other activities condemning Minister Farrakhan.

We also unequivocally stated that iHillel and their allies can no longer enjoy the luxury of Black support while we witnessed, with our own eyes, violent attacks against Farrakhan and anyone, Black or Jewish, who did not support Hillel in its crusade. At that time, I stated that I could no longer be a party to their activities.

Last month I publicly defended the President of iHillel, Alan Weinfeld, following his dismissal from the Student Senate. However, at that meeting I witnessed Mr. Weinfeld's and Hillel's total lack of respect for anyone who disagreed with them, no matter their history of support and cooperation.

My decision to defend Mr. Weinfeld was based on principles of reconciliation and forgiveness that I have yet to see from him. His behavior, and that of his colleagues, makes it impossible for me to continue to extend support to either Mr. Weinfeld or Hillel.

I have learned a valuable lesson from this experience, namely that, despite the appearance of goodwill from the Jewish community towards Blacks, their handling of the Louis Farrakhan issue has proven that there was never any genuine goodwill, care or concern from the Jewish community for Blacks.

The fact remains that there never has been a real Black/Jewish alliance but, rather, a relationship of control and coercion to benefit the interests of one group over the other.

I did, at one point in time, express concern that Minister Farrakhan's visit could divide the campus. Due to the division that has arisen so far, one could claim strong evidence to support my initial concern.

However, after a careful analysis of this entire affair, I now know that Farrakhan has not divided this campus. He has simply uncovered and brought to the surface divisions and realities that extend back far beyond his own time on this earth.

Ultimately, we must take full responsibility for how we relate to each other as human beings and resist the temptation to make others scapegoats to cover our own guilt.

Speak out on Farrakhan

Minister Louis Farrakhan will be speaking on the University of Massachusetts campus on March 9. Farrakhan, his senior aide Khallid Abdul Muhammed, and the Nation of Islam have been the subject of intense media scrutiny over the past several weeks.

As the date for Farrakhan's visit nears, the spotlight will be on the UMass community to see how we will prepare for and react to the presence of such a controversial speaker on our campus.

What do you think of Farrakhan? Members of the University community are encouraged to make their voices heard by writing a brief letter to the editor. Send submissions to the Opinion editor, 113 Campus Center Basement, UMass.

Remembering the California quake

During intersession, I was back in Los Angeles at my parents' house. A friend of mine from UMass was visiting me and the first night he was there your typical small earthquake shook the house. "See," I told Bjorn, "earthquakes are no big deal."

Growing up in L.A. (Santa Monica, to be exact) I had grown accustomed to earthquakes. I even liked them. They were exciting, fun in a terrifying way. Kind of like a roller coaster. I used to love when an earthquake would occur when relatives were visiting. They'd get all scared while I'd sit calmly and say as nonchalantly as possible, "Oh yeah, that was an earthquake." The last major earthquake to affect the L.A. area was in 1971, so I had no first-hand knowledge of the force and destructive power an earthquake can possess. That would change at 4:31 a.m. on Jan. 17.

I awoke quickly when my second-story bedroom started to rumble. As the shaking intensified, I instinctively sprang from my bed to under the doorway (as you're taught in school). I stood there, eyes wide open, disoriented since I wasn't quite awake, and watched my old bedroom that I'd grown up in take on an evil life of its own.

"This is the real thing," I was thinking. And then it was over. Easily the longest 30 seconds of my life.

Alex Kennedy

The lamp next to my bed fell on my pillow. Another lamp fell from my desk and shattered. Books, boxes and old elementary school art projects crashed to the ground. From throughout the rest of the house I heard glass breaking. Worst of all was the deafening sound of the entire house bucking and cracking, trying to resist the earthquake's intent to destroy. "This is the real thing," I was thinking. And then it was over. Easily the longest 30 seconds of my life.

Major earthquakes are like bad dreams and for an instant after this major earthquake I wondered whether I was indeed having a nightmare. Then the door of the bedroom next to mine opened and Bjorn stuck his head out. He didn't say anything but his eyes were as wide as mine so I realized that either we'd had the same bad dream or a serious earthquake had just occurred. My dad yelled to us, "Put on your shoes, put on your shoes!" Without electricity, I fumbled in the darkness for my shoes and somehow found a flashlight. I made my way downstairs to survey the damage.

As I moved from room to room I cursed. Not the kind of cursing done in anger, but cursing out of awe at what I saw. Vases, bowls, and glass picture frames all fallen and shattered. Our big color T.V. had taken a nosedive from its shelf and was a total loss. The old, heavy piano that I had never seen moved from that corner in the dining room had jumped two feet. To use a cliche, it looked like a bomb had gone off in the bedroom.

We went outside to see how the house had held up and discovered the top third of our chimney had collapsed. Ugly, menacing cracks splintered out from the corners of windows. We were 15 miles from the epicenter. We had electricity later that day along with water, gas, and a house that was a least safe to live in. A lot of people were not so lucky.

The moral of my story is this; don't take earthquakes lightly because they can do bad things, man, bad things. And this wasn't even the Big One.

LBGA issues statement on Farrakhan visit

To the editor:

As many of you already know, the Minister Louis Farrakhan will be coming to the Fine Arts Center on March 9 to address the UMass campus community.

Consistent with our history, the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance (LBGA) is compelled to publicly register its reservations concerning remarks attributed to Minister Farrakhan and his aides in the recent and not-so-recent past. His remarks relevant to the gay, lesbian, bisexual community, the Jewish community and others has been a cause of great concern within our community.

We would hope that his message has changed, but at the same time we recognize the validity of Minister Farrakhan's message of empowerment to the black community. We also strongly support anyone's First Amendment right to freedom of speech and expression.

The LBGA would like to encourage anyone who has not heard the Minister speak to attend his address. We would also like to call for a public dialogue aimed at empowering all students to combat ignorance, bigotry and fear wherever it may lie.

The Minister Louis Farrakhan has been accused of practicing hate speech by some, defended as a man who tells the truth by others. What we can say for sure is that there is no better place than a diverse college campus such as ours for the Minister to speak.

Furthermore, we would like to express our support for the ALANA community's efforts to bring up a diaspora of black voices.

A Good look behind the scenes

From casting to costumes, why Our Country's Good, is.

By TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

The curtain warmer dims, the orchestra music fades, and the curtain slowly rises. Something inside you quickens. You nervously clutch your already sweaty program and lean forward — you are anxious.

You know that when the curtain fully rises something is waiting for you on the other side. Beyond the footlights and orchestra pit lies another world; a place to explore with new people and different situations. It is the magic of the theater.

Yet, how is this magic made? Who makes it all come together? It is very rare that we receive these answers or even ask the questions after being dazzled by a spectacular performance. Here is your chance to go behind the stage and see how it all comes together. The UMass Theater Department was willing to give the Collegian a look behind the scenes of Our Country's Good, a play based upon a historical penal colony in Australia by Timberlake Wertenbaker, to see the unseen and realize a play isn't just about acting.

We begin at the top with Sabrina Hamilton, the play's director whose first step was to choose the script. A Hampshire College Theater Professor and professional actor, Hamilton wanted a script for her master thesis that would hit people at all levels. She searched for the script that would send a message to its audience.

"Things you have to take into consideration while choosing a play is who is the audience and what type of actors are available," said Hamilton. "The first thing I ruled out was students playing the roles of parents. That eliminated a lot of scripts right off."

Hamilton decided on Our Country's Good because it was play about real people, politics and multiculturalism. She then began running through designs for the production as early as the summer — before the play even had a cast or crew.

"A play should have a purpose, some kind of message. And so all the designs, set, lights, costumes, should work together to get that message across," Hamilton explained. "This play is a piece of history. My dramaturg, Andrew Hermann, and I did a lot of research to make this play credible. That research involved looking up original members of the penal colony and reading their journal entries. Books about Australia, 18th century London life, and even scaled maps of the prison ships were all compiled and researched not only by Hamilton, but eventually by the actors, set designers and costume crew."

Auditions for the play also took a lot of time. More than 100 people tried out for 12 parts.

"Picking the right people for the roles was difficult because there is a lot of double casting. For instance, Alan [White] plays three different characters: an Aborigine, colored servant and racist solider. I thought it would make a real impact to have a actor play characters that were such opposites and often conflicting."

Christmas break followed soon after the actors were picked and Hamilton insisted that the cast do three things: know their lines, research their character, and work on their accents.

"I didn't want people just to know accents," said Hamilton. "I wanted them to be able to recognize them as well. One exercise I did was play three recorded accents and then have one of the actors try to copy it. I also wanted people to know, not just understand, who their characters were." Other exercises that helped the cast develop their roles were trips to historical South Deerfield, improvisational sketches, and a reading of the play in the play.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

"It's recreating history with a twist. There is always the idea of the theater. The bare walls, the lights, seeing people changing in the wings, it is imagination and technical stuff all mixed."

Hamilton was very pleased not only with the play, but with the actors as well. She deplores any type of actor ego and believes that the exercises and research the cast did promoted a sense of unity among the cast.

"My role [as a director] ends as the audience shows up. we almost breath in rhythm when I watch the show with them. I don't worry about the actors...I trust them. They know what to do." Hamilton also credits the play's success to her stage manager, Catherine Bloch, who she describes as a "conductor to an orchestra."

Part of Hamilton's crew included Miguel Romero, the set designer. The play involved over 22 scenes. Romero took excerpts from the play and each scene to create a storyboard. From that board he was able to pick up select moments and instances in the play that later influenced the whole set design.

"Scenes are something you do or draw," said Romero. "It's not literal, verbal...but three dimensional. You see it apart from the page and it transforms in your imagination from the page to the stage."

Like Hamilton, Romero did a lot of his own research into the play. He took pictures from magazines and books to get the basic level of the play, and paintings from landscape artist Sidney Nolan helped give him a sense of space and activity within that space. He also used excerpts from the script to get a feel for what the landscape must have been like to these settlers.

The Aborigine was a character that Romero drew the most inspiration from.

"His poetic observations of how he perceives his place in nature with respect to how the Europeans did was very important. His lines were minimal, however to me it said so much. It was where I found my handle to the play."

The set took three weeks to build. Scale models and drafts were made. He choose scenery materials that would also symbolize the struggle it took to survive in such a harsh environment.

Romero has worked not only with operas, plays and ballets, but with film as well. He was assistant set designer for GoodFellas, Married to the Mob and New York Stories.

"I prefer epic theater. It's all encompassing with music, movement, and it's non-naturalistic. It can be opera and ballet; it can't be "realistic" theater, such as a curtain opening to a living room set. But in my profession you can never say no because you never know where your career might lead you."

Costume Design is another prominent factor when putting on a production. Ulises Alcala, head of costume designing, explained what he wanted after reading the script.

"Certain words really struck me: brittle, burnt out, worn away. I didn't want to create a world that was comfortable or pretty, but rather harsh and hot." Alcala, like Hamilton did a lot of background research into the character of the play.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

The prison ships that the convicts were transported on were so dank and crowded that the clothing literally rotted off the prisoner's bodies. Alcala used the image of these prisoners dressed in rags and burlap to create his costumes.

"Every costume here is made up except for the red and blue coats. They were rented and unfortunately in perfect condition." Alcala solved the problem by spraying the coats with hair coloring to give them a grubby look. He also tried to realistically create clothing that looked faded by he sun. Because of the double casting, Alcala not only had to make the clothes authentic, but also easy to change in and out of.

"We have to improvise here — cheat. Velcro was one thing we used to make a costume look intricate, but in reality it's just one piece."

Aside from doing the costumes for Our Country's Good Alcala is also working on two other shows, "it's always busy around here," he said shrugging, "It seems like I never leave."

Another important piece of a theater production is perhaps the most over looked part — lighting. Lori Dawson, the lighting designer, often questions theater critics.

"You hear them discuss the set, the actors, costumes, yet they never mention the lighting," said Dawson. "I think it's because we all take lighting for granted. Critics forget that without the lights you couldn't see the set of actors."

Contrary to popular belief, lighting isn't just the spotlight. It's language. Things like color, intensity, movement and angles all set the mood for the performance.

"Lighting can punctate lines," explained Dawson. "Blackouts at the end of line can give it impact."

Often, lighting designers have to take into consideration the tempo of the play. Our Country's Good was quick- paced, and fades and blackouts had to move with the action. A slow fade could ultimately throw off the whole mood of a scene.

Dawson also explained the need for actors to stay to their blocking. The 230 lights are so accurately set up that if an actor goes out of a spotlight or crosses the stage a different way, the whole effect of the light is ruined.

Dawson liked working with her crew and talked about the benefits of an experienced and unexperienced one.

"It is easier to design with people who know what your talking about, but then again I love to teach and by working with an undergraduate crew I get to do that. I constantly learn from my crew as well."

To Lori Dawson, light designing goes beyond angles and gels. "It's about compromising, too. You may have a great idea, but you can't do it because you don't have the equipment or whatever. But no matter what, you have to have a strong opinion about the play to develop an effective design. So many people don't know what they want to do and how they feel about the production, that it really shows when it all comes together."

When asked why she likes the theater, Dawson captured the universal feeling of the whole processes. "I like theater because there is always that chance that something will go wrong and a lot can, but that's what makes it theater."

Dead-Head strumming of Panic is on the way

Widespread Panic will bring their neo-hippie tunes to Pearl Street on March 7.

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

Hard to believe, but south of the Mason-Dixon line (and in much of Vermont), there is a prospering music culture quite alien to Western Mass. Call it neo-hippie, pseudo-'60s, Dead-Head, earthy-crunchy, call it what you will, it is big news with a large chunk of American college students. It is a musical movement which has birthed a following for a number of musically polished, jam-oriented bands.

Georgia's Widespread Panic keeps trucking down this successful road, playing one college town after another; well-received and critically praised. Technically Panic could be labelled Southern-rock, but only based on their location. Their music far more resembles the rhythmic harmonizing of the Grateful Dead than it does the slap-happy guitar power of Lynard Skynard.

But a Dead analogy does not imply Widespread Panic is stuck in the '60s (though there is a loyal cian of "Spread-heads"), quite the contrary. Their 1987 debut Space Wrangler explored a funky blend of mostly light-hearted grooves and one instrumental gem called "Take Out." Widespread Panic, the second release proved a more serious but still jovial approach which led to 1993's Everyday.

Everyday is Panic's most complete package yet as tracks like "Hatfield" thrive on John Bell's raspy and upbeat vocals layered over a jangly and spirited twin-guitar approach. This approach is taken to the stage over 200 times a year and only gets better with time.

Spreadheads unite at Pearl Street on March 7 with opening band yet!. Call 584-7771 for more info.

Euro-club is in the house

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

The Five College European Club will be in the house Friday night, along with an anticipated 1000 students for Eurohouse VII. This internationally-inspired event will transform the Student Union Ballroom into a club-like dance haven, blasting the likes of house, techno and trance music via jam master D.J. Tassos.

Eurohouse VII has grown from a 200-person dance that first graced the tenth floor of the Campus Center approximately one year ago to a buzzing social event that fills the SUB with hundreds more each time it is held. Sponsored by the Five College European Club, the event aims to promote cultural awareness as well a good time.

"There is a large European/international community on campus," said Dimos Silvestriadis, the founder and president of the Five College European Club. "The European students are used to [listening and dancing to] trance, house and techno music which the local bars do not play."

Silvestriadis explained that part of the goal of Eurohouse is to create an atmosphere which provides a "different way of entertainment to American students and students of other cultures."

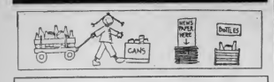
Students of all backgrounds are encouraged to attend this dance party, the turnout for which is typically "an impressively diverse group of people," according to Silvestriadis.

"Initially we had mostly European and international students [attend], but as we move with more and more parties, we see more and more Americans and other diverse groups of people," said Silvestriadis.

The Five College European Club was founded by Silvestriadis in January of 1991. The fifth-year, economics/management major created the club "to provide an opportunity for the Five College community to learn, examine and enjoy the different cultural and educational subjects of the ancient and modern European civilizations."

The organization has brought speakers from all over the world to lecture on campus. Guest lectures who have spoken at UMass include Consul Generals from countries such as Germany and Japan, the former Minister of Education of Greece, Presidents of international companies, professors and the Managing Editors of "Lets Go" Travel Guides.

Silvestriades invites the entire Five College community to come down and boogie at Eurohouse VII, and asserts that those who do attend "should expect to dance until they melt."



Tickets for Eurohouse are $5/person, and available through Tix Unlimited or on the Campus Center concourse. Doors open at 9 p.m., cash bar open all night. Call 545- 3875 for more information.

Maddening uncertainty boosts Good

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

Our Country's Good, currently at the Rand, is not the most entertaining play produced by the Theatre Department. The humor is not as funny, nor the drama as dramatic, as most of their past offerings. But Our Country's Good has another quality — one which, in many ways, makes its memory loom larger than that of more traditional shows. It is real.

I am not referring, here, to the TV-movie tag of "based on fact" which Timberlake Wertenbaker's script bears. The sense of realism in this show comes from a script which rarely tells the audience anything, a cast of characters who are sketchy enough to be unknowable but motivated enough to be believable, and a group of actors gifted enough to pull the whole thing together.

Set around Botany Bay in 1788, Good is the story of an English-run penal colony which copes with hopelessness through theatre. But despite the narrative emphasis on stage craft, the play is not the thing — it serves merely as a playwright's device for bringing together a fascinating group of people.

Liz Morden (Toks Olagundoye) is the most explosive member of the thespian band, a lifelong thief whose will to live has been corroded by her own causlicity — a characteristic which has left her as an outcast even within the confines of the colony. Her performance in the prison show is a strained attempt to break free from years of spiritual death.

It is a death which most players seem to share.

Mary Brenham (Laurie Ciarametaro) is a spindly, insubstantial wisp of shyness, betrayed by an early love, who stares helplessly from bushbaby eyes as her whorish actions contradict her ideals. Ketch Freeman (Bill Ross) is an amiable bundle of twitches and half-smiles, saddled with the unwelcome job of hangman.

But by far the most fascinating plot thread (and perhaps the most intriguingly underdeveloped) involves the love affair between Midshipman Harry Brewer, a jailer, and Duckling Smith, a convict. Desperately, obsessively in love with Duckling, Harry has saved her from public execution to bring her to the colony. He has also executed her former lover.

As played by Michelle C.T. Hendrick, Duckling is a pouting, petulant, pain in the ass. Staring sullenly into the water while a lovelorn Harry takes her rowing, she has all the personal warmth of a corpse. Erik Noonan's Harry, meanwhile, is one giant tortured grin. With a face obscured by a motley beard, Noonan is like some beaten-down animal, whose grunts of affection are routinely mistaken for growling and punished with a kick.

The wonderful surprise, here, is the genuine affection which does exist between the two, and the battle they wage (alas, separately) to overcome the faults which keep them apart. Hendrick is perfect, and Noonan (a new performer to me) is just as good.

The one disappointment of the evening comes from scenic designer Miguel Romero, whose depiction of the Sydney Cove Colony is not as striking — or useful — as those I had come to expect from the Rand. Designers such as Larry Novakov-Lawlor and Fang Guo Wen could always mix beauty with functionality. Romero has only a smattering of the former, and none of the latter.

Indeed, Romero has actually assaulted the production by filling the playing area with a carpet of gravel. Every scene of the play (including one set inside a boat) is muted by the persistent crunching of loose stones, and fogged by the dust which rises from them. It's too bad: I would have liked to hear what Harry and Duckling said to each other when they went rowing.

But perhaps the difficult distance from words and feelings is what director Sabrina Hamilton intended. The slight, maddening uncertainty of the production is what makes it so effective. At no point do we come close to truly knowing the characters — except in the same abstract way that we might seem to know people we overhear arguing in a restaurant.

That voyeuristic intrigue is what this show is built on— a sense of something true and observed, but ultimately as incomplete as the lines and phrases which are swallowed by grinding gravel.

The lingering question mark of these people's lives is more constantly mesmerizing than the shadow of a gallows.

THURSDAY

THEATER — The UMass Department of Theater will present the award-winning play Our Country's Good by Timberlake Wertenbaker. Named Best New Play of the Year in London, as well as Sydney, the play is set in an eighteenth century Australian penal colony, where a young British lieutenant gathers together a group of convicts to perform a play. Our Country's Good was adapted from the book The Playmaker, written by Thomas Keneally, author of the Schindler's List. The performance will be held in the Rand Theater, UMass, at 8 p.m. Admission for the public is $5.50 and $3.50 for students and senior citizens. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511 as well as at the door.

CONCERT — Kids from Afreak will jam at the Hatch Bar tonight at 9:30 p.m. No cover charge makes this on- campus ho-down a special treat.

CONCERT — Puddy Wad will play at Michael's Billiards this evening. Michael's is located at 10 Belchertown R.d., Amherst.

SNOW — And lots of it, so bundle up and drive carefully.

FRIDAY

DANCE — Touring New England, "Dance Umbrella's Fascinating Rhythms: A Celebration of Jazz Tap" will kick off their journey at the Fine Arts Center, UMass. Featuring Broadway's Savion Glover, legendary master tap artist Jimmy Slyde, Herbin van Cayseele, as well as Boston's Josh Hilberman and Dianne Walker, New York's Drumnin' Two Deep, and a trio of jazz musicians featuring Paul Arslanian, Alan Dawson, and John Lockwood, this evening's performance should display a range of the many and unique styles within the world of jazz tap. Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $12 and half-price for Five-College students and may be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511.

Herbin Van Cayseele

CONCERT — One Eyed Jake will bring their horns and rockin' unique blend of Rhythm and Blues to the Hadley Pub at 9 p.m. The Hadley Pub is located on Rte. 9 in Hadley.

COMEDY — The devishly funny comedienne and actor Marga Gomez will perform in Bowker Auditorium, UMass. This event is sponsored by the New World Theater, the Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, and the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance. Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for UMass students and $5 for the general public.

Seagal's new film is on shaky ground

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Actor/director Steven Seagal smiles despite his recent bomb.

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

There are a few things you come to depend on in a Steven Seagal film. There's the pre-req three word title, be it Marked for Death, Above the Law, Out of Ideas, or what-have you. Second, broken limbs and disemboweled extras stack up by the dozens. Wall Street warning: watch that plate glass window stock accelerate. And of course there are the badly spun, Seagal-mauled one liners. These fall like so many stunt extras.

What you don't depend on is Seagal to reach multiple credit billing. When the screen screams "Directed by Steven Seagal", shudders ensue. As it is On Deadly Ground, Seagal's fledgling stint behind the eyepiece, that only adds more fuel to the preceding fire.

Seagal begins his film interestingly enough. Rather than have his character walk the straight-and-narrow, Seagal's Forrest Taft, a shady ex-CIA operative, is first seen under the employ of the even shadier Aegis Oil executive (first names need not apply here) Jennings, played to slippery perfection by Michael Caine. Taft excels in covering up oil fires, allowing Caine to reap profits and avoid safety inspections on a forthcoming oil Mecca.

Don't be fooled, there is a swift character transition forthcoming, as Seagal inexplicably tosses aside his villainous ascensions to champion the environmental rights of the Eskimos (presumably because one old codger calls him a Company "whore"). Think of him as the Discovery Channel's Rumbo.

After undergoing a spiritual birth into the arms of an indigenous tribe (this is obvious but... Joel Silver's Dances with Wolves), Seagal teams with Joan Chen (Heaven and Earth) to take the fight to Caine and his army of expendable "experts" culminating in the final fight at Aegis headquarters.

To his discredit, Seagal takes standard action formula and actually makes it silly, punctuating quasi-serious moments with such philosophical dribble as "I am a little mouse, hiding from the pigs, in the house of the raven." (Huh??)

His direction is no better. Though he's time with the aerials, indulging in the natural splendor of the Alaskan frontier, the film all but crawls when interrupted by anything resembling character interaction. Moreover, his interior shots are so dark, that it becomes a chore cataloging who's fighting who (Is that Seagal in open-fist stance or the barmaid?)

Ground tempts self-importance by straining to be that rare of rarities, a socially-conscious action film. Sure buildings and bodyparts go the way of the dodo, but if there's a message behind it, maybe those "anti-violence in the media" Senate vultures will pick on lesser carrion. The tacked on ten-minute soliloquy on the dangers of pollution is paved with good intentions, but when Seagal has just spent ninety minutes decimating the environment, those intentions become a little dubious.

Seagal chooses Big Business, specifically oil execs, as his villains. That's fine, but his message is in favor of preventing chemical corruption of the environment, why does he set out to foil the baddies by blowing their crude oil lairs skyhigh, thereby leaking millions of gallons of petroleum into the surrounding Alaskan tundra? Clubbing a few seals couldn't have been more banal.

Though Seagal's heart is in the right place, his head (as well as lethal fists and feet) are misplaced. By flanking his message with bombastic (and boring) violence, his efforts become self defeating. Not to worry. On Deadly Ground shouldn't be Out for Long. D

For two ex–UMass students, the Grammys brought success

COURTESY DEWEY NICKS

UMass grad Natalie Cole won a Grammy for Best Jazz Vocal Performance.

By MICHAEL MACLEAN
Collegian Correspondent

The 36th Annual Grammy Awards turned out to be an extremely good night for UMass students as Natalie Cole and Ismael Butler, now known as Butterfly. Both artists received Grammys for their contributions to the music industry over the past year.

Natalie Cole, who graduated with a degree in psychology in 1972, and who was also honored with an honorary doctor of fine arts degree last spring, won the Grammy for Best Jazz Vocal Performance. The album, entitled Take A Look, is a collection of jazz standards that were originally ingrained into jazz history by the likes of Nancy Wilson, Ella Fitzgerald and Billie Holiday.

The rap group Digable Planets first achieved critical acclaim last year with their unique blending of hip-hop beats and jazz, and received the Grammy for Best Rap Performance By a Group or Duo for the song "The Rebirth of Slick" from the album Reachin' (a new refutation of time and space)." Butterfly was a student and guard on the UMass basketball team for two years, from the fall of 1987 to the spring of 1989.

Taj Mahal is another former student who received recognition in the past year for musical excellence. Mahal was nominated for a Grammy in the Best Traditional Blues album category for the album Dancing the Blues, but did not win.

Dance legend lives on in FAC

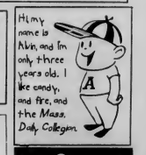
By HEATHER REDFERN
Collegian Correspondent

Martha Graham Dance Company
Fine Arts Center
March 1, 1994

The Martha Graham Dance Company, America's oldest Modern dance company, celebrated its 50th anniversary of cherished works choreographed by Graham at the Fine Arts Center Tuesday evening.

Selected pieces performed by the company dancers ranged from the optimistic dreams of a pioneer woman to the conflicting emotions of an ambivalent relationship held between two young lovers.

The dancer's intense, perfected movements were maximized to their fullest extent by powerful instrumental forces, while the use of radiant costumes and symbolic props created a world of imagination open to exploration for the audience members.



In a solo piece entitled, "Deep Song," the viewer is asked to consider the strife of oppression brought upon by the Spanish Civil War when watching a female dancer struggle desperatly to escape from underneath a wooden bench as her body contracts abruptly with each precise strike of a piano chord.

With the piece, "Ritual To The Sun," a mass of dancer's bodies filled the stage. Dressed in sleek, one piece body suites, their energetic movements reflected the warmth and power of the sun. During the final moments of the piece, the dancers knelt upon their knees and raised their hands to the sky praising the sun's existence.

Cited by the 1981 Samual H. Scripps American Festival Dance Award as the "Most American of Artists, whose genius is synonymous with Modern dance...a supreme innovator," it is no wonder why Graham's legend continues to carry on and delight the hearts of so many as it did in its most recent performance.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
North American Van Lines is now accepting applications from college students and staff for its Summer Fleet Program.
Summer is the busy season in the moving industry, and we need your help to handle the load. We will teach you to safely operate an 18-wheel rig and load household goods cargo - at no cost. We pay your room and board while you're in training. Once you receive your Commercial Driver's License, we'll pay you $425 per week, plus $125 per week living expenses, plus bonus.
To qualify, you must be 21 years old, have a good driving record, and be available for training in May (the end of April would be even better!)
Take a break from the classroom, and make the most of your summer with North American Van Lines. We'll promise you an adventure you'll never forget.

Ride offers bird's eye view

The rumors of escaped criminals, and covert military operations notwithstanding, the helicopter phenomena which has gripped the campus over the past two days is simply a Marine recruitment operation.

The whirly-bird was brought in to introduce a program, somewhat similar to an ROTC program, open to university students.

The program is somewhat of an internship, yet much more than the average college internship. It offers freshman to senior males, and junior and senior females a 10-week, paid summer program which can lead to a future in the military.

According to Captain Blazis, the officer in charge of the program, students who have good vision, are physically fit, and academically capable, may complete the program and be admitted into an Aviation program.

The helicopter angle was sponsored by the Minority Engineer Program whose members, along with other students who signed up were given a bird's eye view of the campus.

"It gives students the opportunity to go one on one with a pilot and ask questions," Blazis said. The idea being that such an experience would spark interest in the program.

(Any students interested in the summer program may contact Blazis at 1–800–255–8762.)

Bosnia was stranded in Zenica, and it may take two or three days before permits are approved by the Serbs to proceed through a half-mile of Serb territory past the last Croat checkpoint at Brankovici, Janowski said.

Some 19,000 refugees in Maglaj have been under siege most of the past year. The town depends almost entirely on airdropped aid, which is risky to retrieve from combat zones and often does not reach intended recipients.

Bosnian radio said Serbs fired 300 tank, howitzer and mortar rounds at Maglaj early Wednesday, and at least two people had been killed the previous 24 hours. The United Nations could not confirm details of the attack.

Serbs also stepped up their offensive against Bihac in Bosnia's northwest corner, where Serbs support a small Muslim faction that has declared autonomy from the Sarajevo government.

Fighting was reported on the Muslim-Serb frontline northeast of Bihac, particularly in the village of Spahici, said Capt. Oliver Barnay, a spokesman for the U.N. French battalion in the pocket. Bosnian Serb forces seemed to be gaining the upper hand, he said, but he could not confirm Bosnian radio reports of heavy casualties.

The offensives against Maglaj and Bihac contrast starkly to the Sarajevo truce and to Tuesday's agreement by Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic to allow the re-opening of an airport at Tuzla in northern Bosnia for U.N. aid flights.

president."

Raphaely said she has consistently heard complaints about Food Services. She said as president, she will look into the possibility of the "credit card system." She instead of having a meal plan, students would have a pool of money that they could use whenever they want and on the specific foods they want.

Raphaely also said she will encourage SGA senators to be more accountable to students by polling their constituents and by sending them to leadership workshops.

Raphaely said her experience from being a senator for two and a half years and her experience in working with the current SGA president makes her the best equipped candidate for president.

"I would never have considered running for the office of the presidency without sufficient experience," Raphaely said.

"I understand what this job needs more than any other candidate," she said. "I am the candidate with the most job- related experience."

the human eye."

Surah (chapter) 30:22 of the Qur'an contains the passage, "And among His Signs ... are variations in your languages and your colours; verily in that are Signs for those who know."

"That's a very different concept than the concept here in the Nation of Islam," Abdul-Kareem said.

Abdul-Kareem stated, however, that the Nation of Islam did do some positive things for African Americans, inspiring in its members decency, dignity and community.

In a question and answer period following the lecture, Muslim members of the audience were at times emotional in expressing their feelings towards the Nation of Islam.

"The Nation of Islam is no different than the KKK," said Salah El-Din.

In response to the associations the Nation of Islam makes with mainstream Islam, Daa'iyah Abdul-Rahim exclaimed, "There are outright lies going on!"

Abdul–Kareem explained that her main concern was that people might be confused about what the religion of Islam is all about, and that this confusion is further propagated by Nation of Islam literature that contain titles like "The Muslim Program: What the Muslims Believe," found in Farrakhan's periodical the Final Call.

Abdul–Kareem said the statements of belief contained in that publication "can be a little bit deceptive" in their seeming similarity to mainstream Islam. She said when the Nation of Islam speaks of belief in the One God, "they're talking about a man [W.D. Fard]."

Fard, also known as Wallace Fard, Wali Fard and W. Fard Muhammad, founded the Nation of Islam in 1930. According to a statement of belief printed in every issue of the Final Call, Fard was God in the flesh, "the long–awaited 'Messiah' of the Christians and the 'Mahdi' of the Muslims."

Zameer Afzal and Husnain Zakaria, both of Pakistan, commended Abdul–Kareem's discussion of what she described as an "American phenomenon."

"I didn't know anything about this Farrakhan before I came here," said Zakaria, the president of the Muslim Students Association.

Abdul–Kareem elicited nods of agreement from non– Muslims, as she described the basic beliefs of Islam, and asserted, "This is not new to you, you've heard this before."

Abdul–Kareem left her audience with a "responsibility as people seeking knowledge."

"Question, read, don't believe everything you hear."

Your Horoscope
By Joann Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Lighten your work load if you can. Job prospects look good. A vacation gives you some thing to look forward to. Be more assertive at social affairs.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Nothing is more important than your health. Seek professional help if unable to kick a bad habit on your own. Welcome any assistance offered by family and friends.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Harmony and enthusiasm mark a work scene. Be willing to try a new approach in job- related matters. Spending more time on at-home activities will please mate.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): The creative drive is strong, along with a romantic urge. Behind the scenes contacts may be able to supply you with inside information. Bills require earned funding. Devote more time to a tot.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Take things one at a time. Clear distractions will speed on the job progress. Be specific when discussing financial matters. A streak of good luck continues. Buy tickets or subscribe to a magazine.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Other people are willing to assist you now. Joint financial ventures flourish. Big gains come through a legal settlement or awards program. Positive thinking will let you take the world by storm!

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Your sweet nature sometimes leaves you vulnerable to less scrupulous types. Beware of flatterers. Taking care of someone else's responsibilities could make them too dependent on you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Seek to be a no-holds today or you could end up with a lot of unfinished business. Discretion is essential where your love life is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): It is much healthier to look on the bright side. A forgive- and- forget attitude will make a romance last longer. Shun taxload in favor or low veggies and fresh fruit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Avoid an overbearing person who has caused you mental and physical anguish. Good fortune is linked to peace of mind. Joint decisions are favored.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): The work may be piling up. Do not blow a fuse. Co-workers will lend a hand if approached in the right way. Welcome innovative suggestions. I.L.C. helps a key relationship get back on track.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Exercise more self-control! Make sure your expenditures are less than your income. Get your priorities right at work. Boosting productivity is more important than demanding your just.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts finished its regular season with a bang last night, defeating Duquesne 92–78, heading into this weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament.

Berry jam a sweet ending

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

Never a dull moment.

The Massachusetts Minutemen capped off the 1993–94 regular season with a 92–78 victory last night over the Duquesne Dukes at the William D. Mullins Center.

There was, however, more to this contest than the final margin would indicate.

There was a victory–capping, spectacular, double–clutch two–handed reverse dunk in the closing moments by senior guard Craig Berry. It was a UMass career explanation point on Senior Night for Berry, a walk–on, who mainly helped the Minutemen with his hard work during practice.

And there was an apparent altercation between UMass junior guard Mike Williams and Minuteman assistant coach Bill Bayno. The incident seemed to have occurred during a UMass timeout which was called after a Williams turnover led to an Effram Whitehead layup, cutting what was once a ten (69–59) point Minuteman lead to five at 71–66 with 3:52 left to play in the game.

UMass Coach John Calipari said that he did not see the incident occur and that it would be dealt with accordingly. Calipari said that high emotion is one thing he knows about.

"I get emotional, so in most cases as our players can tell you, I can deal with emotion outbursts on our team," Calipari said. "All I want to make sure is when it's done, it's done."

As for the actual game, this one was won on the glass. UMass (24–6, 14–2 Atlantic 10) crashed the boards to the tune of a $1–29 advantage in the rebounding department. The Minutemen snagged a season–high 27 offensive boards.

Leading the way for UMass was junior forward Lou Roe (27 points, 15 rebounds). Roe's 10 offensive rebounds helped him get to the line a UMass record–tying 23 times. Roe hit 17 of those free throw attempts, including 10 of 12 in the second half, which allowed the Minutemen to grasp control of the game.

Up by two, 56–54, with 10:12 to go in the contest, the Minutemen expanded their lead to 67–57 with an 11–3 run that was sparked by Roe's four free throws and Marcus Camby's (13 points) two hoops in the paint.

Then after Duquesne (15–11, 8–8 A–10) creeped back to within five, UMass turned it on after the timeout and brought the lead back to a more comfortable level. Sophomore forward Donta Bright (18 points, 11 rebounds, four steals) hit 10 of his 12 free throw shots down the stretch to ensure the victory for the Minutemen who hit 36 of 50 free throw shots in the game, including 24 of 30 in the second half.

In the early going, it looked like UMass might run away with the game. A Williams jump shot from 16 feet out began an 11–0 run for the Minutemen in which UMass held the Dukes scoreless for over five minutes. A Dana Dingle second chance lay–in capped the run and gave the Minutemen a 29–15 lead.

Instead of being dead and buried, Duquesne fought back with a 5–0 run and 6–0 run, helping the Dukes stay within six, 39–33, at the halftime break.

The Dukes continued their momentum in the second half, as a Whitehead (22 points, eight rebounds, one humongous jam over Camby) trey gave Duquesne a 40–39 lead. That, however, was the only lead the Dukes enjoyed, as UMass raised its level of play a notch to come up with the victory.

Calipari said that on a whole he was satisfied with his team's performance as it now will prepare itself for the postseason: first, the A–10 tournament where UMass will look to three–peat, and then the NCAA tournament.

"That was a good win for our program," said Calipari. "And a good way for us to go into the (A–10) tournament."

The one play everyone was talking about last night was Berry's monster jam.

"As soon as I got the ball, I said 'I want to do something special,'" said Berry.

Special? Definitely. Dull? Never.

Minutemen carry on Atlantic 10 tradition

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

It is quite ironic that one of the keys to winning the first two was present for the unveiling of the third.

The first two Atlantic 10 Championship banners for the University of Massachusetts, that is, that hang high in the rafters above the parquet of the William D. Mullins Center. The key, you ask?

None other than former Minuteman captain Harper Williams, who was in attendance last night and witnessed the raising of another banner before No. 11 Massachusetts' 92–78 victory over Duquesne in the regular season finale for both teams, which represented the third–straight A–10 regular season championship for the Minutemen.

"It feels good to come back and see my team still doing well," said Williams. "Hopefully they'll be putting up another banner real soon."

Yet Williams wasn't the leader of this Massachusetts squad which accomplished the unprecedented feat; it was his predecessor, junior Lou Roe, who put on a Williams–esque performance in the paint last evening, scoring 27 points and snaring 15 rebounds (10 offensive).

Massachusetts Coach John Calipari dubbed Williams a warrior for his tenacious play on the court; Roe's tenacity allowed him to tie a school record for free throw attempts. By stepping to the free throw line 23 times, Roe earned the right to have his name etched along side NBA Hall–of– Famer Julius Erving in the UMass record books. However, when Erving notched his record exactly 24 years ago yesterday, he hit 19 of his, while Roe sank 17.

When Williams and Tony Barbee finished their careers off in Amherst last season, Roe was pointed to as the next leader of the Minutemen. Now, after the 1993–94 regular season campaign, this year's squad has done what Williams and Barbee's did before it.

As far as Williams is concerned, Roe picked up where Williams left off as the cornerstone of Massachusetts basketball.

"Lou's filled the role very, very well. Even last year, he always played hard, concentrated on the game of basketball," said Williams.

"It's Derek [Kellogg] and Mike Williams' team, too, and we feel pretty good that we are the first team ever to three– peat in the A–10," said Roe, who played 34 minutes and outshined another A–10 Player of the Year candidate, Duquesne's Derrick Alston (11 points, 16 below his league– leading average of 21.6).

Williams is playing professional ball in Spain, averaging 20 points and nine rebounds overseas as a small forward. He was able to come back to the United States for this week because the league is on a two–week hiatus for the European Cup.

"They have a whole lot of talent. They're the type of team that Coach Cal coaches; very similar to the two teams I played on, but with a world of talent," said Williams, who has been able to keep up with the Minutemen this year because of their appearances on television.

"We want to accomplish another goal on Thursday of next week. Hopefully, we can get it[the championship game] back here to Amherst," said Roe.

If Roe's Minutemen do get to play in the Mullins Center next Thursday night for the A–10 tournament crown, they will be shooting for another accomplishment that Williams' Minutemen met two times before.

Player of the Game

Lou Roe, a 6–foot–8 forward from Atlantic City, N.J., dominated the Dukes in the paint, scoring 27 points and grabbing 15 rebounds, 10 of those off the offensive glass. He tied a school record with 23 free–throw attempts. Once again, the junior co–captain proved the Mullins Center is, indeed, Death Roe, making Duquesne the 18th victim to fall on the year–old home court.

Why Massachusetts won

The Minutemen dominated the paint and the glass. Massachusetts outscored Duquesne 64–48 inside and outrebounded the Dukes 51–29, riding the double–double efforts of Roe and Donta Bright (18 points, 11 rebounds) to the victory.

Massachusetts next takes the court Sunday night at the Palestra in Philadelphia against the winner of Saturday night's opening–round game between St. Bonaventure–St. Joseph's.

The Massachusetts Minutemen, the first team to win three–straight Atlantic 10 men's basketball regular season titles, will once again be the top seed at the 18th annual Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship begins on Saturday, March 5, at the Palestra in Philadelphia.

Temple is seeded second for the championship, George Washington is the third seed, West Virginia is seeded fourth, Duquesne is fifth, Rhode Island is the sixth seed, Rutgers is seeded seventh, St. Joseph's is the eighth seed and St. Bonaventure is seeded ninth.

George Washington, West Virginia and Duquesne ended the season tied for third with identical 8–8 records and split all head–to–head matchups. The Colonials earned the third seed by virtue of their win over no. one Massachusetts, while the Mountaineers laid claim to the fourth seed with their season sweep of no. two Temple.

NHL 'Dream Team' in '98?

BETWEEN THE PIPES
Mike DiLorenzo on the NHL

When the United States Olympic Hockey Team won only one game in the opening round, "they got off to a slow start." When they bowed to Finland in the medal round, they were beaten "by a more seasoned team." But when they finished a worst–ever eighth, with consolation losses to the Czech Republic and Germany, it became apparent that it is time to consider major restructuring of the Olympic Hockey Program, one that has not won a medal since the Miracle on Ice of 1980.

Consensus is that it was a team loaded with offensive talent and speed, but one which lacked the grit to win close games. A key difference between the United States and other squads was experience; the United States had the youngest team in the tournament.

To remedy this, the NHL is considering sending the equivalent of "Dream Teams" to the '98 Games in Japan, allowing professional stars to seek Olympic gold. There is mixed sentiment throughout the league especially considering it would have to shut down for two weeks in February.

Regardless, something must be done to ensure that each country's best players are in Japan. The United States and Canada have been rather arrogant in keeping their best off Olympic squads; consequently, teams like the former Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia have been able to dominate international play.

News Flash!: The collegians can't cut it. The NBA realized this and re–established, rather arrogantly, U.S. dominance in the sport. In hockey, however, even the United States' best isn't guaranteed of a medal, so how can the collegians be expected to compete?

Sending the NHLers is clearly the answer for many reasons: The talent is better. It's as simple as the difference between Pat LaFontaine and Jim Campbell, between Brian Leetch and Barry Richter.

They are more experienced professionally and internationally. Sure, these Olympians played all those exhibitions on the bigger ice surface, but most of today's pros have international experience, too, whether it be World Junior, Olympic or Canada Cup.

Most importantly, all countries, from the United States to Russia, could send their top players and give the world a taste of what the game can be like at its highest form.

League brass has issued a memorandum to referees: Crack down on all of the clutching–and–grabbing. Seems the lack of offense has officials worried that low–scoring games won't pack the stands. It's my opinion that clutch–and–grab hockey should be allowed unless it directly impedes a scoring opportunity. Here's hoping they allow those tactics during the playoffs—it can be the great equlizer.

* * * * *

Does Paul Coffey remind you of Rickey Henderson? He's ultra–talented, has won individual awards and team championships, yet can't seem to stay with one team for any length of time. Abrasive personality and lack of true defensive skills are chief contributors to his travels.

* * * * *

The cheering you hear is my active rooting for San Jose and Florida to edge out L.A. and Washington, respectively, for playoff spots. Personally, the Kings don't do anything for me (Gretzky or not), and only the New Orleans Saints are a more useless playoff team than the Capitals.

* * * * *

Speaking of the Panthers, is there any other candidate for MVP besides John Vanbiesbrouck? The Detroit–native is among league leaders in goals against and save percentage and has probably been worth an extra 10–15 points for the South Floridians thus far.

Michael R. DiLorenzo is a Collegian columnist.

Say What?

"To paraphrase Winston Churchill, 'Never have so many thought they knew so much and knew so little.' We accomplished tonight exactly what we tried to do on Sunday."

Braud highlight of meet

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team honored lone senior, co–captain Jason Braud, on Tuesday night in the last home dual meet of the season. In return, Braud dazzled the crowd and his fellow gymnasts with one of the best performances of his collegiate career, helping propel the Minutemen to a 266.9–242.3 win over Southern Connecticut State.

"I couldn't have finished any better," said Braud.

Braud took first place in all of the four events that he competed in. He scored a 9.8S on floor exercise, a 9.3S on vault and a 9.4 on parallel bars to outright win first in those events. He also tied teammate Chris Funk for first on the still rings with a score of 9.35.

En route to taking gold in all the events he competed in, Braud also set a number of records. Braud managed to tie his existing school record on parallel bars, and he broke a school record he had shared for floor exercise.

A number of other UMass gymnasts had outstanding performances, including freshman Gabe Columbus. Columbus, the only Minuteman to compete in the overall competition, took first place, breaking the freshman record for overall set in 1987, by scoring 54.1 points.

Highlights of Columbus's performance include a first place on the high bar with a 9.1S, and a second place finish in the floor exercise with a 9.4. The meet marked his third time winning the overall competition, all coming at home.

Lorenzo Macaluso was also a first place finisher for UMass, winning the pommel horse with a 9.2S.

UMass has won all of their home meets to date this season. UMass coach Roy Johnson pointed to some of the reasons, including the "exciting home crowd," and competing on "our equipment." He also noted that UMass just happened to have a schedule with some of the easier teams at home meets, and would rather get some of its tougher competition in Amherst.

"Our three toughest meets are away," said Johnson. "We would have had a better shot at beating them at home."

Columbus also pointed to the crowd as a source of energy and excitement for the team.

"It's a nice home crowd," said Columbus. "People are cheering for you. It was a strong meet for us."

With the home crowd behind them against Southern Connecticut, the Minutemen won all six events in the competition, and won the meet by 24.6 points. The meet was highlighted by a spectacular performance in floor exercise by UMass. The team broke the school record in the event with 47 points, an average performance of 9.4 for the Minuteman gymnasts competing in the event.

UMass travels to Springfield for its next meet on March 6, and will bring the excitement of UMass gymnastics home March 12 when they host the ECAC Championships.

UMass shut down, winter lingers on

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Although the message on the 545–3630 phone line originally delayed classes until 11 a.m. yesterday, the message was changed later in the day to say the campus was closed.

It was the first time this semester that school was closed for the entire day. There have only been one morning delay and two evening delays so far.

Yesterday's storm was the 15th this winter. Up to 12 inches of snow came down, but weather reports say it will probably melt by the end of the weekend. The temperature is expected to reach a high of 40 degrees.

Students said they were excited to have the day off, but the sight of more snow was depressing.

"I think the storm was too hyped up. The snow makes me depressed because spring is on the way, and we don't need more of it," Joanna Ritter, a sophomore hotel, restaurant and travel administration major, said. "I can't wait to go away on spring break to get away from the snow. And hopefully when I come back, the snow will be all gone."

"I hate the snow because it makes spring football come later. It was good to have the day off to sleep, but there has been so much snow it seems like it's never going to stop," said Dan Markowski, sophomore sports management major.

Beth Miller, a sophomore apparel marketing major said, "I think the snow is abusive, but I was glad to have the day off. It would be nice if spring break were in the spring."

"I am sick of the snow. It was nice to have the day off, but it only means more work later," said Beth Beaudoin, a sophomore HRTA major.

"I loved having the day off. It gave me the day off. But I wish it would go away. But it is going to make it hard to get on the golf course," said Pete Nyttrom, a junior plant and soil science major.

Although this storm was supposed to be the worst one yet, it was just another downfall of snowflakes covering the entire campus with white and further pushing back the arrival of spring.

In Hampshire County, Rte. 141 over Mt. Tom, the local ski resort, was closed as winds out of the Northeast gusted up to 40 miles per hour.

The State House voted Wednesday to approve spending an extra $46 million to replenish state and municipal snow removal budgets.

The vote will move into the Senate and about $15 million will be allocated to cities and towns.

There have been at least a dozen major storms in the state since Jan. 4.

SGA discusses line–item

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association discussed plans to propose that the University of Massachusetts budget be changed to a line–item budget.

The proposal to change the structure of the budget came in reaction to comments made by UMass president Michael Hooker at a Faculty Senate meeting on Feb. 17.

Hooker said a three percent tuition and fee increase might be needed to offset costs from the current three percent rate of inflation, as was reported in the Campus Chronicle. Hooker said this after Chancellor David K. Scott promised the students that he would work in the state legislature for a zero percent tuition and fee increase.

"I am very disheartened that Michael Hooker does not support us on a zero percent tuition and fee increase," said Matthew Pavesi, Undergraduate Student Speaker." And I am especially disheartened that he is not going for a bigger increase than inflation in state appropriations for the five UMass colleges."

"What he is saying is that he is only going to ask for three percent from the state," Pavesi said. "That's great Mike, we are only $11 million dollars in the hole already."

The state budget for UMass–Amherst is included with the budgets for Dartmouth, Worcester, Boston and Lowell. This year, $311 million was given for the five UMass colleges. The money is not given directly to the campuses. The money goes to the president's office and to the Board of Trustees. Hooker's staff allocates it out to the campuses.

"Hooker took five percent for mission enhancement, he took some for his own initiatives, etc.," Pavesi said. "And by that time Amherst was eight million dollars in the hole when it was all said and done."

SGA wants to take Hooker out of the budget decision by changing it to a line–item budget. As a line item, the state would give money for the budget directly to Scott, who would then allocate it to different areas on campus.

"Some members of the state house don't like the fact that [Hooker] has control of their money," Pavesi said. "So if we go for a separate line item, meaning Amherst would get say $150 million, Lowell would get in share sepa–

Clinton hauls out big gun in trade war

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unable to achieve a breakthrough in his battle to open Japanese markets, President Clinton brought back to life the most feared weapon in America's trade arsenal on Thursday. By executive order, the president revived an expired provision of U.S. law known as Super 301. The president said he would put forward by Sept. 30 a target list of countries deemed to have erected the most harmful barriers to American goods and services. If negotiations fail to remove those barriers, the administration would have the power to impose punitive tariffs of up to 100 percent against exports from those nations. The amount targeted would equal the sales being lost by American producers. "This administration is committed to opening markets for high–quality goods and services produced by competitive American workers," the president said as he announced his decision. "This action will help us reach our objective - open markets that will create better jobs and increase wages at home and abroad." Administration officials denied that they were trying to start a trade war with Japan, but they said the United States would not relent in its efforts to open Japan's markets as a way of narrowing a record $59.3 billion trade imbalance between the two nations. Trade tensions were at the heart of an ABC News–Washington Post poll, released Thursday, in which 58 percent of Americans surveyed viewed U.S.–Japanese relations as not good or poor, while only 38 percent thought they were excellent or good.

A solid 78 percent said they thought Japan was an unfair trader, and two–thirds believed Japan was not serious about reducing its trade surplus. The telephone survey of 1,531 was conducted Feb. 24–27 and carried a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

The administration already has the power to initiate market–opening investigations and impose tariffs if the talks fail to produce results under the regular Section 301 of the 1974 trade act.

What Super 301 provides is a strict timetable for results. The clock will begin running March 31 with publication of an annual "National Trade Estimate Report" that provides a survey of unfair trade practices that are harming U.S. exporters around the world. From that list, the administration will by Sept. 30 designate "priority foreign country practices" that are blocking the largest amount of U.S. exports and begin a 21–day period of preliminary negotiations.

If those preliminary talks fail to produce results, the United States would initiate a formal investigation that could take up to 18 months and allow time for further negotiations.

Only if those talks proved fruitless would the United States impose sanctions. That period could stretch until March 1996 although administration officials said if the talks were going nowhere, sanctions could come much sooner.

In 1989, the United States targeted Japan, Brazil and India and reached successful agreements dealing with super computers, satellites and wood products with Japan and removal of restrictive import licenses in Brazil. Talks with India were unsuccessful. Other countries have been universal in their condemnation of the Super 301 procedures, assailing the process as unilateral bullying. "We regret that the United States made a decision to revive Super 301," Seiichi Kondo, a spokesman for the Japanese embassy, said in Washington. "We certainly hope the United States will recognize the inherent dangers" in imposing unilateral trade sanctions.

Other Japanese officials have warned about counter–retaliation on the part of Japan if the United States slaps punitive tariffs on Japanese products, a development that would spark a full–blown trade war between the world's two largest economies.

"We are not looking to start a war, but we are looking to establish some fairness," presidential press secretary Dee Dee Myers said on Mutual Radio.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said the administration had no choice but to revive Super 301 in its efforts to open Japan's markets.

The decision was made in the wake of the collapse of "framework" trade talks between the United States and Japan on Feb. 11 that marred a summit meeting between Clinton and Japanese Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa.

The president called Hosokawa to inform him personally of the decision and described the talk as a "friendly, forthright" discussion.

First lady's firm snags contracts

By RICHARD KEIL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Rose Law Firm, where Hillary Rodham Clinton used to work, has received 22 government contracts in savings and loan cases since 1989, reaping well over $1 million, according to billing records examined by The Associated Press. The S&L cleanup contracts include one involving a failed thrift now at the center of a special prosecutor's investigation into the first family's business dealings.

The law firm's work so far has yielded at least $1.27 million, the records show. And if it is paid the full amount budgeted for its remaining cases, the firm stands to make at least an additional $600,000.

The work awarded to the Little Rock firm, one of Arkansas' oldest and most prestigious, has generally involved helping regulators pursue thrift officers and others they believe responsible for S&L failures in Arkansas.

All but one of the contracts has come from the Resolution Trust Corp., the agency Congress created to take over the S&L cleanup in 1990 from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Most cases were handled by lawyers other than the firm's "Famous Four" — Mrs. Clinton, Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, the late deputy

SCERA coordinator looks for grass–roots support

If junior Mirran Raphaely is elected University of Massachusetts Student Government Association president, she says she will make it her business to empower students by working on the problems that they see as most important.

Raphaely, an SGA senator who represents commuters, said she plans to take the SGA's efforts to empower students to the next level.

"The current [SGA] administration has redefined a notion of student empowerment on campus," Raphaely said. "I've been a part of it, and I'd like to take the notion of student empowerment to new heights."

Russia says U.S. is still spying

By LARRY RYCKMAN
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Russia struck back in the spy vs. spy squabble with the West on Thursday, saying an American diplomat urged two Russian men to collect secret plans for Russia's most sophisticated battle tank.

Western arms experts expressed surprise at the news that the T–82 tank even exists; the spokesman for Russia's top spy–catching agency said Thursday's announcement was the first confirmation of its existence.

It was the latest in a flurry of charges and counter–charges by Russian and Western intelligence agencies prompted by last month's arrest of an alleged CIA mole in Washington.

Russian officials have been miffed by the hand–wringing and rhetoric from U.S. officials who angrily demanded Russia stop spying on the United States.

Thursday's announcement further supported Russia's claim that the West still spies on it, too. On Tuesday, Russia disclosed it had charged a Russian defense industry executive with spying for Britain.

In the past week, Russia and the United States have both ordered the expulsion of diplomats in a tit–for–tat exchange reminiscent of the Cold War.

Draft not needed for defense

By SCOTT SONNER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government could end peacetime registration for the military draft with little risk to U.S. security, the Pentagon said Thursday. President Clinton said registration should continue temporarily.

Current all-volunteer forces and a reduced global threat make draft reinstatement "highly unlikely," the Defense Department concluded in a report to Congress. "Consequently, peacetime draft registration could be suspended without irreparable damage to national security."

The Pentagon stopped short of recommending an end to the Selective Service system, saying, "We should continue draft registration while we study possible alternative uses, such as applications to national service."

President Clinton said in a letter, also made public Thursday, that the Selective Service System should remain in place until the National Security Council concludes a similar review this spring. "I concur in the secretary's recommendation that we should maintain registration while we study how to make the best use of Selective Service System capabilities and resources," Clinton wrote to Vice President Al Gore, the Senate president.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and Rep. Peter DeFazio, D-Ore., made the report and letter public. Both are longtime advocates of ending peacetime registration for the draft, saying elimination would save taxpayers as much as $29 million a year without weakening U.S. defenses.

Mexico promises reforms

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico — Rebels in southern Mexico set off for their villages today with government promises of a brighter future for Indians not only in Mexico's poorest state, but across the nation.

Government negotiators hope Indians in the state of Chiapas will agree to a draft peace settlement and end a revolt that has shaken the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party but cost Indians the most lives.

No answer was expected for at least a month from the peasants who support the rebel Zapatista National Liberation Army.

Rebel negotiators, wearing ski masks as they have in all public appearances, left San Cristobal de las Casas at sunrise aboard six four-wheel-drive vehicles. They were accompanied by Red Cross workers.

Also in the convoy was government envoy Manuel Camacho Solis and Roman Catholic Bishop Samuel Ruiz, who mediated the talks held in the town's 16th-century cathedral.

It was not known if Camacho and Ruiz would go to the rebels' villages deep in the jungle or if they were only escorting them out of town. Although 19 rebels took part in the negotiations, only 11 left town this morning. The whereabouts of the other eight was not known.

The tentative agreement announced Wednesday after 10 days of talks promises sweeping social and political change in Chiapas, where nearly one-third of the 3.2 million people are Indian. its effects also are expected to be felt nationwide because it includes a promise for reforms to make this year's presidential election more democratic. It includes a pledge to consider aid and legal reforms for Indians nationwide.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari hailed the agreement on Wednesday, and said rebel conditions "have been answered with a real desire to listen to and meet demands for justice, welfare and dignity for the indigenous peoples."

important issues. She said because of her work with SCERA, all of the candidates know that University tuition and fees have risen 167 percent since 1988.

Raphaely has been knocking on the doors of students for the past month for an average of four to five hours a night to find out what students are most concerned with. She said as president, she will continue to listen to the students' concerns.

"I feel strongly about not telling students what issues affect them but listening to them to find out what the issues are," she said. "Door–knocking doesn't end when the election ends. I will certainly vow to continue to door–knock so I can see how the students feel. I am determined to have consistent feedback from the people who elect me.

"I insist on being critiqued should there be criticism. Students should feel confident in the person they elect as president," she said.

Raphaely said she has consistently heard complaints about Food Services. She said as president, she will look into the possibility of the "credit card system." Instead of having a meal plan, she explained, students would have a pool of money that they could use whenever they want and on the specific foods they want.

Raphaely also said she will encourage SGA senators to be more accountable to students by polling their constituents and by sending them to leadership workshops.

Raphaely said her experience from being a senator for two and a half years and her experience in working with the current SGA president makes her the best equipped candidate for president.

"I would never have considered running for the office of the presidency without sufficient experience," she said. "I understand what this job needs more than any other candidate," she said. "I am the candidate with the most job- related experience."

Alexander Mikhailov, spokesman for Russia's Federal Counterintelligence Service, told The Associated Press that the American diplomat in the tank spying case was Kelli Ann Hamilton. The switchboard operator at the U.S. Embassy said there was no one there by that name. But a phone list from last spring lists a Kelli Hamilton as a second secretary at the embassy.

"We don't comment on allegations of intelligence activities," an embassy spokesman said.

Mikhailov said one of the two Russian men, 23-year-old businessman Maxim Aiyoshin, contacted Hamilton in January 1993, offering to gather secrets about the Russian tank. They met several times inside the embassy.

Aiyoshin said he wanted to work for U.S. intelligence to get $50,000 to pay his debts, Mikhailov said, adding that the man apparently was never paid by the Americans.

Israeli's grave becomes shrine

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

KIRYAT ARBA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Five grade-school boys sway back and forth as they chant a prayer for the dead. An ultra-religious Israeli in black coat and hat bends down to kiss the grave. On a table set up next to the fresh mound of earth, two jugs of orange juice and cups offer refreshment for mourners.

The burial site of Baruch Goldstein, the Jewish settler who gunned down 39 Palestinians praying in a mosque in Hebron last week, is attracting a stream of pilgrims to a muddy lot just to one side of Kiryat Arba's iron entrance gate.

"It has become a shrine," Zvi Katzover, mayor of this militant Jewish settlement outside Hebron, said Thursday.

"Everyone who comes to visit wants to see the grave of Dr. Goldstein. People appreciate what he has done. Especially the American visitors, they praise him to the high heavens."

About 10 percent of Kiryat Arba's 6,000 residents are American-born, as was Goldstein, who immigrated from New York's borough of Brooklyn 11 years ago.

Kiryat Arba is a stronghold of the extremist Kach movement, which calls for the expulsion of all Palestinians from Israeli-held territory. Goldstein, 38, was a Kach member.

As the settlement's emergency doctor, he also treated many victims of Arab violence. Doctors who knew him said Goldstein, a devoted follower of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane, hated Arabs so much that he often refused to treat injured Palestinians.

Goldstein often spoke of the unrest in the occupied lands, said a friend, David Ramati. "Basically, he believed the situation had gotten to such a point that it was no longer possible to depend on the Israeli government or anyone else to stop the loss of Jewish life," Ramati said last week.

Friends said the last push might have come from the death of one friend, Mordechai Lapid, and Lapid's son, Yisrael, in a December drive-by shooting just outside Kiryat Arba. Goldstein was the first to arrive at the bloody scene.

On Wednesday, 8-year-old Yitzhak said he was at the grave to pay his respects because Goldstein had helped him.

"Dr. Goldstein fixed my nose after I fell off a roof," Yitzhak said before being called away by other boys who scolded him for talking to a reporter.

rately, then the president's office won't control it."

Another of SGA's reasons for wanting to change the school's budget to a line item is that it feels that Hooker doesn't know what areas need money or even how much money is really needed, because he doesn't work on campus.

"[Hooker] doesn't know, he is not in touch with the campus," Pavesi said. "So he doesn't know what an individual campus needs. If he knew, I would hope he wouldn't have taken the money for mission enhancement away from us last year."

SGA feels the University would benefit from a line–item budget because the statehouse realizes that Amherst is the flagship of all the UMass campuses, according to Pavesi.

"The statehouse would know that Amherst is the flagship, the jewel of public education, the basketball team, Nobel Prize winners, etc.," Pavesi said. "They would give more money to Amherst."

White House counsel Vincent Foster and White House lawyer William Kennedy. All followed Bill Clinton to Washington.

According to the billing records, Rose lawyers have charged taxpayers between $75 per hour for junior associates' work to $140 per hour for work by senior partners.

The rates are modest when measured against billings from firms in bigger cities such as New York, where hourly fees can to $200 and higher.

The firm's most lucrative government deal came in 1989 when the FDIC hired Hubbell to represent the government in a lawsuit involving Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, a failed Arkansas thrift that has engulfed President Clinton in controversy. Rose was hired to sue Madison's former accountants for negligence. Hubbell settled the $10 million claim for $1 million; his work earned the firm some $400,000.

Throughout the Whitewater affair, the Rose firm has been under an intense spotlight.

The latest twist came this week when Hubbell acknowledged he recently was questioned by the FBI about certain billings for his work, including one involving the RTC.

Racism is being perpetuated

Next Wednesday, Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan comes to the Fine Arts Center to speak. While controversy is nothing new to Farrakhan, lately he and his group have been the focus of media and Congressional scrutiny. Last month the House and the Senate passed resolutions denouncing Nation of Islam spokesperson Khallid Abdul Muhammad's remarks as "hate-mongering." These remarks included calling Jewish people "blood suckers."

Farrakhan demoted Muhammad, yet continues to support the philosophy of hate. Farrakhan believes Whites were created for an evil purpose. Supposedly God allowed White people to exist only to torment Blacks. He believes there is a Jewish media conspiracy against him. How does he know this? Well, by their last names, of course. I can assure Mr. Farrakhan that I am neither Jewish nor a part of a conspiracy, but I still think he is a bigot and a fool.

Part of the problem in finding racial harmony is that the marketplace of ideas is too often limited to the media. Many times, leaders of various groups resort to controversy and extremism in order to make the papers and television. They make headlines, but not headway.

A. J. Stewart

This campus has a history of racial tension. One needs only to look at last year's debate on the Minuteman to see the animosity. The suggestion was part of a larger plan to improve the recognition of minorities on this campus. One idea was to name the library after W.E.B. Du Bois. This is an important step the University should take since his papers are located there.

However, debate centered on changing the logo. The Minuteman was described as glorifying white men with guns. Most people found this assertion ludicrous and it only served to distract people from addressing real minority concerns and to promote racial tension.

To me, it is unbelievable that racism thrives today. In Russia, Vladimir Zhirinovsky is a ultranationalist whose support derives largely from his flamboyant anti-Semitism. In Bosnia, Serbs have pursued a policy of ethnic cleansing. And while we can marvel at the horrors of the Holocaust in Schindler's List, we still can't cleanse our own prejudices.

Less than an hour after watching Schindler's, I heard a young person call an African–American a "jigaboo." is this the kind of world we have to look forward to? If it is, then Farrakhan is the perfect leader. But if we want to change, if we want to overcome this lingering animosity, then we have to reject all forms of hate. Not just racism toward Blacks or Whites, not just homophobia or misogyny, but hate in all of its ugly forms. I know people who will complain about racism and then call someone a "faggot." This is hypocrisy and will get us nowhere.

Part of the problem in finding racial harmony is that the marketplace of ideas is too often limited to the media. Many times, leaders of various groups resort to controversy and extremism in order to make the papers and television. They make headlines, but not headway. One of the brightest spots in the Farrakhan debate came when the local chapter of the NAACP distanced itself from Farrakhan and his agenda.

They stood up for principle, even though it wasn't necessarily popular among their members, and it didn't make a lot of waves in the media. That is what courage is all about, and it is an ingredient too many of today's leaders lack.

In the end, Farrakhan will come and lecture. He will be bet with protestors and supporters who will be screaming at each other. Will this anger and rage serve to ease understanding and encourage tolerance? Of course not, but Louis Farrakhan will leave with a fat check. And he doesn't mind selling out the cause of racial unity to get it.

UMass should lose Gen-Eds

There is a commonly–held myth that college is a place to turn us all into renaissance men and women. Higher education's purpose is to verse us all in literature, the sciences, languages, music, etc. so we might all leave here as learned scholars, right?

Maybe that was true in 1950, but in 1994 the reason why most students put their parents and themselves into debt and pay the astronomical fortune needed to attend college is to prepare themselves for a successful career. After college, we don't become scholars, we get jobs and move on to careers.

With that in mind I'd like to propose a restructuring of our general education requirements to reflect this reality.

Science: The 100–level science courses (Rocks for Jocks, Chemistry for Poets, Astronomy) are useless to science majors who are too advanced for them, and pointless for people in unrelated majors who will never make use of what they learn anyway.

Teaching basic sciences is the job of high schools to help students discover their interest in pursuing a science–related career. If a college student knows what he or she wants to pursue, there's no need take a course that will never be of use. The University should still offer these courses in case someone is either unsure of their major and might be interested, or just generally likes the subject matter. Just don't force the rest of us to take it.

Arts and Literature: Engineering is one of the most competitive and popular majors on this campus. The major requires students to take many credits to graduate. Forcing them to take courses in Shakespeare is a waste of valuable time.

Writing requirements: There are very few jobs that college prepares students for that don't require some sort of writing skills. This is a good one; don't tamper with it.

Public Speaking and Word Processing: The real world requires almost everyone to be able to make presentations and to write a document of some kind. Adding these two classes as gen–eds would benefit all students.

Math: The test to place out of Tier I math classes determines a student's grasp of basic math. But some Tier II options (i.e. linguistics), like the science requirements, can have no bearing on a students future. The "math" requirement should be something that teaches personal finance, and other practical math–related skills.

Eliminating outdated and unnecessary general education requirements will keep talented faculty from teaching their specialty to disinterested students. They will be able to devote their energy to teaching eager and interested students.

Matt Vautour

Eliminating outdated and unnecessary general education requirements will keep talented faculty from teaching their specialty to disinterested students. They will be able to devote their energy to teaching eager and interested students.

With fewer gen–ed requirements, students could take more courses in their major or take something that they are generally interested in. This would enable us to pursue another minor, or even another major. In our changing world, being prepared in two fields could make students more marketable to potential employers in tough economic period.

College life and the needs of its students are changing all the time. It is important for the University to adapt to keep up. So take the HRTA majors out of Astronomy 100 and the engineer out of Major British Writers if they don't want to be there. We're paying for this education, but instead of using our talents to the fullest, we're stuck in useless courses.

Attention SGA Candidates

Candidates for the upcoming elections for SGA President and Student Trustee should bring written statements detailing their positions on issues of concern to the University campus to the Opinion desk by 3 p.m. this afternoon.

Statements should be typed and should be no more than 500 words long. It is important that candidates who have not yet submitted their statements do so immediately so that you may be considered for an endorsement by the Collegian.

Individuals or groups wishing to endorse specific candidates should limit themselves to 200 words or less and should also bring their letters to the Collegian by 3 p.m. this afternoon. Due to space constraints, letters of endorsement may be abbreviated or excerpted.

Budget crisis getting worse

Our news editor received a tip late last night about the Curry Hicks Cage. Once the home of UMass basketball, the Cage now holds aerobics and jogging classes during the day and the occasional women's basketball or gymnastics meet at night.

"They've padlocked the bathrooms during the day because they don't want the students to use them. That way, they don't have to pay janitors to clean them," our faithful informant told the Collegian.

The more I thought about this, the more incensed I became. It didn't take long.

I'm upset because things have gotten so bad at UMass that we can't even go to the bathroom. Meanwhile, students at Harvard, MIT, etc. can get a first–rate education without worrying about wetting their pants. How is that for the division of class?

Michael Morrissey

While students here are striving harder than ever, the state government is thwarting our efforts. They refuse to cut tuition and increase funding because the Commonwealth has been on shaky financial ground since Michael Dukakis took office.

Instead, they choose to increase tuition (or fees) and either cut or keep funding at the same level. We end up carrying an extra burden as students, instead of as state taxpayers.

I'm receiving a refund this spring for the fifth straight year. My state tax is $0. I would rather pay a few dollars on my tax form than on my Bursar's Office bill if it meant being able to go to the bathroom.

The problem lies in the inherent structure of the state of Massachusetts. I feel like a broken record in reciting the root of this situation because it's been explained so many times.

Most of the legislators in the state went to private schools like Harvard, MIT, Boston College and Boston University. They wouldn't know UMass from UConn.

I've also heard that there are members of the Board of Trustees who did not graduate from public schools in Massachusetts. Hmm. How interesting. The trustees are responsible for determining how much our tuition increases.

Getting back to the legislators, they don't want to give UMass its due because that would mean giving money to people they don't know personally. That would go against the Oath of Porkbarrelling each Massachusetts legislator takes when elected to office.

"I promise to help every relative of mine by finding them a job in the public sector, whether that be in the Lottery or the State Police. I promise to posture and stall any bill that would benefit a large number of citizens in the state, such as the new Shawmut Center proposal.

"I promise, above all promises, to maintain the luster of my alma mater, Private U., by killing any proposal or bill which would help the state's public colleges and universities, unless a relative or in–law holds a high administrative position at any such college or university."

This oath is in the public records. Look it up in the tower library. Oh, I forgot...

Since the Student Government Association took over the Admissions Building, Chancellor David K. Scott has gotten behind us in asking for a minimal tuition increase. Whether or not the trustees, the legislature and the governor ease our road to graduation a little remains to be seen.

Don't hold your breath. Hold your bladder.

Our life style isn't Olympian

The Olympics were on last week and I, like many Americans, watched them with keen interest. My interest wasn't a result of the Kerrigan/Harding debate, but rather a genuine interest in athletics.

Throughout my life I have been attracted to sporting events. Since my childhood I have watched the Olympics with zeal. Regardless of what sport I was watching, I imagined myself participating out there with the best athletes in the world. I pictured myself as the last competitor, winning the gold, the American anthem playing in the background, the flag being raised, CBS showing a split screen of me crying on the podium and my winning moment.

I realize that I will never be an Olympian for many reasons. Just last week I discovered my first grey hair, smack dab in the middle of my head.

Rebecca Peterson

All right, I'm getting carried away, but I honestly couldn't wait for the day when millions of people would watch me compete in the luge, figure skating, hockey and curling. Now I'm a sophomore in college and my whimsical notions of fame and fortune as an Olympic athlete have come to an end.

I realize that I will never be an Olympian for many reasons. First, I am 18 years old, archaic by Olympic standards. Just last week I discovered my first grey hair, smack dab in the middle of my head, and it surely won't be the last.

Aside from the tragedy of aging, I have no formal training in any sport — unless you'd care to count the two years of ballet school I took when I was six. I got two years of pirouettes under my belt before they politely asked me to move on.

Lastly, and most importantly, my body is starting to feel its years. I recently added a tennis course to my already bursting schedule, so three days a week I can look forward to 50 minutes of blood, sweat and tears in the luxurious Boyden Gym.

The class began easily enough; we circled up, exchanged names and made friends. Then we stood up, looked at the walls that would be our new partners and hit the ball to them. "How hard can this be?" I thought. Twenty minutes spent chasing the elusive ball that kept finding new holes in my racket was all I could endure.

Grasping my stomach, gasping for oxygen, I staggered to the bench and collapsed. Along the bench, classmates met eyes and struck up an unspoken dialogue of exhaustion. We sat in silence while our instructor administered CPR to an unconscious student, listening to our bodies wreak revenge on our minds, cursing our mutual fate.

That night I began the long trek home, my sore muscles screaming in protest, and realized that the little girl who had dreamed of becoming an Olympian was now an out–of–shape UMass student. Unfortunately, this physical degeneration is fairly typical of college students. Campus life tends to bring out the lethargy in people.

The keg atmosphere and less–than–ideal student eating habits miraculously delete common knowledge. For example, exercise makes the heart work more productively, it increases flexibility, amplifies muscle strength, enlarges lung capacity and improves sexual function.

I am still enchanted by the Olympics and I'm sure I always will be. I'll never make it to Lillehammer, but who isn't impressed by people that have the capacity and the persistence to make a career out of exercise.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes and encourages letters to the editor. When writing, please type your letter and keep it to a maximum of 400 words. We would much rather print several concise letters in the limited space available on the page.

The Collegian Opinion page will occassionally print guest columns, but arrangements must be made in advance. If you feel you have a unique perspective on an issue of general interest, contact the Opinion page editors before you submit anything longer than a standard letter.

All letters should include a name, address and phone number (for verification purposes only). Students should also include their year and major. The Collegian reserves the right to edit submissions for grammar, clarity and length.

Send all letters to the Opinion page c/o the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass. We are located in the Campus Center Basement on the opposite end from the ATMs, and letters can be hand–delivered during normal business hours Sunday–Friday.

Arts & Living

Synth-pop nostalgia, Waiting for Winona

Public Enemy's latest album takes an aim at jazz.

Music on the cutting edge used to be so different in the mid to late eighties. Back then, the term for them wasn't alternative, but progressive, and the category consisted of a number of bands with a skewed pop–rock sense and a good deal less bluster than today's guitar–mashing stars.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Written by Shea Dubinsky & Matt Audette

The glut of noisy rock derivatives in 1994 makes me nostalgic for those bands that permeated my high school days, and signified much different, less angry times in music. Sometimes you need a good dose of The Cure's brooding rush, or Echo and The Bunnymen's lush, gliding tunes, the synth–pop dirges of Depeche Mode, and the jangle rock of earlier REM. My favorite, and arguably the best of the bunch, was New Order.

New Order crafted delicate dance rock, placing layers of percussion and synthesizer under shimmering rhythm guitar, and a forceful bass that often carried the melody all by itself. Bernard Sumner's voice creaked and talked its way through cryptic lyrics of songs with equally enigmatic titles, titles which were always added after the entire album had been recorded. Nobody has ever sounded quite like them, but their influence can be traced through bands like Jesus Jones and Ned's Atomic Dustbin. Albums such as Power, Corruption and Lies, Low–Life, and Brotherhood were steeped in gorgeous songs of lust and loss.

Unfortunately, the last few albums by New Order have abandoned the guitars for a more basic disco sound, but the three albums above remain permanent fixtures in my own personal soundtrack of life...

Rock's "angry young man," Elvis Costello is making his return to the music world on March 8, when his newest release Brutal Youth hits the stores. Costello, who had been experimenting solo for the last few years, is reteaming with his old backing band The Attractions for the first time since his classic album Blood And Chocolate. Early reviews of the album claim that it is his finest in years. If the first single "13 Steps Lead Down" is any indication of how the rest of it is, I think it is safe to say that the old Elvis we knew and loved in the '80s is back in town.

Rumor on the street is that Washington D.C.'s favorite peppy little popster band, Unrest has decided to pack it up and call it quits. The band which had recently signed to ultra–hip 4AD label, and released its finest album, Perfect Teeth was one of the shining hopes on the alternative scene. Let's hope that these allegations are unfounded, but if not, may their little souls rest in peace.

Talk about bucking the system. Record labels EMI, Sony, Warner Bros., and Polygram in conjunction with Ticketmaster are putting plans together to start a brand new 24–hour video music channel. It seems the labels are tired of dealing with MTV, who has become the reigning king of all that is within the realm of modern music, and want to give the founding father of music video a little competition. Will it work? It's unlikely, but it is nice to see someone have the guts to try.

Just what does the Academy of Arts and Sciences consider alternative? That may be a question that was on many people's minds last Tuesday night as they awarded U2 the grammy for "Best Alternative Music Album" for the luke–warm Zooropa. The band may be an excellent "rock" band, but I'm afraid they're about as alternative as Pearl Jam.

I saw Reality Bites last weekend (twice), and Winona Ryder is my rock n'roll heroine. If she would just stop dating that runaway train of a guy, Dave Pirner, she would be an official generation X deity. Oh well.

Public Enemy has a brand new album waiting in the wings to spring upon unsuspecting music listeners. It will be interesting to see where Chuck D and crew fit in amongst the slow, P–Funk jams from the west coast and the jazz fusion so prevalent here in the east. Regardless, PE are sure to bring the noise and deliver a well–needed thumping to the rap world.

Theater pokes fun at psychology

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

In the first act of Laughing Wild, the Christopher Durang comedy playing this weekend at the Southside Room, we see how two very different people struggle to cope with the world, and how a can of tuna fish brings them together.

Rachel Solomon (A Dream of Canaries) plays a woman at odds with life who has weathered years of treatment in New York insane asylums without shaking the feeling that people are out to get her. Her adult life has become a series of attacks against evils that are both real and imagined, which prevent her from doing what she wants.

One such obstacle is actor George Fearn, playing a man whom Solomon attacks in a grocery–store squabble over sale–item tuna fish.

Fearn's own mental history is more stable, yet he too is unable to face people. Immersed in a drum–beating, Robert Bly world of hollow self–affirmation, Fearn is at heart an intellectual — too smart to believe in his own positive outlook.

Fearn is particularly well attuned to the inherent unfairness of life, whether it shows itself in the form of prejudice against his homosexual lifestyle, or in the form of a crazed stranger hitting him on the head with a can of Chunk White.

The two acts of Laughing Wild are as distinctly different as its two embattled heroes. In the first, Solomon and Fearn deliver long monologues to the audience. In the second, they dream — and take the audience along with them.

"There's more of an action than a plot," explains director Corey Pearlstein. "The idea we're working off of is that these two characters have 15 minutes to get to one fundamental truth."

Pearlstein is best known in Amherst as the director of several lesser–known works by famous authors (Joe Orton's Entertaining Mr. Sloane, Woody Allen's Godl. Although Durang has received acclaim for The Actor's Nightmare and the controversial Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All For You, it was Wild which caught Pearlstein's eye — largely because of the edge to its humor.

"I get a little tired of seeing comedy where they just go for the jokes."

Laughing Wild will be presented through March 5 at 8 p.m. in the Southside Room of the Hampden Commons, Southwest. Tickets are $3 for students, $5 general admission, and are available at the door.

Frehley KISSes up to entertain the Valley

Post–Frehley KISS, also minus the infamous make–up.

By PHILIP LEVASSEUR
Collegian Staff

If one band proved to be interesting during the 1970s and 80s it was KISS. Loved by millions and despised by the catholic community, KISS changed with the times and continues to put out albums. Ace Frehley was the driving force in the band, playing guitar rhythms that inspired a whole generation of today's biggest stars, including Stone Temple Pilots, Anthrax and Skid Row.

Ace became part of the KISS line–up after answering an ad in New York's Village Voice newspaper in 1973. Known as the "Space Man" in his make–up, Frehley designed the KISS logo and wrote the songs "Cold Gin" and "Parasite" that are still performed by the band 10 years after his departure. Back In 1978, the members of KISS released four simultaneous solo albums, of which Ace Frehley was the only one to have a hit off his album with the song "New York Groove."

By the mid–'80s Ace Frehley went solo with his new band Frehley's Comet and released the three albums Frehley's Comet in 1987, Second Sighting in 1988 and Trouble Walking in 1990. He is currently rated as the world's number four guitarist by Guitar World Magazine.

At a recent New York Stone Temple Pilots show, the band came out on stage wearing the old KISS–style make–up, and were a little surprised to find out that Ace Frehley had been watching the show when he came backstage to say hello.

Besides being an accomplished guitarist, Ace Frehley also does computer generated art and animation. Recently, Ace has just finished touring Japan, the first time since his KISS era, and has returned to the states for pre–production work on his new forthcoming album. Also for Frehley, Gibson Guitars has begun creating a new line of guitar strings in his name.

Ace Frehley can be sighted at the Vertex nightclub in Hadley this Sunday, March 6. For ticket and show information call 586–4463.

Learn to get funky with Chucklehead

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

When my roommate found out that Chucklehead is playing on Saturday night at Pearl Street in Noho, she jumped around the apartment, screeching, "Oh my stars and garters, I love Chucklehead, they are so funky!"

Shrugging, I said something about making sure that somebody was going to cover the show for the Collegian.

"What," she squealed, "you've never seen Chucklehead? Are you kidding?" She went on to explain that these local funkmasters put on one of the most exuberant, fun shows around the Valley.

"You can totally rock out at their show," she said. "The best part is that everybody is going nuts, so you don't even feel like a toolbox shaking your booty around."

Contemplating the enormous amount of stress in my life as of late, I thought that this atmosphere would do me some good, and decided to go to the show.

Researching Chucklehead helped me realize that everything my roommate said about the band was on the mark.

Having been influenced by such artists as James Brown, the Red Hot Chili Peppers and George Clinton, the Boston–based band works to fulfill their ultimate goal "to make people groove," according to guitarist Eb–tide In an interview in the Sunday Cape Cod Times.

Describing their music as "nasty hip–hop funk with horns," saxophonist Huck said that most of the songs they perform deal with "sex and movin your butt."

Collegian Music Associate Brian Babineau conceded, "All of their songs are about sex." Smiling, he added, "But I like them." Babineau, who has seen the group in concert twice, also said that "their originals are groovy. They closed their last show with a nutty version of 'Wild Thing,' and the crowd was a sea of shakin' booties."

Although the eight–man band plays in the Valley frequently, many assert that their shows always promise to be a good time. As my roommate asserts, "You haven't lived until you've jammed to Chucklehead, live."

If you are in the mood to get down and boogie, Chucklehead tickets are $6 and available at the door or via Tix Unlimited or by calling 586–8686.

The Far Side — By Gary Larson

He stood there — unflinching, tail and silent as always. But as Gus soon found out, this outward calm belied the "Widowmaker's" reputation.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Avoid speculative ventures and stick to the tried-and-true. Use diplomacy when dealing with someone young and enthusiastic. A family or financial obligation could have you worried.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Your instincts or emotions could interfere with a business transaction. Keep your cool. You may have overcome someone's objections to a special plan. Be willing to pay top dollar for experts' advice.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Exercise your authority with tact and others will be more cooperative. Minor problems may crop up with co-workers or customers. An investment in property will turn out better than you dreamed possible.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Finish up old business projects before starting a new venture. Combining logical thinking with intuition will improve your vision of the future. Club activities bring great enjoyment tonight. Reach out to newcomers.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Stick with methods that have brought results in the past. Offbeat red tape could be responsible for a business delay. Authority figures could change their minds. Do not take their "no" as final.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): If trying to figure out where you and another party went wrong, talk things over in a friendly fashion. Developing your language skills and vocabulary will make you a more compelling speaker.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Follow an employer's directions to the letter. Otherwise, you could wind up in hot water. A business competitor may be unethical. Refuse to sink to the same level. Keep your standards high.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Your clients ally is only too willing to direct you to the proper authorities. Let your file proceed by its own design. Handle financial arrangements very carefully. You avoid appearing erratic if you want to land a business contract.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Give your creativity free rein when tackling a decorating project. Do not be overly concerned about what other people do. Where your family relationships are concerned, focus on giving instead of receiving. Watch Scooby Doo if you can find the time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Remain as quiet as possible, especially if you have been recovering from an illness or injury. Rest is essential. Need a sense of cookies only $5 a dozen. Ben & Jerry's $4. Milk $1.50 or free with two dozen. Ask about our new deals! Remember– Get baked with Delicious Deliveries your choice for munchies.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 19): Although behind-the- scenes activities hold a certain appeal, it would be best to stick to your principles and avoid a guilt-producing situation. Get a new I.D. Postpone signing contracts or taking out a loan.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Domestic chores and grocery shopping should be done as early as circumstances permit. Do not rebuff an associate who offers suggestions you may not overlook something if you go it alone.

Bonaventure winner.

If the Minutemen have to play the Bonnies, look for the great inside battle between St. Bonaventure's Harry Moore and UMass' Lou Roe. Both are player of the year candidates and should be ready to rock and roll.

If the Minutemen have to play the Hawks, it's game three with the series tied at one. The home crowd in the Palestra in Philly will be fired up once again. Massachusetts always seems to find a way to stir something up in the City of Brotherly Love.

No. 4 West Virginia vs. No. 5 Duquesne.

These two split in the regular season as well and both are coming in off losses. Mountaineer Pervires Greene and Duke Derrick Alston are two of the best players in the conference and should battle it out to see who takes the spotlight. Duquesne Coach John Carroll said after Wednesday night's loss that he felt his team, if it got by the quarterfinals, could win the whole tourney. WVU Coach Gale Catlett's boys from Morgantown lost to St. Joseph's last time out, but should put up a fight with their trio of talented players (Greene, Ricky Robinson and Marsalis Basey).

No. 3 George Washington vs. No. 6 Rhode Island.
